A day was appointed, a tug engaged to tow the house boat down New York bay and leave her at her first anchorage, and all was going merrily when the villain hidden in the thicket showed his hand.

It always has been suspected that he was a villain belonging to the same club as the artist and sculptor. He became aware of the house boat party, and out of pure deviltry and from no desire to see the sculptor get ahead of the game he worked his little trick. The day before the boat was to sail he fixed up a telegram calling Harold Strong to Philadelphia to see about painting the portrait of a millionaire.

The artist's return was indefinite. He knew that he was leaving a rival behind him, and he knew that the Colonial Dame, as the craft was called, would scarcely have come to anchor in the bay and the moon risen above the waters when that cheeky sculptor would be talking soft nonsense to Ruth Bascomb, but the artistic spirit was strong within him.

He arranged with his sister to interrupt if the sculptor tried to take advantage of the occasion. Feeling himself as secure as any man ever can feel where a woman is concerned, he departed on his mission, and the stately Colonial Dame also departed on hers.

Sometimes a millionaire can be found sitting on his front steps and smoking a fairly good cigar and waiting to be interviewed. Again he is as elusive as the midnight mosquito. The one the artist sought was elusive. It took a whole day to run him down, and when he was finally brought to bay his reply was:

"Young man, don't try any of your confidence games on me if you want to keep out of jail. I didn't telegraph you. I want no painting of any sort. I don't like the look of you. If you are honest, then some one has made a fool of you; if you are a confidence man, then try the first corner grocery."

Harold Strong had been bunkoed. It was only natural that he should believe the game had been played by his rival. He didn't wait to devour even a sandwich before catching a train for New York. For three hours he sat in a chair car and murdered the sculptor. He killed him in seven different ways and was planning the eighth when he arrived at a good sized town in Pennsylvania and was asked by the porter if he wished to stop there. He had got into a car that had been switched off at a junction on to another road while he was doing the murdering act.

It was noon when the artist reached New York. It was 2 o'clock before he began his hunt for some craft to take him down to Princess bay and lay him alongside the house boat. The sculptor had had one moonlight night in which to weave his net of romance around the victim, but he should not have another. The artist tried to charter all sorts of crafts, from an Albany day boat to a sand barge, but the afternoon wore away and night was coming on before he landed at the foot of Thirty-ninth street, Brooklyn, and interviewed Captain Jinks of the Merry Sal.

"Can you charter me to find a house boat in Princess bay tonight?" repeated Captain Jinks as he bent his head to scratch the back of his neck. "Yes, sir, I reckon you can if you've got a twenty dollar bill about you. You've got a schooner right here which is not much to look at compared with some schooners, but if there is anything on land or water that she can't pick up I'd like to see it. That's her great holt, young man—picking up things. There's goin' to be a fog tonight as sure's you live, but if I don't hit that house boat plumb center before midnight then I'll never sing gospel hymns off Cape Hatteras ag'in."

Harold Strong closed with the offer. The crew of the Merry Sal consisted of the captain and a lunkhead of a young man and a boy of ten who had run away from home and was trying a life on the billows. The captain looked upon the artist as a husband pursuing an eloping wife; the lunkhead looked upon him as an idiot for giving up $20 when the captain would have taken $10, and the runaway boy figured it out that he was some sort of grafter escaping from the police.

The opinion of the crew did not affect Mr. Strong, however. He helped to cast off the schooner and cant her head the right way and hoist the mainsail, and presently she was careering down the bay and avoiding as many statues of Liberty, men-of-war and Staten Island docks as she conveniently could. What she couldn't avoid she crawled over until she struck deep water on the other side. She struck the fog at Fort Hamilton, and then the anxious artist asked:

"Captain, isn't this going to make it difficult for us to find the house boat?"

"Not at all, my son—not at all," was the confident reply. "I told you we should have a fog, but that it would make no difference. The Merry Sal is a-sailin' of herself. She's a-follerin' of her own nose. I've told her that I want her to hit a house boat called the Colony Damned, and she'll do it or never look me in the face again."

"Well, I got near enough to it for the schooner to understand what is wanted. You just enjoy yourself and don't worry. Lord, but I wish you really knowed what a nose this craft has got for smellin' out other boats and things! One night I was comin' around Sandy Hook in such darkness that I couldn't see my hand before my face. I didn't know whether the Hook was five rods or five miles off. I left it all to Sal, and what did she do? Why, she smelled her way along and went ashore so high and dry that I got off without wettin' my feet. Show me another craft that can do the trick. No, sir, you needn't worry one least bit. I'll hit that house boat inside of another hour if the wind holds."

Aboard the Colonial Dame all had gone well. She had been towed down to the bay and anchored. The sculptor felt that the game was in his hands and was determined to win. He counted on a moonlight night, rippling waters, wavelets softly tunking against the sides of the boat, poetry, sighs and the soft strain of music floating over the waters from some summer resort where sandwiches sold at 15 cents each. The fog came and blotted out the moonlight. It was too damp to sit on deck, and the artist's sister accompanied them down in the cabin, and his suit did not advance. At 10 o'clock the house boat rocked silently on the waters with all on board retired. At about that hour also the captain of the Merry Sal was saying to Harold Strong as they walked the quarterdeck together:

"Yes, sir, the Sal has got a nose on her, and there is really no use for me to carry a compass. I've told her to smell out that ere boat of yours, and she's a-doin' it. I'm reckonin' she'll hit it within fifteen minits. Why, I could turn in right now and feel that if that boat of yours is anywhere on Princess bay the Sal would hit her within"—

The Sal hit her. Whether she was guided by Providence, the lunkhead of a young man or by her nose may never be known, but as a matter of fact she suddenly crashed into the Colonial Dame and cut her down to the water's edge.

There were shouts and screams and yells of confusion. It seemed for a moment as if all on board the house boat must be drowned, but luck was with them. The tide had gone out and there were only three feet of water under her keel, the crew of the Sal were active on the bows of their craft, and the artist went overboard at the first crash and fished around until he found the right party and then saved her in a sopping, but uninjured state. He also magnanimously extended a saving hand to his rival and to his future mother-in-law, and as he piloted them to the sandy Jersey beach and counted heads to find all present and accounted for he was hailed from the departing schooner with:

"Well, good night, young man. I told you the Sal had a nose on her and would hit this 'ere house boat in the darkest night, and you see I am a mariner who speaks the truth. Good night all. Take the Merry Sal when you want a schooner with a smeller on her."

The Art of Begging.

The head waiter of a famous New York restaurant said the other day:

"A few nights ago, after having charge of a very large dinner, I started for home. My way led me through West Seventy-second street, where, late as it was, I saw a little girl only a few years old sitting on the lower step of a private stoop, crying and sobbing as if her heart would break. I stopped to ask her what was the matter, and she told me that she had got lost uptown, that she knew where she lived—in Sixteenth street—and that if she only had car fare she could get back there. Being in a hurry, I gave her a quarter and started to pass on.

"The moment the kid got the coin she jumped up and ran away around the corner like lightning. I never before saw any one disappear so quickly. It dawned on me at once that I had been 'dead easy.' Of course she was simply a well trained little actress and had taken the quarter to her father or mother, who was in hiding near by. It's an outrageous shame that a little child should be trained up in that way."—New York Post.

Some Strange Customs.

A very interesting account is given of the strange customs of the Bedouins of the Sinai peninsula in Lord Cromer's report on Egypt and the Sudan. If a man kills another in time of peace the relatives of the murdered man, beginning from the father to the fifth generation, have the right to revenge or pardon against the receipt of "blood money." This latter is fixed at forty-one camels. If the murdered man was of the same tribe as the murderer the latter or his near relatives have to give a girl in marriage to one of the victim's relatives without receiving the usual dowry. When she gives birth to a child she is free to go back if she chooses. In the latter case the marriage must be renewed and the usual dowry paid. Five camels may be substituted for the girl.

THE WOODWORK

How It Should Be Treated to Keep It In Condition.

Enamel finishes require to be well washed in clean warm water, using the merest suspicion of soap or scouring sand upon dirty or grimy spots. Afterward they must be rubbed with flannel brisk enough to make them extremely hot. This develops luster in them quite as it does in hardwood.

Grained and varnished imitations of hardwood are best cleaned with borax soapsuds, never letting water touch them, but rubbing well with cloths wrung dry. Afterward they should be rubbed with a flannel barely moistened with kerosene. If there is too much kerosene it will dissolve and blur the colors. Clean hardwood with a flannel wet in turpentine and rub afterward lightly with boiled linseed oil. Take off spots with fine sand mixed in oil. Apply it with a leather and rub with clean leather afterward to bring back the polish.

Once in two or three years hardwood ought to be well washed in borax soap suds, then rubbed dry, lightly oiled and rubbed with leather polishers until the surface burns the hand.

It cannot be said too forcibly nor too often that in every kind of cleaning the first thing is to brush or wipe away every particle of loose dirt.

DRESS ECONOMY.

When a walking skirt begins to look shabby, or, indeed, any skirt for that matter, hang it out of doors, first of all, to air thoroughly, then carefully remove every stain and cut off the worn binding around the bottom edge. If the waistband is pulled out from much pinning or the skirt is commencing to "pull up" because the band is a little tight remove that, too, very carefully, says the Portland Express.

Now hang out of doors until sponging (to remove stains) has dried, when the skirt may be given a new binding round the bottom and a new waistband, letting out a little of the fullness from the plaits at the back and replacing all hooks and eyes that are necessary. Give the skirt a thorough pressing, using a warm, not hot iron, and taking plenty of time. Press on the wrong side or lay a damp cloth on the right side and iron until it dries. Hang up for twenty-four hours before wearing, as any wrinkles that are made in it before it is perfectly dry are apt to remain in the goods until pressed with a warm iron. A skirt fixed in this way is equal to a new one, and one feels very luxurious and comfortable in it when it has been renovated in this way.

CULINARY CONCEITS.

Meats or soups should not be covered closely while hot.

Toast is much improved if melted butter is poured over it instead of spreading it with cold butter.

When scalding milk, if you do not wish the cream to rise on it, pour into a jug as soon as scalded and stand the jug in a bowl of cold water.

If when frying fish of any kind a little salt is sprinkled on the bottom of the pan when it is hot and the pot boiling the fish can be easily turned without breaking in the least.

Banana pulp pressed through a vegetable ricer and seasoned as pumpkin will produce pies quite equal to those of the delectable vegetable and with a pronounced saving of labor.

To freshen a stale loaf of bread twist it up tightly in a paper bag and place it in a moderately hot oven. Rolls, buns, coffee cake, etc., can also be treated successfully in the same way.

Amusing the Baby.

In the matter of amusements, for the first six months at least, the infant does not require much attention. Up to the third month he will find enough to amuse himself, first in getting acquainted with his surroundings, then with the objects in his room, next his fingers and toes. Later let him have a simple toy, but do not crowd toys upon him. The appreciation and pleasure is not as great when there is a surfeit. There is no doubt that it gives the adult a great deal of pleasure to shower gifts and amusements upon children of all ages, but is not the motive more or less selfish on our part? In the pleasure it gives us, do we not overlook the harm we may be doing? In fact, we are sometimes hurt by the child's lack of enthusiasm over our gifts.—Marianna Wheeler in Harper's Bazar.

Three Wedding Hints.

Don't impoverish your family by insisting on an extravagant wedding. The show lasts but a short time; the poverty sometimes consequent upon it remains. Don't invite everybody you ever heard of in order to get presents. Every present is a mortgage on your future income. Down to the third generation you will have to pay present for present. Unless you are to go much in society choose your gown for its usefulness. Think of the wedding gowns you have seen that cost no end of money and been worn only once, probably twice.

Brightening Carpets.

Although there are many new liquids for freshening and brightening carpets, nothing will do better work than ox gall. Use one gill to a gallon of cold soft water, stirring the ox gall into the water with a stick. With a soft brush rub the carpet, making a white lather. Two persons should do this work, one following the other and washing the lather off with clear water. The water should be changed often and then the carpet should be rubbed with clean cloths until dry.

Brain Strain

"In the long history of the past glasses were resorted to for the purpose of correcting imperfect vision only. More especially during the later years it has been observed that glasses now and again have relieved nervous disorders, and the more closely we have studied and observed the effects of properly adjusted glasses in disease, the more convinced we have grown that eyestrain is the cause of many serious disorders, and that its correction will in a great measure relieve troubles that have heretofore baffled the skill of the medical profession. All work connected with the function of vision is done at the base of the brain."—Prentice. We correct Brain Strain by the "Prentice" Lens and System.

LAST DAY OF THE BIG FAIR.

SPEEDING EVENTS WERE EXCELLENT — A BANNER CROWD ON THE GROUNDS.

The Belleville fair, this year, seems to have given the best of satisfaction to everybody concerned. The weather man behaved himself exceedingly well, although the temperature was, to tell the truth, rather high. Still, it did not rain. Old Jupiter Pluvius is the bete noir of fair people. The receipts, we were told, were very satisfactory, there being, so a director said, in the neighborhood of $800 taken in at the gate.

Many encomiums were passed on the display in the main building, made by Belleville merchants, and the ladies' fancy work, so a lady of experience was heard to say, was the best she ever saw.

SPEEDING EVENTS.

As is usually the case, the speeding events were the attraction of the afternoon, and they passed off very successfully. In the last heat of the free-for-all an incident occurred which was not upon the programme, and which might easily have been serious in its results. Five heats had been trotted and the three remaining horses were sent off for the sixth and final effort. Dennis Lake was driving Maud Wilkes and had just made the turn into the home stretch, when by some means his horse stumbled and fell. Lake was thrown violently from his seat over the horse's head and upon the ground. As both the driver and the horse did not at first move it was feared that the accident had resulted fatally, but fortunately such was not the case. Lake was stunned and also sustained some injuries about the neck and shoulder, but not of a serious nature. The horse was not injured and no damage was done to the bike. It was indeed a miraculous escape and for a few minutes caused considerable excitement.

FREE-FOR-ALL—MILE HEATS.

The free-for-all event was called first, and five well-known horses responded to the call. They were Bourbon Brook, owned by W. J. Timlin; Sidney Pointer, owned by W. H. Moffatt; Maud Wilkes, owned by D. Lake; Miss Paisley, owned by Geo. Lipsett, and Tim Alert, owned by Geo. Martin. This proved to be a stubbornly fought out exhibition of speed and it required six heats to be trotted before the the best horse could be selected. In the first heat Miss Paisley, in the last half, forged ahead and kept in that position to the finish. It was a pretty exhibition of speed from start to finish. In the two following heats Tim Alert, who was fourth in the first heat, passed under the wire first. Sidney Pointer, who was looked upon by many as a sure winner, did not do much, in fact in the three heats in which he started fourth place was the best position he secured. He was withdrawn after the third heat. At the conclusion of the 5th heat Bourbon Brook was taken off the track, leaving only the three heat winners for the final struggle. When the accident above recorded took place in the 6th heat Maud Wilkes was in the lead and appeared to be going to win. Tim Alert, however, took the heat, and thus won out. The summary of this event was as follows:

Maud Wilkes	2	2	2	1	1	3
Miss Paisley	1	5	4	2	4	2
Bourbon Brook	3	3	4	3	3dr
Sidney Pointer	5	4	5	dr

2.50 CLASS—HALF-MILE HEATS.

Four horses were entered in this event, and it required five heats to decide the winner. It was confidently expected by many that Jim K. would land the prize, but Major Hamburg proved to be the winner, taking three heats. The horses entered were; Major Hamburg, owned by H. Ashley; Jim K., owned by J. Ketcheson; Guy, owned by C. Armstrong, and Annetta, owned by R. Rollins. The latter was withdrawn after two heats had been trotted. Major Hamburg won the two first heats and Jim K. the two succeeding. In the final heat Major Hamburg took the lead at the start and maintained it to the finish and Guy succeeded in forging ahead of Jim K.

The summary was as follows:

Major Hamburg	1	1	3	3	1
Jim K.	4	4	1	1	3
Guy	2	2	2	2	2
Annetta	3	3	dr

GO-AS-YOU PLEASE.

This was an event which caused considerable merriment. The conditions were as follows; Single horse, walk half-mile, trot half-mile, and go-as-you-please half-mile. There were three horses entered, the owners being Mr. R. Rollins, of this city; Mr. F. S. Pierce, also of this city; and Mr. T. Stewart, of Deseronto. Mr. Rollins' hrose proved to be an easy winner, and Mr. Stewart's was second. Mr. Pierce's horse did not like the idea of walking half a mile and would at intervals start up and trot in spite of the driver.

It was late in the afternoon when the speeding events were concluded, but the interest in them was such that the greater portion of the spectators remained to see the finish.

The officials for the afternoon were Messrs. W. Carnew, J. A. O'Neil, M. Sprague, A. G. Vermilyea and Dr. Simmons.

During the afternoon Mr. W. Bensley gave his barrel and wheel act, and the performance was interesting and pleasing.

It was intended to have a parade of prize live stock around the ring at 4 p.m. yesterday, but this had to be dispensed with.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

Best Hockey Team Ever In Belleville.

THAT IS WHAT MANAGER ARNOIT INTENDS TO PLACE ON THE LOCAL ICE THIS WINTER.

Now that the north wind has blown the hot weather away it is in order to talk a little about hockey. Hockey! The game which Bellevillians, one and all, love as a coon loves a chicken or a watermelon

As most people known, the new big rink is now completed, and it is all the most ardent lover of winter sports could wish for. Seating accommodation for about a thousand, and standing room for as many more. That looks good for Belleville, eh?

But it was hockey we started to talk about, and it will surely gladden the hearts of most people in this city when they hear that prospects are bright for the best team Belleville has ever seen, to perform on local ice this winter. Negotiations are in progress for the admission of this city to the Federal League. The idea, as some people see it, is to have an eastern and a western group of the Federal. The western group to consist of Smith's Falls, Brockville, Kingston, Belleville and, possibly, Port Hope. Playing a double schedule, this would give each town plenty of hockey, even if they did not reach the finals—and, of course, Belleville would. Then the eastern and western groups could play off for the championship. It is confidently believed that the other towns mentioned would welcome a chance to get into a league with Belleville, for everybody must admit that the hockey players of this good city always took their medicine like men and never tried to win championships by crawling through the windows of the Executive's office. A fair field and an even break was all they asked for.

The information conveyed above will, we are sure, make pleasant reading for the sport-loving people of this city. Look out for our hockey team this winter. They'll be the real thing, with the label blown in the bottle

YACHTING.

Lipton Will Challenge.

New York, Sept. 12.—There are persistent rumors that Sir Thomas Lipton will challenge for the America's Cup on his arrival in this country at the end of this month. He sails for New York on September 21, and it is said he has made up his mind to take up the matter of a challenge at close range, having received little satisfaction in correspondence. His plans are not announced, but it is said they have been definitely formulated.

First of all, the report states he will challenge under the new measurement rule with Shamrock III. This he can do, since under the deed of gift the defeated vessel is only debarred from challenging again until two years have elapsed from the time of her last defeat. The two years' bar has expired on Shamrock III., and she is eligible to try again. She cannot, of course, beat Reliance under the old rule, but under the new one she rates so much better than Reliance and receives so large a handicap that it would be unsafe to trust the defence of the cup to the old boat.

Whether or not the New York Yacht Club would accept the challenge under the new rule with Shamrock III. as challenger is a question, but there is certainly a feeling in the club that the race should be held under the new rule, although men who are responsible for Reliance are unalterably opposed to it, and would use every means in their power to prevent it. That question must be decided in a club meeting.

Another story states that Sir Thomas has had his designers at work on a boat, and if he can get any encouragement from them under either rule, that they can turn out a boat that will make a good fight, he will challenge without restriction of any kind.

ATHLETICS.

Some Truths About the "Amateur" Situation.

(Montreal Star.)

Ottawa deserves credit for trying to stick to everything that is amateur in sport as long as possible.

And with that business sense which never leaves Ottawa, even when fighting to the last ditch for the preservation of amateurism, it deserves credit for trying to get as much advertising as possible out of its noble stand taken against the insidious poison of professionalism, which, if reports are true, must, in its various forms have eaten up quite a bit of the receipts gained from lacrosse, hockey and football matches in the past, because it had crept in unawares, and before ever vigilant and horrified directors were enabled to stop it.

But when it comes down to bedrock, is there, leaving its advertising value aside — any need for all this fuss?

Take Mr. Pulford, or Mr. Phillips, or Mr. Moore, for instance. All pure amateurs, no doubt. Gentlemen who have never accepted any remuneration in any shape or form for playing hockey or football. Or Mr. Alf. Smith as another.

Now, how would it hurt these gentlemen to play under a rule which the Montreal Amateur Athletic Association, the greatest athletic body in Canada, not even barring the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union, has seen fit to adopt.

It has been intimated that Mr. Pulford and some others hope to go there to row. If so, that project need not interfere with their playing lacrosse or hockey.

They ought to be able to always produce affidavits that they are amateurs.

And if they are afraid that the temptation would be too great to play on the same team with men who are getting paid, let them borrow strength from the fact that on the Montreal lacrosse team there are four or five men who absolutely do not receive a cent for playing lacrosse.

These men do not boast of their pure and undefiled amateur spirit, but they are in a position like the Ottawa gentlemen who object to the new rule, always will be no doubt, of eligibility to participate in all amateur contests because they never have directly or indirectly, accepted value in money or kind for participating in any sport.

The Star of all papers made probably the strongest fight as long as there was even a forlorn hope to keep the amateur spirit intact.

But now that amateurs and professionals have played together without harm to either side, now that it has been shown that there is hardly an amateur, except in curling and golf, who has not played in the recent past with or against men who were professionals on the quiet, it seems just as well to do away with a hypocrisy which came near wrecking several branches of sport not so long ago.

At Sign of the Scales.

RENT CASE.

George Ellis was charged with owing Miss K. Power $2 rent. After some evidence had been taken the case was dismissed.

ALLEGED INSANITY.

Nelson H. Clarke had a preliminary hearing as to his sanity. It was alleged that he was a person of unsound mind, and it was feared that he would do harm either to himself or some other person. Considerable evidence was submitted, at the conclusion of which the magistrate remanded the accused until Monday next.

ALLEGED STONE THROWING.

Sarah Smith charged a boy named Willie Callaghan with throwing a stone at her. Case was enlarged for a week.

Belleville Boy's Success.

The many friends in this city of Mr W. S. Moore, a former Belleville boy, who for some years had been living in Montreal, will be interested in knowing that Mr. Moore has recently moved to Hamilton. He is now connected with the Ontario Lantern and Lamp Company, and was, on the 12th inst., appointed secretary-treasurer of the company, which is one of the largest manufacturing concerns of the city. You can't keep the Belleville boys down.

Sudden Death at Regina

Mr. Harold Pearse Field, traveller for Greenshields Western of Winnipeg, died very suddenly in Regina Hospital after five days' illness from a severe attack of typhoid fever. Mr. Field was the only son of John Pearse Field, of Cobourg, senior member of the well-known dry goods house of Field & Brother, Cobourg. Deceased was married about a year ago to Miss Lucia Evans, of Picton. Mrs. Field, with her young child, was visiting her mother, Mrs. W. H. Wright at Wellington where she received the sad news.

S. A. Kingston Dead.

Many people in this vicinity will learn with regret of the death of Mr. S. A. Kingston, who was reported as seriously injured internally, and whose leg was broken in the Azilda accident, near Sudbury, as reported in these columns yesterday. Mr. Kingston died yesterday morning at the Sudbury hospital. Samuel Kingston is a brother of Chas. A. Kingston, who for a number of years was City Clerk of London, and now lives in California. The deceased man was a retired farmer of Frankford, this county, and was taking a trip west to look over the country. His widow left yesterday afternoon for Sudbury to bring the body home.

A Missing Boat

FOR LAND AND LIBERTY

"Long Live the Social Revolution," Says Girl on Scaffold.

Gen. Min's Assassin Goes to Death Without a Tremor—At Odessa the Union of Russian People Are "Urging Patriots to Combine to Exterminate the Jews" — Train Robbers Foiled—Mitau Governor Warned.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 14.—"Long live the social revolution for land and liberty."

These were the last words of Zenaide Konoplianikovo, the girl who assassinated Gen. Min last month, and who was sentenced to death by a court-martial. They were uttered as the rope was placed around her neck.

She refused to see a priest prior to the execution. She mounted the scaffold with firm steps and would not be aided. On a photograph sent to her sister she wrote the words: "My life was all I had to give."

The resumption of telegraphic communication with Siedice has enabled the press of St. Petersburg for the first time to present a picture of the conditions in the ravaged town.

Agitation at Odessa.

Odessa, Sept. 14.—Anti-Jewish agitation is rife. Wall spaces, the sides of houses, and telegraph poles throughout this city have been plastered with a proclamation issued by the Union of Russian People, "urging patriots to combine to exterminate the Jews." This action has aroused grave apprehension among the peacefully inclined both Jews and Christians.

It is reported here that the Jewish town of Koepin, in the district of Kamenetz, has been burned down by peasants from the surrounding country.

Train Robbery Foiled.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 14.—An unsuccessful and disastrous attempt at a train robbery has been made upon the Baltic Railway at a point near here. As a result two of the bandits were killed, a third was mortally wounded, and others were captured. The band consisted of thirteen men.

Warned That He Will Die.

Mitau, Russia, Sept. 14.—Not less than five drumhead courts-martial have been instituted by the governor, exclusively for the trial of robbers and persons perpetrating attacks upon officials.

The revolutionists have notified the successor of Pastor Zimmerman, in the Riga district, that he has been condemned to death. Zimmerman and his wife were murdered at Rennenwarden, Sept. 1.

Officers Won't Be Judges.

Odessa, Sept. 14.—The military authorities are experiencing the greatest difficulty in constituting field courts for the trial of revolutionaries. Almost all the officers originally selected to act as judges prefer to retire from the service. The names of six officers who have accepted are kept with the greatest secrecy, for fear of attempts on their lives.

New Russian Torpedo Boats.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 14.—After successful trials, ten torpedo boats, built in Germany, have been added to the navy. They are of 375 tons each, and can make 28.5 knots.

Heavy Cap Saves Boy's Life.

Kingston, Sept. 14.—Rupert Downey and his friend were playing about the house when Rupert went in for his heavy winter cap. Starting out for the stables the other lad fired a shot from a 23 calibre rifle, the bullet striking Rupert in the head, but making only a slight wound, the heavy cap saving the boy's life.

London, Sept. 14.—(C. A. P.)—A steamship service from Belfast to Canada was inaugurated yesterday by the C. P. R. Lake Erie. A large number of emigrants embarked.

FOUND MURDERED.

Winnipeg, Sept. 14.—Archie Ferguson, a young Scotchman from Snowflake, Man., was found dead in the C. P. R. yards by a train crew early yesterday morning with his throat slashed open, evidently by a razor, and with a horrible gashing wound on his forehead.

There is nothing to show how he came by death.

Humberts Released.

Paris, Sept. 14.—Madame Therese Humbert was liberated yesterday from the prison at Rennes, and Frederic Humbert was liberated from the jail at Thouars. The Humberts were sentenced in 1902 to five years' solitary confinement for a swindle which involved nearly $12,000,000.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, Sept. 13.—Receipts of live stock at the City Market were large, over 100 carloads since Tuesday. There were few good cattle offered, and many of the common to medium classes. Trade was brisk for cattle that were anything like good.

Exporters.

There were no sales of shipping cattle reported, with the exception of one bull, sold by Crawford & Hunnisett, which weighed 2000 lbs., at $4.25 per cwt.

Butchers.

The best lots of butchers' offered sold at $4.25 to $4.50, and two cattle, 1300 lbs. each, at $5.00; in fact, there were few sold over $4 per cwt. Medium cattle sold from $3.50 to $3.80; common at $3.25; inferior, $2.50 to $3, and canners, $1.50 to $2.25.

Feeders and Stockers.

A few loads of stockers and feeders have been disposed of this week. H. Murby reports trade as being slow, at about the same prices as on Wednesday. Mr. Murby reports having handled about 200 cattle at the following quotations: Best feeders, 900 to 1100 lbs, at $3.60 to $4; best feeders, 800 to 900 lbs, at $3.40 to $3.65; best stockers, 600 to 800 lbs, at $3.25 to $3.50; medium stockers, 600 to 900 lbs, at $2.75 to $3.25; common stockers, 600 to 900 lbs, at $2.25 to $2.50.

Milch Cows.

Deliveries of milch cows and springers have been liberal during the week. Prices have ruled steady at $30 to $60 each, as will be seen by sales given below.

Veal Calves.

The market for veal calves remains strong for those of good quality at prices ranging from $3 to $7 per cwt; few, however, reached the latter price, the bulk selling at $5 to $6 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Deliveries were large, especially for lambs. The bulk of the lambs, yes fully 90 per cent., are bucks. Export ewes sold at $4 to $4.40, with a few selected lots at $4.50 per cwt.; bucks sold at $3 to $3.50 per cwt. Lambs sold at about an average of $6 per cwt. Some sold as low as $5.50, and some few picked lots as high as $6.25 per cwt.

Suicide In Hamilton.

Hamilton, Sept. 14—Wednesday night Mrs. Lindberg strung herself up to a rafter in an out-building at the cemetery. She used a very slender cord. Yesterday morning her dead body was discovered. Her husband, an expert coatmaker, disappeared about a week ago. About eighteen months ago she fell from the third-storey window in the building, and her mind has been slightly deranged ever since.

Calls Doctor Too Late.

Toronto, Sept. 14.—To-night an inquest into the death of Mrs. George Pepper, a Christian Science patient, which occurred at Lambton on Saturday night last, will be begun by County Coroner Bull. Crown Attorney Drayton will conduct the investigation. The case has aroused much excitement in the neighborhood. It is claimed a doctor was called too late to save the woman's life.

Ill; Cuts His Throat.

Sault Ste. Marie, Sept. 14.—In a moment of insanity William J. Davidson, who was a patient at the general hospital for nervous troubles, cut his throat, causing death yesterday. Deceased was a storekeeper for the Lake Superior Corporation and well known in town. He leaves a widow and one child.

PATTISON LOST $10,000

By Being Too Quick to Settle Salary Commutation.

$90,000 Was Ready For Him, But He Settled For $80,000 and Mr. Stratton Gave Cheque For $10,000 to Mr. McCutcheon to Apply on His Debt For the $90,000 to Pay ex-Manager Pattison—I. O. F. Under Fire Now.

Toronto, Sept. 14.—Mr. Tilley recalled the officials of the Home Life at the morning session of the Royal Insurance Commission, and had not finished the examination of Mr. Pattison when the lunch-hour arrived. Mr. Pattison was told to return for a few minutes after lunch, but did not show up, although the Commission waited twenty minutes. He will be called again this morning.

Mr. Tilley asked Pattison if it was shown that the money came out of the Home Life would he be willing to give back some of the $80,000. Mr. Pattison said yes if it was paid to him improperly.

Hon. J. R. Stratton told that he had drawn $90,000 from the bank of his own money for Pattison to get out of the company. Pattison was with him at the time, but in a few minutes he (Stratton) changed his mind and thought that $80,000 would be enough. He carried the $10,000 around in his pocket for a day or two, and Pattison could have had it if he had insisted.

Mr. Tilley read the indenture whereby J. K. McCutcheon promised to transfer to the bank a portion of his contract with the Home Life, in order to repay the sum of $90,000. The transaction was put through in the $90,000 form in order to avoid changing the papers.

Deposited the $10,000 in Bank.

Mr. Stratton said that he deposited the $10,000 difference in the bank at Peterboro, and gave Mr. McCutcheon his cheque for the amount, to be applied on the loan.

J. K. McCutcheon, recalled, could not say when he had been told that the item had been changed from $90,000 to $80,000. He had held the $10,000 cheque, instead of depositing it, because the Commission was coming.

At this point Mr. Stratton whispered to witness, and when he was through Mr. Tilley asked Mr. McCutcheon what he had said.

"You know what the note was given for, to retire the temporary loan," was Stratton's statement, and he also said, "What you say about the commission is wrong," answered witness.

J. J. Warren was recalled. He had understood that Mr. Pattison was to get $90,000. He had known about the $10,000 for some time, but had volunteered no information to the Commission. He was under the impression that the cheque was not to be cashed at that time, but whenever the bank should make a demand. Mr. Warren thought the only kick over this deal should come from Mr. Pattison, who lost $10,000 by being too quick.

Investigating the I. O. F.

Dr. Oronhyatekha, supreme chief ranger of the I. O. F., took the witness stand at 2.20. He has been a member of the order since 1878. In September, 1878, he was elected high chief ranger for Ontario, and in 1882 he was made president or supreme chief ranger. The order was formed by a secession from the Ancient Order of Foresters in June, 1874. For a year the society confined itself to friendly benefits, but afterwards carried on the endowment business. There was a period from 1874 to 1875 when no legislative laws governed the society.

In 1878 the high court of Ontario was constituted under the American court, but shortly after witness became chief ranger a license was taken out under the Ontario Act. This did not alter the kind of insurance benefits that were being given to members.

The principles of the order were to give insurance at the lowest possible cost, and at the same time the sick and funeral benefits, which were consolidated in the new society. Since 1898 both sexes are included. The rules apply to both alike, with the exception that women are not allowed to be officials of the supreme executive, nor do they get the sick and funeral benefits.

The Governing Bodies.

The highest domestic parliament of the order, said the S. C. R., is the supreme court, which meets triennially or quadrennially as it sees fit. The subordinate courts, numbering about 5,000, scattered the world over, elect representatives to the high court, which number fifty-eight, and the high court names the representatives to the supreme court. Twenty subordinate courts call for a high court. Where there were not enough subordinate courts in an area to fix a high court these courts were under the supreme court.

Mr. Shepley then took up the financial constitution of the subordinate courts. These courts are allowed to tax its members for its maintenance. They also receive revenue from initiation and annual court dues. Each court had a ritual and also regalia.

The maintenance dues and the initiation are fixed by popular vote, the majority ruling. Any profits made from concerts find their way into the maintenance funds. Every bylaw of a subordinate court must be submitted to witness for his approval. Each court governs itself, and the constitutions are revised triennially.

At this juncture George A. Hooper, Dr. Oronhyatekha's personal assistant, was sworn, and was allowed to assist the witness in his answers.

Court Funds.

Each subordinate court sends one representative to the high court for each twenty members. The number is fixed by the high court itself and depends on the extent of the jurisdiction. The high court of Western Ontario, with its 12,000 or 15,000 members has a membership of from 200 to 300. Its business of the high court is to settle domestic difficulties and arrange for the spread of the order. The funds of the order are raised in several ways. The subordinate courts, the ultimate consumer of supplies, buy these from the high court, which makes a profit of 20 per cent. This is also a tax per capita that the high court makes. The regulation of this capitation tax is fixed by a financial committee, at every yearly meeting.

The high court has also a source of revenue from the charter fees of the subordinate courts. These average about $100 a court. The expenditure of the high court provides for the salary of officers, and the cost of the annual meeting and the expenses of delegates to the high court. The high chief ranger gets a bonus at the end of his term and the high court secretary gets a salary.

The supreme court is limited to 210 members and each high court is entitled to one member of the supreme court and as many more as its numbers fix. The supreme executive council consists of seven members, the supreme chief ranger, past supreme chief ranger, the vice chief ranger and second vice chief ranger, supreme medical officer, supreme treasurer and supreme councillors. There is a loaning board, which consists of the Toronto residents of the executive and Elliwell Stevenson of Detroit, viz.: The supreme physician, Thomas Milman, supreme secretary, John O. MacGillivray, supreme treasurer, Harry Collins, and the witness.

Sources of Revenue.

The financial work of the supreme court was gone into. The sources of revenue, of the expenses, costs on insurance, premium benefits, the order tax and the charter fees and the tax of the cent per month per member for the Orphans' Home and the certificate and registration fee of new members and five per cent. of the mortuary funds.

The registration fee is $1 and the certificate fee is $1 throughout the world. The charter fee of the high court is $200 and the royal encampment charter fee also $200. The extension of the order tax is regulated by the amount of insurance benefit the member carries.

The witness here told the Commission that on failure to pay any tax the member was suspended from the order.

Continuing, Mr. Shepley went into the insurance rates as a source of revenue.

The supreme court is constitutionally charged with fixing the premium rate. In 1899 the rates were increased. Up to this time the rates had been issued on the tables made out at the time of the organization of the society in 1881. It was thought at that time to adopt certain permanent rates. With slight modifications not affecting the rates the combined mortality table was used until 1899, when the company tried for Dominion incorporation.

Disposition of Receipts.

The premium income was banked. Five per cent. of this income was used for expenses. The mortuary fund provided for by the insurance department. The sick and benefit fund was provided by premium rates and entirely separate from the insurance premium.

The general fund was made up of charter fees, five per cent. mortuary funds, profit from sale of supplies, etc.

The principal items of outgo from the general fund are the salaries of officers and the organization expenses.

The incorporation of the society in 1881 under the Ontario Act regulating provident society, was dissected briefly by counsel.

When asked about investments Dr. Oronhyatekha said that previous to getting the Dominion charter that all investments were made under the law laid down by the Ontario Act.

"In getting the legislation from the Dominion did you experience any difficulty?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"There was some opposition. The insurance department did not approve of the legislation; they were fierce against us."

"What were the grounds?"

"Inadequacy of our rates."

"Did the bill you introduced go through?"

"No; there were many amendments."

Mr. Shepley read the act. Several clauses were discussed at length.

At the time the chairman of the banking and commerce committee was memoralized by the insurance department counsel read the memorial and noted the witness' objections. Witness claimed that the Government standard of fraternal insurance was altogether too high.

"If the Foresters had the power of levying special assessments, even if the surplus was all gone, the order would be able to pay claims until the end of time," was Oronhyatekha's answer to Mr. Shepley's question if the surplus was all gone it would not help the order if they could levy special assessments."

DRASTIC LAND LEGISLATION.

New Zealand Government Proposes to Regulate Large Land Holdings.

London, Sept. 14.—The Times' Wellington correspondent says that the Government land proposals, the most drastic in the history of the colonial legislation, are creating intense interest in New Zealand, especially the clauses compelling owners to sell within a decade the excess of land held beyond $250,000 unimproved value, and the provisions preventing the present owners of 1,000 acres of first-class land or those of 5,000 acres of second-class land, adding their estates either by freeholds or leaseholds. The correspondent adds that the proposals will be strictly combatted.

THUNDERBOLT'S HAVOC.

Two Men Fatally Injured and Fifty More or Less Injured.

Chicago, Sept. 14.—Five men were injured, two fatally, six horses were killed, and the entire plant of the Illinois Brick Co., practically destroyed Wednesday night when a thunderbolt fell into two of the largest buildings of the South Evanston plant.

Sixty men were about the premises and not one escaped injury.

Barrister Drops Dead.

St. Mary's, Sept. 14.—J. A. Donald, B. A., barrister of this town, dropped dead at about 1 o'clock yesterday. He had not been ailing, and death came unexpectedly, caused by heart trouble. Mr. Donald was in his thirties, and he was born here. He was a Liberal candidate for Parliamentary honors a few years ago.

Stone Kills Owen Sound Laborer.

Owen Sound, Sept. 14—Samuel Looking, aged 66, was killed yesterday morning by being struck on the head by a stone from a blast, while he with other workmen were blasting out rock for a sewer on Jackson street hill. He leaves a grown-up family.

WAMPOLE A SUICIDE.

Defalcations of H. W. Brick Responsible For His Death.

Philadelphia, Sept. 15.—The body of Henry K. Wampole, the wealthy Philadelphia manufacturer of chemicals, who had been missing for several days, was found in the East River, New York, Thursday night. He had undoubtedly committed suicide.

H. W. Brick, a trusted employe of the firm of Wampole & Co. in Canada, was short $40,000 and Mr. Wampole brooded over the matter until he became insane.

Babe In a Basket In Doorway.

Peterboro, Sept. 15.—A basket containing a male infant, two days old, was left last evening in a doorway at 142 Simcoe street. The child was soon after discovered by a police officer and taken to the shelter of the Children's Aid Society. Attached to an old newspaper placed over the basket was a slip of paper bearing the words, Mr. Jack Lefavre, Peterboro." Lefavre left the city a few days ago, and his whereabouts are unknown.

Labor Candidate For St. Mary's

St. John, N.B., Sept. 15.—At the Trades and Labor Congress' afternoon session, resolutions of congratulation to the Labor party in Great Britain were passed, and President John Mee was placed in nomination, and unanimously endorsed, as Labor candidate for Parliament in St. Mary's division of Montreal.

FLY FOR THEIR LIVES.

Ninety Guests of Gilmour House, Ottawa, Routed Out by Fire—A Dozen Were Injured.

Ottawa, Sept. 15.—Fire last night, which started in the Gilmour House, has gutted the building, at a loss of $150,000, and caused injuries to a dozen or more guests who were called upon to fly for their lives at a moment's notice. Among the injured are:

Mrs. Robert Pentecost, 407 Huron street, Toronto, both legs broken.

George Montgomery, Toronto, left thigh fractured and scalp wound.

Mrs. E. Butterworth, recently married, severely burned.

Mr. D. Garry, Galt, severely burned.

T. Smith, Montreal, both hands and left leg severely burned.

Miss Amelia DeForest, address not known, burned.

Mrs. Arch. Blue, wife of the Dominion Census Commissioner, broken shoulder blade.

Harry Walker of New Jersey, who jumped from the third story window, and had both legs broken. He is also very badly burned, and his recovery is doubtful.

The fire started at the foot of the elevator shaft. It was discovered shortly after 11 o'clock.

There were about 90 guests in the house, the majority of them women.

They all took the fire escapes, and the firemen, aided by hotel employes and citizens, managed to get them to the ground without serious injuries.

At 2 o'clock this morning it was still blazing fiercely

If the Brake Had Worked

Azilda Wreck Would Have Been Impossible, Says Engineer.

Tells His Story at Coroner's Inquest--Gave Signal to Colonist Train to "Back Up" Before the Crash Came, Which was Seen by Engineer Limoge, Who Had No Time to Back His Train.

Sudbury, Sept. 15.—An inquest on the Azilda railway disaster was opened on Thursday night before Coroner Struthers. The principal evidence was given by W. Thurlow, engineer on the third section of No. 2, which crashed into the waiting excursion train. He testified that orders had been received in the regular way as to meeting the third section of No. 1 at Azilda. It was down grade practically all the way from Cartier to Azilda, and he had tried the air brakes several times on the hill to steady his train. The brake had acted all right until applied for the purpose of stopping the train right at Azilda. Thurlow said he turned off the steam when three-quarters of a mile from the meeting place and applied the air brake about half a mile distant. He found the air brake not working, although the gauge showed seventy pounds pressure in the train pipe and 110 pounds in the reservoir. Immediately after the engineer had applied the brake the conductor signalled for brakes, and then himself applied the emergency brakes. The train was running about forty miles an hour, and on a bad rail. The wheels of the engine began to skid slightly, but the speed slackened only a very little. The air brake has the same effect if applied from either end, if the brakes are working right; and if this brake had been working right the train should have been stopped by the conductor's application of the brake.

Warned Other Train.

When Engineer Thurlow saw his train would not obey the brakes and would not stop he gave a back-up signal to the other train. Then he and his fireman jumped. After the accident Thurlow and Kirby, conductor on the excursion train, with one Schofield, examined the air brake system. They found the angle-cock back of the second car on the eastbound train to be turned so as to shut off the air. Several links of heavy stay chain hung loose beside it. This loose chain might have struck or caught handle of angle-cock and shut it off. He gave no signal for the hand brakes. The stay chains were inspected only at divisional points, and might be jolted loose.

Thomas Kehoe, conductor of the eastbound train, corroborated Thurlow's evidence. He said that there was time to stop the train when he applied the brakes if the brake had been efficient, but he noticed that the train ran a longer distance than it should with the full brake applied. When Conductor Kehoe first saw the angle-cock it had been turned back to the correct position.

There is no specific rule for speed when approaching a meet, but the engineer must have his train under control.

D. Roche, fireman, corroborated the previous evidence.

P. Limoge, engineer of the excursion train, testified that his train was a little late at Azilda. He saw the back-up signal given by Engineer Thurlow, but had not time to back his train.

J. Kirby, conductor on the same train, testified that the stay chains sometimes became uncoupled from jolting between divisional points.

TO REOPEN UNIVERSITIES.

Russian Students Decide to End Two Years of Paralysis.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 15.—At a meeting held here yesterday, attended by thousands of students, it was resolved to reopen the universities and begin actual academic work, thus putting an end to the paralysis in the educational system of Russia, which has endured for two years.

Trepoff's Niece an Assassin.

The identification as Taplana Leontieff of the woman who killed an aged Frenchman named Mueller at Interlaken, Switzerland, on Sept. 1, in mistake for M. Durnovo, former Russian Minister of the Interior, opens up the final chapter of an interesting romance, as Mlle. Leontieff is one of the nieces of Gen. Trepoff, who was concerned in an unsuccessful attempt upon the life of her uncle in 1965. Since the slaying of Mueller, M. Durnovo has returned to Russia and is living in close seclusion at his country estate.

Short Shift.

Vladimir Mazury, the leader of the Moscow section of the "Flying Group," who Thursday was found guilty of armed resistance to officers, was hanged yesterday. On account of the wounds sustained at the time of his capture he had to be carried to the scaffold.

Want a Law For Scientists.

Toronto, Sept. 15.—"The opinion of the jury is that Ethel Rose Pepper came to her death from a natural cause as shown by the post-mortem examination. The jury is also of the opinion that had proper medical attendance been provided the said Ethel Rose Pepper might have been cured or her life prolonged, and the jury wish to convey to the proper authorities their opinion that some law should be enacted whereby the sect known as Christian Scientists, could be brought under subjection."

In these words the jury empanelled to enquire into the cause of death of Mrs. Pepper of Lambton Mills, rendered their verdict last night.

Found With Head Cut Off.

Halifax, N. S., Sept. 15.—The body of Charles Almon Farrell, aged 45, of Halifax, was found on the I. C. R. track at Richmond yesterday morning, with the head completely severed from the body. Evidence points to suicide.

Got $800 Cash.

Amherst, N. S., Sept. 15.—The store of D. F. Archibald at Athol, a town about 15 miles from Amherst, was broken into Thursday night, the safe blown open and $800 in cash taken Five Assistant Generals.

Rome, Sept. 15.—The Congregation of the Company of Jesus yesterday elected five assistant-generals, as follows: For Italy, Father Freddi; for France, Father Fine; for Germany, Father Ledochowski, nephew of the late Cardinal Ledöchowski; for Spain, Father Abad, and for the Anglo-Saxons, Father James Hayes of Liverpool.

Fighting In Hayti.

Cape Haytien, Sept. 15.—There has been an engagement between soldiers of the Domlnican Government and the rebels. The fighting was severe, but the rebels succeeded in driving back the Government forces, who withdrew on Haytien territory. The Government losses were heavy.

Canada's Relations With The United States

The expressed desire of the leader of the Imperial Government to settle all outstanding questions between Canada and the U.S. will find little response in this country. The truth is there are no questions on which we are seriously at issue with our neighbors, and any matters that do require adjustment we may be safely trusted to look after ourselves. As the Mail and Empire recently pointed out the only reform of a commercial character that is needed by Canada, in so far as the United States is concerned, is a lift in our tariff under which the huge importations of manufactured products from the other side will be cut down.

There can be no discussion of the question of reciprocity with tariffs in their present condition. The United states tariff is determinedly against us. Our tariff under the Fielding amendments is ridiculously favorable to a country that declines to buy from Canada. We cannot prudently enter upon negotiations with the tariffs in his lop-sided condition, because bargaining with the present state of affaris as the basis, we are bound to get the worst of it. The next issue that is said to be ripe for settlement is the North Atlantic fishery question. But we do not believe that this is a 'question' calling for attention, at all events, on the part of Canada. The present treaty—that of 1818—governs the fisheries. Under it we have our rights within the three-mile limit, and the fishermen of the United States are required to restrict themselves to their own waters or to non-territorial waters. There is no need for a change here. Canada is satisfied. If the Americans have any offer to make, let them make it. But no proposition ought to come from the Dominion. We consented, in the Chamberlain-Tupper Treaty of 1888, to make regulations and to participate in surveys which would have the effect of reducing the friction that is sometimes created by the enforcement of the Treaty of 1818. But, after signing the convention, our neighbors withdrew from it, and in view of that fact, we ought not to be in a hurry to negotiate again. The seal 'question' is not a question with regard to which any change in the arrangement is required by us. The Paris award gives the United States the seal islands and a good share of the sea around them, as an exclusive possession. It also limits the area within which the Canadian sealer can operate in the open ocean, and fixes a close season. The United States has the best end of this bargain, and there is no reason why the matter should be considered, except in the interests of Canada, and the Dominion is not calling for any change.

Peterboro, during the last few years, has been building granolithic walks outside the trees. Now the city is growing, and the street car lines are being extended to many other streets, and, as a consequence, it is found that walks which have been built outside the trees may have to be torn up and rebuilt inside the trees, owing to lack of room,—for the cars. Canadian cities should always bear in mind the possibility of their growing big some day. Perhaps, in Belleville, in years to come, people may be anathematizing the "artistic" ones who were responsible for all the pretty boulevards and narrow roadways we have on many residential streets.

A correspondent writes: "I understand that, before long, there is to be a sale of lands for taxes. May I ask, through your columns, if the city, when it sells those lands, will be able to give a clear title? I have been told that it can only do so when the purchaser, in addition to paying the purchase price, also pays the taxes standing against the lands. If this really be the case, I think the public is entitled to know it."

Our correspondent, to our way of thinking, is quite correct in the thought expressed in the last sentence of his letter. But is it possible that the city—or its officials—will sell lands to which it cannot give a clear title? Perhaps our urbane City Clerk or Treasurer will be good enough to enlighten people in this regard. The Intelligencer will be glad to print a statement embodying the facts of the case. Assuredly, if people are going to purchase lands from the city, they are entitled to know whether they will get a title or not.

In his speech at Truro, Mr. R. L. Borden said, "The watchword of the Conservative party should be clean elections and merciless punishment of the briber and ballot forger. It is not enough to cry "clean elections." There are two other essentials, viz., to run clean elections and to punish corruption or fraud by every means known to law, and that law must be made simpler and easier of enforcement. Opportunities for delay and petty technicalities, which accompany and surround the present law, must be abolished. It is idle that there should be any question about the service of a petition upon any person who has been returned as a member of Parliament. The filing of such a petition in the court and a short public advertisement as notice to the constituency should be sufficient."

TWO OF A KIND.

(Brockville Times.)

Winston Churchill and Hamar Greenwood are two very modest young men, we don't think. Winston Churchill's name is synonymous in England with brass, and Hamar Greenwood's old school-mates at Whitby remember him as an excessively fresh and cheeky boy. Master and man are well mated. They are the sort of worldly crosses which poor John Bull has to bear. J. B. has the sympathy of Canada.

That lamentably fatal accident on the C.P.R. near Sudbury was all the more noticeable for the reason that occurrences of that sort are so seldom heard of on the C.P.R., says the Hamilton Spectator. No railway in America, magnitude considered, has anything like so clean a record as this great transcontinental line. The evidence in this case, so far as it has come to light, shows that no human agency can be held responsible. The accidental closing of a compressed air valve by a swinging bolt while the train was speeding along, was something no one could have foreseen. That so many human lives were sacrificed in the resulting collision none will regret more than the railway officials themselves, even though they are entitled to the mournful satisfaction that it was not through any fault of management that the accident occurred.

Never get excited in an emergency. Keep cool, even if you fall into a vat of boiling lard. Do not lose your presence of mind—if you ever had it—but quietly await rescue. Many Oddfellows in Toronto Next Week

Toronto, Sept. 15. — Preparations went on again yesterday for the reception and entertainment of the army of Oddfellows who will take possession of the city next week. About 200 members had registered by 10 o'clock last night at the information bureau at 43 Yonge street, and the task of assigning the members to their respective hotels was attended to by an efficient staff of clerks. William Wanty, the chairman of the Hotel Committee, has secured a list of 1,300 boarding-houses, which will accommodate 10,000 persons, in addition to a number of small hotels that will take as guests between 500 and 600. The large hotels will also supply room for several hundred more, and Mr. Wanty stated that he had many places in reserve to accommodate the arrivals over the above figures. Camps are also being erected at the Exhibition Grounds to accommodate the Patriarchs Militant, who comprise the crack drill corps of the order, which are arranged in cantons, of which probably 35 will come to the city. These cantons will hold daily prize drills and degree staff competitions for the exemplification of subordinate lodge, encampment and Rebekah degrees. The first canton to arrive yesterday was Canton Loyal, of Martin's Landing, O. Each canton is composed of 25 to 50 men.

The influx of delegates to-day will be heavy, several specials being due to arrive this morning. By Wednesday 35 brass bands are expected to have arrived in the city to participate in the big parade.

Proof in Belleville.

Mrs. Green, of East James street, has proven what Anti-Pill can and will do.

"I think Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill is the best medicine I have ever known," says Mrs. A. V. Green. "For years I have suffered with constipation, and I got so bad at last that no ordinary dose of medicine would help me. I suffered with piles a great deal.

"I am a working woman and always very busy, and I got nothing to help me till I tried Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill. I found this a very satisfactory remedy and can cheerfully recommend it to any who may be suffering as I did."

Right at home here in Belleville is this case, and Mrs. Green will cheerfully testify to anyone in earnest what she knows of Anti-Pill, the Twentieth Century Cure for Constipation.

A FACT PROVEN.

Should Convince Even the Most Skeptical of Its Truth.

If there is the slightest doubt in the minds of any that Dandruff germs do not exist, their belief is compelled by the fact that a rabbit inoculated with the germs became bald in six weeks' time.

It must be apparent to any person therefore that the only prevention of baldness is the destruction of the germ—which act is successfully accomplished in one hundred per cent. of cases by the application of Newbro's Herpicide.

Dandruff is caused by the same germ which causes baldness and can be prevented with the same remedy—Newbro's Herpicide.

A Roslin Wedding.

The home of Mr. John Wilson, Roslin, was the scene of a very interesting event, when his youngest daughter, Mary was united in marriage to Mr. John Waterhouse, Frankford. At one o'clock the bridal party entered the parlor to the strains of the wedding march, played by Miss Alice Wilson, where Rev. Mr. Spencer performed the ceremony in the presence of only the immediate friends. The bride wore a very pretty gown of white panama and carried flowers. They were unattended. The presents were both costly and numerous. The groom's present was a diamond and ruby ring. After the wedding dinner Mr. and Mrs. Waterhouse left for their home at Frankford.

Mary had a little lad
Whose face was fair to see,
Because each night he had a drink
Of Rocky Mountain Tea.

Eye Strain

(Brain Strain)

By far the commonest cause of NERVOUSNESS.

The actual underlying cause of many ills, which the thousands of sufferers are vainly trying to relieve by drugs. Really the most dangerous evil that now exists, because it gives rise to brain irritation of so many different degrees. The most unsuspected, and therefore, neglected menace to the general health, because the very brain-strain enables the person to "see alright."

Very often completely changes the person's disposition, by the intense irritation of nerve-centers in the brain.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

BASEBALL.

A Good Bench Story.

"Ever hear of a man being released five times in a row by one manager?" said Artie Whelan, who pitched for Charleston in the South Atlantic League,' and every time after the manager handed the player his ten-day notice he had to change his mind till the last time and then it went.

'Columbia had an outfielder named Powell, who didn't hit often, but when he did the ball was lost. He couldn't field much and one day, after he had fallen down on an easy fly and had failed to pole anything safe at the bat Manager Granville handed him his notice. It so happened, that the man who was to take Powell's place didn't get into Columbia in time to get into the game, so Powell played. With two on bases and two out he spanked the ball over the fence and won the game 3 to 2. The release was called.

"Well, Powell fell off again and got his walking papers once more. Then came a tight pinch next day and when Granville saw Powell on the bench he put him in to bat for the pitcher. He had the homer with him again, and the people made a strong play for his retention. The release was off.

"To cut it short this happened four times, and every time Powell made good with the homer. Granville came to the conclusion that all he needed to get the ball driven over the fence was to release Powell and send him to bat' Along came a close one at Charleston. We were one run to the good, and I was pitching. Two were out and men on second and third when Powell came up. I saw Granville talking to him, and then he handed Powell a paper. Everybody on the Columbia bench grinned. I knew he was releasing Powell preparatory to the regular clean up. I threw him three fast ones round his neck and he fanned.

"That time the release went."

Railway News.

A contemporary thus discusses the railway situation in this province: The Grand Trunk held closely to the lake shore, because it was there that fifty years ago the principal centres of population were situated. The Ontario and Quebec division of the C.P.R. took a route well to the north, Peterboro being the most important point on the line between Toronto and Ottawa. It has developed a good deal of local traffic in the district traversed. Evidently in planning their east and west line Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann believed there was better prospect for the picking up of traffic between the G.T.R. and C.P.R. lines than by going to the north and trenching on the Canada Atlantic's territory, so the Canadian Northern is to be built between the two older roads. Dozens of villages that have heretofore been many miles from a railway will be served. It will be observed that the three great railways will all in the end have trunk lines of triangular form in Ontario. There are the three lakefront lines, if we may so call them. Then there will be, three lines running north from Toronto—the G.T.R. northern division, the C.P.R.'s Toronto-Sudbury line and the Canadian Northern's James' Bay branch now nearing completion. Away to the north these branches will connect with the main east and west lines or transcontinental divisions. The natural conditions have forced each of the three great roads to follow the same general strategy. As a result older Ontario is gridironed with railways. From Ottawa east to the vicinity of Montreal the Canadian Northern will hug the south shore of the Ottawa River."

The S. S. Lesson

The International Sunday School Lesson Committee has prepared the course of study as far as the end of the year 1911. The whole of the present year being spent upon the "Words and Works of Jesus" as recorded in the Synoptic Gospels, next year will be devoted to the times of the Patriarchs and the Judges. Five lessons will be given to the history of the "Beginning of Mankind;" from the sixth lesson of the first quarter to the sixth of the second quarter the subject will be "The Beginnings of God's Chosen People;" and the rest of the year to "The Beginnings of the Hebrew Nation," as far as the end of the period of the Judges. In the first six months of 1908 the theme will be "The Witness of John (Fourth Gospel) to Jesus," and in the latter half of the year the "United Kingdom" (Saul, David and Solomon.) The whole of 1909 will be spent on the Acts and Epistles, studying "The Expansion of the Early Church." In 1910 the books from Kings to Malachi will furnish the text, the subject being "The Kings and Prophets of Judah and Israel," the subtopics being "The Division of the Kingdom, the Captivity and the Return," or "The Glory, Decline and Restoration of Israel." The year 1911 will be devoted entirely to Matthew's Gospel, the general theme being "The Gospel of the Kingdom."

Fire at Wellington.

Picton Gazette: Yesterday afternoon between 4 and 5 o'clock, Mayor Ferrington received a telephone message from Wellington to the effect that a big fire was raging there, and that Mr. Niles' canning factory had been destroyed, together with four or five houses, and owing to the direction and velocity of the wind off the lake, the place was doomed. Assistance, it was thought, would be required, in the way of hose, as Trenton had been asked to send her fire engine to save the place from destruction. There was hurrying and scurrying among the members of the fire department so that, in the event of the hose being required everything would be in readiness. Later information conveyed the intelligence that earlier reports had been greatly exaggerated; that a small frame house near Mr. Niles' canning factory had been destroyed, that the canning factory had caught fire, which, however, had been extinguished through the well-directed and vigilant efforts of a bucket brigade. There was, therefore, no necessity for sending hose to save the ambitious village from destruction There is a lesson, however, in the circumstances which it will be well for the people of Wellington, as well as Bloomfield and other places in the county to bear in mind, and that is that provision must be made, sooner or later, to cope wtih the fiery element, should it at any time visit them. The valuable properties in the two places above mentioned in the way of factories, stores, private dwellings, etc., all demand that something be done and that promptly, to safeguard property against destruction by fire.

ALL BRITISH SHIP.

FLOATING EXHIBITION TO SAIL ROUND THE WORLD.

Prominent representatives of British commerce and shipping were present at Birkenhead Eng., at the formal opening of a floating exhibition of "all British" goods, which is presently to commence a voyage round the world. For the purpose the liner Cambroman, of the Dominion Line has been chartered, and the fittings of three decks have been reconstructed into what resemble miniature markets, containing everything, from a steam roller to a pin, from a cake of soap to a sea-fishing net

The purpose of the expedition is to push the interests of British trade abroad, but especially in our oversea possessions. American and German and French trade rivals have applied for accommodation on the Cambroman, but have been refused.

Immediately the floating exposition is complete it will sail around to London for exhibition, thence to Canada, the West Indies, South Africa, India, Japan, Australia, New Zealand and South America. Forty ports are to be called at, and the voyage will occupy more than 12 months. No fewer than three hundred leading British firms have joined the exhibition, and their representatives will accompany the ship.

CITY OF BELLEVILLE

TREASURER'S SALE OF LANDS IN ARREARS FOR TAXES.

City of Belleville, Province of Ontario, To Wit:

By virtue of a warrant issued by the Mayor under the Corporate Seal of the City of Belleville, to me directed, bearing date the twenty-eighth day of August, 1906, commanding me to levy upon the lands in arrears for taxes, with the costs. Said list of lands for sale in the municipality for taxes has been prepared and copies may be had in my office, and the said advertisement empowering such list is being published in The ONTARIO GAZETTE on September 1st, 8th, 15th and 22nd, 1906.

I hereby give notice that unless such arrears and all costs are sooner paid I shall proceed to sell the said land, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the payment of the taxes and costs thereon, at the City Hall, in the said City of Belleville, on Tuesday, the 4th day of December, A.D. 1906, at the hour of eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

DAVID PRICE,
City Treasurer.

COMPENSATION.

Yes, dear, you're married hard and fast,
While I am fancy free.
Just think of all the things you miss,
That yet may come to me!

You have your husband and your home,
Alack! and none have I,
But still fair castles I may build,
That almost reach the sky.

My husband may be dark or fair,
He changes every day.;
Sometimes his hair is golden brown
The next 'tis iron grey.

His eyes are black, as dark as night,
Or else are azure blue;
And for his living—let me think—
What shall I have him do?

At times he is a business man,
With but a month for play,
And then, again, with gold galore,
All life a holiday.

My house, you know, is not like yours
But can be moved at will,
And oft is on a mountain-top,
Oft by a shady rill.

Or else perched up on a rugged cliff,
Where waves dash high and break
Or yet upon a smiling plain,
Or by a sunny lake.

And how we travel he and I!
We visit many lands,
While you to your real fireside
Are chained by iron bands.

Then ask me not to change my lot,
Contentedly I roam,
Imagination's fairy realm,
The universe—my home.

President-Elect Penna of Brazil has been eulogizing the German settlers in that country as "all animated by one ideal, that of working for their adopted country." If this praise is merited it will none the less sound unpleasantly to the official Germans at home, if there is any truth in the general impression that they hope some time to acquire a political footing in South America by means of these very settlers or their descendants.

Capt. Amundsen, a Danish navigator, has sailed in a fifty-ton ship, the Gjoa, from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific across the northern end of North America. He entered the northern sea by way of Davis Strait from the Atlantic, and passed out of it by Bering Strait into the Pacific. It has long been known that a northwest navigable passage existed, but a trip from one ocean to the other was never completed until it was made by Capt Amundsen. The interest in the event is a purely scientific one.

The State of Connecticut has for deer a close season that does not terminate till 1911. Deer have already under its protection become so abundant that they are working much destruction to the farmers, and are frequently seen on the streets of towns and cities. This goes to prove that if deer were left unmolested by men with dogs and guns they would be as tame as sheep or goats, just as moose become tame and indolent like cattle. A moose ranch would certainly be feasible, and would probably be profitable, if the ground were wisely selected.

The German custom of planting fruit trees by the roadsides is practiced largely in New York State. Long stretches of highway in many localities were fringed on either side with apple trees of the choicest varieties, consisting principally of the Baldwin, Northern Spy, Rhode Island Greening and Roxbury Russet, but owing to neglect immense numbers never came into bearing. Referring to this roadside tree planting, a correspondent of the Boston Cultivator writes that it is a beautiful and inspiring sight during a fruitful season to witness the heavily laden trees bordering either side of the highway, with the many laborers engaged in picking and barrelling the highly colored fruit grown on land that in many other localities is allowed to be occupied with a worthless growth of weeds and brush.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

THE ESCAPE.

"You've struck the wrong man," said Capt. Kettle. "I'm most kinds of idiot, but I'm not the sort to go ramming my head against the French government for the mere sport of the thing."

"I was told," said Carnegie wearily, "that you were a man that feared nothing on this earth, or I would not have asked you to call upon me."

"You were told right," said Kettle. "But those that spoke about me should have added that I'm not a man who'll take a ticket to land myself in an ugly mess unless some one pays my train fare and gives me something to spend at the other end. I'm a sailor, sir, by trade or profession, whichever you like to name it, and on a steamboat, when a row has been started, I'll not say but what I've seen it through more than once out of sheer delight in wrestling with an ugly scrape. Yes, sir, that's the kind of brute I am at sea.

"But what you propose is different; it's out of my line; it's jail-breaking, no less; with a spell of seven years in the jug if I don't succeed, and no kind of credit to wear, or dollars to jingle, if I do carry it through as you wish. And may I ask, sir, why I should interest myself in this Mr. Clare? I never heard of him till I came in this room half an hour ago in answer to your advertisement."

"He is unjustly condemned," Carnegie repeated, as though he were quoting from a lesson. "He is suffering imprisonment in this pestilential place—Cayenne, for a fault which some one else has committed; and unless he is rescued he will die there horribly. I am appealing to your humanity, captain. Would you see a fellow-countryman wronged?"

"I have only to look in the glass for that," retorted Kettle. Most people's kicks come to me when I am anywhere within hail. And you'll kindly observe, sir, that I've nothing but your bare word to go on for Mr. Clare's innocence. The French courts and the French people, by your own admitting, took a very different view of the matter. They said with clearness that he did sell those plans of fortresses to the Germans, and, knowing their way of looking at such a matter, it only surprises me he wasn't guillotined out of hand."

"It is my daughter who is sure of his guiltlessness in the matter," said Carnegie with a flush. "And," he added, "I may say that she is the chief person who wishes for his escape."

Capt. Kettle bowed, and fingered the tarnished badge on his cap. He had a chivalrous respect for the other sex.

"And it was she who made me advertise vaguely for a seafaring man who had got daring and the skill to carry out so delicate a matter. We had 200 answers in four posts: can you credit such a thing?"

"Easily," said Kettle. "I am not the only poor devil of a skipper who's out of a job. But £100 is not enough, and that's the beginning and the end of it. There's two ways of doing this business, I guess, and one of them's fighting, and the other's bribery. Well, sir, a man can't collect much of an army for twenty 5-pun' notes; and as for bribery, why, it's hardly enough to buy up a deputy customs inspector in the ordinary way of business, let alone a whole squad of Cayenne warders with a big idea of their own value and importance.

"Then there's getting out of French Guiana, and getting back, and steamer fare for the pair of us would come to more than a couple of postage stamps. And then where do I come in? You say I can pocket the balance. But I'm hanged if I see where the balance is going to be squeezed from. No, sir; a hundred pounds is mere foolishness, and the kindest thing I can do is to go away without further talk. By James, sir, I can say that if you'd given me this precious scheme of your own, there's a man in this room who would have had a smashed face for his impudence; but, as you tell me there's a lady in the case, I'll say no more."

Capt. Kettle stood up, thrust out his chin aggressively, and swung on his cap. Then he took it off again and coughed with politeness. The door opened, and the girl they had been speaking about came into the room. She stepped quickly across and took his hand.

"Capt. Kettle," she said, "I could not leave you alone with my father any longer. I just had to come in and thank you for myself. I knew you would be the man to help us in our trouble. I knew it from your letter."

The little sailor coughed again, and reddened slightly under the tan. "I'm afraid, miss," he said. "I am useless. As I was explaining to your—to Mr. Carnegie, before you came in, the job is a bit outside my weight. You see, when I answered that advertisement, I thought it was something with a steamboat that was wanted, and for that sort of things, with any kind of crew that signs on, I am fitted, and no man better. But this—"

"O, do not say it is beyond you. Other prisoners have escaped from the French penal settlements. It only requires a strong, determined man to arrange matters from the outside, and the thing is done."

Kettle fidgeted with the badge on his cap. "With respect, miss," said he, "what any other man could do, I would not shy at; but the thing you've got here's impossible; and the gentleman will just have to stay where he is and serve out the time he's earned."

"But, sir," the girl broke out passionately, "he has not earned it. He was accused unjustly. He was condemned as a scapegoat to shield others. They were powerful—he was without interest; and all France was shrieking for a victim. Mr. Clare was a subordinate in a government office through which these plans of fortresses had passed. He was by birth half an Englishman, and so it was easy to raise suspicion against him. They forged great sheaves of evidence; they drew off attention from the real thieves; they shamed him horribly; and then they sent him off to those awful Isles de Salut for life. Yes, for life—till age or the diseases of the place should free him by death. Can you think of any thing more frightful?"

"A friend!" she repeated. "Has not my father told you? I am his promised wife. Fancy the irony of it. We were to have been married the very day he was condemned. It was my money and my father's which defended him at the trial, and it nearly beggared us. And now I will spend the last penny I can touch to get him free again."

Capt. Kettle coughed once more. "It was upon a question of money that Mr. Carnegie and I split, miss. I said to him a hundred pounds would not work it, and there's the naked truth."

"But it must," she cried. "It must! You think us mean—niggardly. But it is not that; we can raise no more. We are at the end of our funds. Look around at this room; does this look like riches?"

It did not. They were in a grimy Newcastle lodging, au troisieme, and at one side of the room the flank of a bedstead showed itself in outline against a curtain. The paper was torn and the carpet was absent, and from the shaft of the stairway came that mingled scent of clothes and fried onion which is native to this type of dwelling.

Carnegie himself was a faded man of 50. His daughter carried the recent traces of beauty, but anxiety had lined her face, and the pinch of res angustoe had frayed her gown. All went to advertise the truth of what the girl had been saying, and Kettle's heart warmed toward her. He knew right well the nip of poverty himself. But still, he did not see his way to perform impossibilities, and he lifted his voice and said so with glum frankness.

"I am not remembering for a minute, miss," he explained, "that I am a fellow with a wife and children dependent on my earnings. I am looking at the matter, as though I might be Mr. Clare's relative, and I have got nothing new to tell you. A hundred pounds will not do it, and that is the end of the matter."

"Well," said Carnegie with a heavy sigh, "I will scrape up £120, though that will force us to go hungry. And that is final, captain. If my own neck depended upon it, I could not lay hands on more."

Capt. Owen Kettle's face wore a look of pain. He was a man of chivalrous instincts; it irked him to disoblige a lady; but the means they offered him were so terribly insufficient. He did not repeat his refusal aloud, but his face spoke with eloquent sympathy.

The girl sank into one of the shabby chairs despairingly. "If you fail me, sir," she said, "then I have no hope."

Kettle turned away, still fingering the tarnished badge on his cap, and stared drearily through the grimy windowpanes. A silence filled the room. Carnegie broke it.

"Other men answered the advertisement," he suggested.

"I know they did," his daughter said; "and I read their letters, and I read Capt. Kettle's and if there is one man who could help us out of all those that answered, he is here now in this room. My heart went out to him at once when I saw his application. I had never heard of him before, but, when I read the few pages he sent, it came to me that I knew him intimately from then onwards, and that he and no other in all the world could do the service which we want. Sir," she said, addressing the little sailor directly, "I learned from that letter that you made poetry, and I felt that the romance of this matter would carry you on where any other man with merely commercial instincts would fail."

"Then you like poetry, miss?"

"I write it," she said, "for the magazines, and sometimes it gets into print."

"Would you mind shaking hands with me?" asked Capt. Kettle.

"I want to do so," she answered, "if you will let that mean the signing of our contract."

Capt. Kettle held out his fist. "Put it there, miss," said he. "The French government is a lumping big concern, but I've bucked against a government before and come out top side, and, by James, I'll do it again. You stay at home, miss, and write poetry, and get the magazines to print it, instead of those rotten adventure yarns they're so fond of, and you'll be doing Great Britain a large service. What the people in this country need is nice rural poetry to tell them what sunsets are like, and how corn grows, and all that, and not cut-throat stories they might fill out for themselves from the morning newspapers if they only knew the men and the ground.

"If I can only know you're at home here, miss, doing that, I can set about this other matter with a cheerful heart. I don't think the money will be of much good; but you may trust me to get out to French Guiana somehow, even if I have to work my way there before the mast; and I'll collar hold of Mr. Clare for you and deliver him on board a British ship in the best repair which circumstances will permit. You mustn't expect me to do impossibilities, miss; but I'm working now for a lady who writes poetry for the magazines, and you'll see me go that near to them you'll probably be astonished."

Turn now to another scene. There is a certain turtle-backed isle in the Caribbean sea sufficiently small and naked to be nameless on the charts. The admiralty hydrographers mark it merely by a tiny black dot. The American chartmaker has gone further and branded it as "shoal," which seems to hint (and quite incorrectly) that there is water over it at least during spring tides.

The patch of land, which is egg-shaped, measures some 180 yards across its longer diameter, and, although no green seas can roll across its face, it is sufficiently low in the water for the spindrift to whip every inch of its surface during even the mildest of gales. On these occasions the wind lifts great layers of sand from off the roof of the isle, but ever the sea spews up more sand against the beaches, and so the bulk of the place remains a constant quantity, although the material whereof it is built is not two months the same.

As a residence the place is singularly undesirable, and it is probable that, until Capt. Owen Kettle scraped for himself a shelter-trench in the middle of the turtle back of sand, the isle had been left severely alone by man throughout all the centuries.

Still human breath was hourly drawn in the immediate neighborhood, and when the airs blew toward the isle, or the breezes lay stagnant, sharp, human cries fell dimly on Kettle's ear to tell him that men near at hand were alive, and awake, and plying their appointed occupations. The larger wooded island, which lay a long rifle shot away, was part of the French penal settlement of Cayenne; and the cries were the higher notes of its tragic opera. But they affected Capt. Kettle not at all. He was there on business; he had been at much pains to arrive at his present situation, and had earned a bullet scar across the temple during the process; and, as some time was to elapse before his next move became due, he was filling up the intervening hours by the absorbing pursuit of literature.

He squatted on the floor of his sandpit, with his teeth set in the butt of a cold cigar, and rapped out the lines of sonnets, and transferred them to a sheet of sea-stained paper. He used the stubby bullet of a revolver cartridge from lack of a more refined pencil, and his muse worked with lusty pace—as, indeed, it was always wont to do when the world went more than usually awry with him.

To even catalogue the little scamp's adventures since his parting with Miss Carnegie in that Tyneside lodging, would be to write a lengthy book; and they are omitted here in toto, because to detail them would of necessity compromise worthy men, both French and English, who do not wish their traffic with Kettle to be publicly advertised.

Suffice it to say, then, that he made his way out to French Guiana by ways best known to himself; pervaded Cayenne under an alias, which the local gendarmerie laid bare; exchanged pistol shots with those in authority to avoid arrest; and, in fact, put the entire penal colony, from the governor down to the meanest convict, into a fever of unrest entirely on his especial behalf.

He was put to making temporary headquarters in a mangrove swamp, and completing his preparations from there, and, to say the least of it, matters went hardly with him. But at last he got his preliminaries settled, and left his bivouac among the maddening mosquitoes, and the slime and the snaky tree roots, and took to the seas again in a lugsail boat, which he annexed by force of arms from its four original owners.

A cold-minded person might say that the taking of that boat was an act of glaring piracy; but Kettle told himself that, so far as the French of Cayenne were concerned, he was a "recognized belligerent," and so all the manoeuvres of war were candidly open to him. He had no more qualms in capturing that lugsail boat from a superior force than Nelson once had about taking large ships from the French in the bay of Aboukir

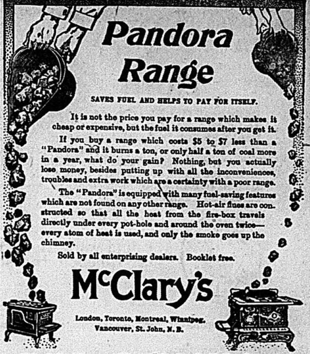
TEETHING TIME.

Every mother dreads that period in her baby's life known as teething time. The little gums are swollen, inflamed and tender; the child suffers greatly and is so cross and irritable that the whole household is on edge. All this is changed in homes where Baby's Own Tablets are used. This medicine allays the inflammation, softens the swollen, tender gums, brings the teeth through painlessly. In proof Mrs. W. C. McCay, Denbigh, Ont., says: "I have found Baby's Own Tablets a splendid medicine at teething time. My baby was very sick at that time, was cross, restless and had no appetite. After giving her the Tablets there was a marked improvement, and in the course of a few days she was not like the same child. The Tablets are just the medicine to help little ones over the trying teething time." You can get Baby's Own Tablets from any druggist or by mail at 25 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.



Pandora Range

SAVES FUEL AND HELPS TO PAY FOR ITSELF.

It is not the price you pay for a range which makes it cheap or expensive, but the fuel it consumes after you get it.

If you buy a range which costs $5 to $7 less than a "Pandora" and it burns a ton, or only half a ton of coal more in a year, what do your gain? Nothing, but you actually lose money, besides putting up with all the inconveniences, troubles and extra work which are a certainty with a poor range.

The "Pandora" is equipped with many fuel-saving features which are not found on any other range. Hot-air flues are constructed so that all the heat from the fire-box travels directly under every pot-hole and around the oven twice—every atom of heat is used, and only the smoke goes up the chimney.

Sold by all enterprising dealers. Booklet free.

JESUS SILENCES THE PHARISEES AND SADDUCEES.

Mark 12: 13-27. Memory verse 27. Golden Text— "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

HISTORICAL SETTING.

Time—Tuesday, April 4, A. D. 30. The next day after our last lesson. Three days before the crucifixion.

Place—The court of the Temple at Jerusalem.

Place in the Life of Christ—The last day of the public ministry of Jesus.

14. Master, we know that thou art true, so that you will see clearly without prejudice, and speak the truth without fear or favor. Carest for no man. You do not let their rank or authority influence your opinions, be they friends, or enemies, Jews or Romans. But teachest the way of God in truth, you can give a divine answer to our question, one of absolute truth. Thus "they feigned themselves to be righteous" (Luke), to be sincere inquirers after the path of duty.

Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar, or not? Give us a plain answer, yes, or no. "The word rendered tribute is properly the Roman word census. It denoted, as used by the Jews, the annual poll tax which was levied on the people for the treasury of the Roman emperor.

15. Shall we give, or shall we not give? In v. 14 the question is as to principle. In this verse it is, shall we act on this principle at any cost? What shall we do about it? They expected an answer of yes or no. No matter which side Jesus took, it seemed impossible for him not to seriously damage his cause. If he decided for either party, the other would be his enemy. He was sailing between Scylla and Charybdis. If he said it was not right to pay taxes, he would be in collision with the whole Roman power, which would regard and treat him as a criminal. His career would be ended. If he said it was lawful for the Jews, the great mass of the people would be against him, and he would lose his hold upon them: for they hated the Roman Government, and one of the first and greatest things they expected of the Messiah was deliverance from this subjection to a foreign power. Jesus saw through their plan, and bade them: bring me a penny, that I may see it. The silver penny was worth about 16 cents.

16. Whose is this image. The emperor issuing the coin usually had his image stamped upon it: as is common in modern times. And superscription, the inscription upon the coin, the name and titles of the emperor. They said unto him, Caesar's.

17. Rendered to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's. "The image and superscription on the coin implied the sovereignty of Caesar. The Jews by using the coins, in so far were served by the Roman Government. They therefore owed it some service in return. This service was the payment of taxes." They received very much more than this from the Roman Government, in protection, in roads, etc. And even if they received them under protest, so long as they used these advantages, they should pay their part of the expense. The payment did not endorse the right of the Government, but only the honesty of those who took benefits from it. "The things that are Caesar's" included "not only the taxes, but everything to which Caesar was entitled as a legitimate ruler." Christ's word meant, Fulfil your obligations to the State, since your very coins show that you have such obligations: do your duty in this sphere. But God's image is stamped on your souls. You belong to God. You have duties of love and trust and obedience to him. Fulfil those duties as faithfully as you should those to an earthly ruler. Bring your whole life under the sway of conscience and righteousness.

"Jesus said in effect; The kingdom of God is not of this world; it is possible to be a true citizen of the kingdom, and yet quietly submit to the civil rule of a foreign potentate. A shrewd reply, safe and true, by which Jesus outwitted his crafty foes."

18. The Sadducees were a "liberal," materialistic, aristocratic party, showing sympathy with foreign influences: a small but influential body, confined chiefly to Jerusalem, and disappearing after the destruction of that city. Which say, rather "saying," there is no resurrection, i.e., no life beyond the grave, nor any spiritual world, no spirit, no angels. (Acts 23: 8.)

19. If a man's brother die . . . and leave no children, etc. The case comes under the law of Levirate marriage given in Deut. 25: 5-10. The object of the law was to prevent the extinction of a family.

20. Now there were seven brethren, and the wife of the first, according to this law, became the wife of each one in succession.

23. Based on this occurrence, stated as a fact, came the question, In the resurrection . . . whose wife shall she be of them? "Crude as the question may seem, it must have offered serious difficulties to the Pharisees, who held materialistic views as to the future state." "The law provides for these successive marriages . . . which the resurrection would make simultaneous" and, therefore, contrary to the divine law.

24. Do ye not therefore err, because ignorant of two things, (1) of the scriptures. They fail to see how the "doctrine of the resurrection and a future life underlies many a Scriptural utterance," as Jesus proves below. (2) Of the power of God, who is able to raise the dead, and who transforms the material body into a glorious spiritual body, in which earthly marriage has no possibility or place. As soon as they get above the material into the spiritual their difficulty vanishes.

25. Are as the angels which are in heaven. There will be no less love, no less intimate union of soul with soul, no less delight in one another, but it will not take the form of marriage. The spiritual is the immortal.

26. Jesus proceeds to prove that there is a resurrection, from those Scriptures which even the Sadducees accepted as from God. And if there is a resurrection there can be no impossibility in the case they put forward. As touching the dead, as bearing upon the fact of the resurrection, and, therefore, of the future life. Have ye not read (in Ex. 3: 6). How in the bush. God spoke from within the bush. Or it may mean, as in the R.V., that the words are found "in the place concerning the Bush."

"The Sadducees based their denial of the resurrection on the alleged silence of Scripture, and on the incredibility of existence after the death of the body (Josephus, Wars of the Jews, ii.: 8: 14.) Christ demolishes their premises by showing that the Scripture is not silent, but teaches the reality of existence after death."

27. God is not the God of the dead, therefore these patriarchs are not dead, not put out of existence. This proves the fact of a future life, and, consequently, of the resurrection as the means to immortal life. The resurrection means the continued existence beyond death, the bringing into conscious living those who have died on earth.

Old Time Rain Gauges.

THE DAIRYMAN'S MILK CAN AND THE RANCHMAN'S WAGON BOX.

"This thing of having a Government rain gauge to tell you exactly how much rains spoils the fun of a shower," said a man who was reared in the country. "When I was a boy after a rain everybody gathered down at the post office to talk it over

There must have been somewhere about two inches and a half of moisture dropped, 'cause my wife left a washpan out and it was rained full. Of course, it was flaring some at the edges, which might make it look like it rained moe 'en it really did,' began one.

"Then there was the farmer whose way of judging rainfall was by a two gallon jar that sat just a few feet from the corner of the house. He always refaced his figures. 'Of course you can't exactly always tell, about that jar, for it was settin' purty close to the eaves and some might have got blowed into it from the roof.'

"There was a dairyman who always tried to tell how much water fell by milk cans that were narrower at the mouth than any place else. His estimates were always smaller than his neighbors, and the only way he could explain the discrepancy was by the fact that the cloud seemed to break right over his farm. But if his figures were conservative there was an old ranchman who lived up on Sand Creek, about three miles away, that made up for them. He never got down to the post office until about 11 o'clock.

"'It was the dadboldest rain I ever saw,' he always began. 'Gullywasher, goslin' drownder, toad killer of a rain.'

"It always rained more up on his ranch than anywhere else in the whole country. His rain gauge was a tight bottomed wagon box three feet wide and twelve feet long. After a thunderstorm that lasted about two hours, one morning, he came in and said that wagon box was rained clean full. Fourteen inches in two hours. That established a record that hasn't been beat yet to my knowledge. As a further verification of the accurateness of his rain gauge he said that the prairie dog holes in the low places were spouting water from a foot to a foot and a half high when he came along."—Kansas City Times.

A Racecourse Tragedy.

A Melbourne despatch says that one of the most awful murders ever committed on a racecourse was perpetrated on the flat at Flemington. Among the bookmakers was Donald McLeod, the victim of the outrage. Decoration was well backed for the Grand National Steeple, and as the race was nearing its end the horse named was well ahead of the others. McLeod got off the box on which he was standing and walked away. Instantly the cry of 'welsher' was raised, and a crowd of from 300 to 500 men set on McLeod. Although he was a powerful young man he was knocked down, and then, in pure blind fury, the crowd kicked him to death. His head was battered, his nose was broken, and the strange thing appears to be that the injuries below the shoulders were not, so far as outward appearances go, very serious. Ted Nelson, a Sydney pugilist, and several others tried to interfere, and laid about them with their fists and boots, but they were overborne. The police arrived and two troopers with their horses succeeded in clearing a ring around the man as he lay on the ground. Four foot constables assisted, and then every time an opening occurred someone would rush forward and administer a kick to the prostrate body. Finally it seemed to dawn upon the crowd that the man was dead, and they desisted. The body was carried to the casualty room, and life was pronounced extinct. It appears that McLeod's neck was broken by a kick which he received from behind.

Signs of Despair

(London Free Press.)

A great scientist is said to have discovered in the radiobe crystal a half living organism which is the missing link between animate and inanimate matter, and which, like the lion in the Miltonic account of the creation is, "pawing to get free its hinder parts."

It is at a similar stage of the game that the Ontario Liberal party seems to present itself just now, in the pangs of a new birth. In other words, the crysalis of the reformed Liberalism is struggling to merge into the butterfly, minus G. W. Ross.

In this process of political evolution the new-born element looks to Sir Wm. Mulock as the embodiment of "sheer vigor and robust health."

Strange what rejuvenating elixir must reside in the judicial bench!

Was this a mere ruse to escape from the cares of the conjunctive Labor Bureau, which Sir William found irksome to plutocratic susceptibility, or the provision of a comparative sinecure for a really and truly tired out partisan?

The humor of the Liberal situation at Toronto is enhanced by the reappearance of the old war horse fresh from the sanitaria, boasting of replenished soundness in wind and limb and readiness to fulminate before the walls of Jericho like the jolly old blowhard that he ever was.

Mr. Ross protests that he is still It. "We can win," he confidently declares, "and we remain loyal to the good old cause of Reform."

Mr. Ross shouts as at the head of the battle, and in the midst of reorganized party movements, but a new born element appears stolid, deaf, indifferent. They look for another sign of revival, for a new sword bearer, and their eyes fall upon the bronzed, weather-beaten political veteran who has stood aside, professedly more wearied than Mr. Ross ever was, who shook off his armor as a burden to enter into that rest for the partisan has been which Laurier readily hands out to deserving strivers.

Or is not rather the mention of Sir William's name designed in the interest of the old war horse himself? Is it not a most beautiful snub to the aspirations of juniors who are sized up as impossibles?

The obvious reflection among the rank and file is that of the two Ross is still preferable. He is a tried captain, who "knows the ropes." He can give pointers to one who has never dabbled in Ontario affairs, has always roved around Ottawa, and who has retired from the larger field from loss of interest, and admitted decay of powers.

There is a Danish proverb which runs, "No man is so tall that he need ever stretch; and none so small that he need never stoop." It might be added that no one is so rich that he need not read the advertisements.

UNEQUALLED SERVICE.

In all the world over, among all the railways of all nations, there is one line whose service stands pre-eminent—The Lake Shore Railway. Luxurious comfort, speed, safety, punctuality, personal attention and service, have here reached their highest development. Lake Shore trains run on time and when connections are to be made the schedule is so arranged that long waits and delays are avoided. In a word, here is a railway whose service in every respect leaves nothing to be desired. Travellers of experience know this to be so and all are careful to see that their tickets read "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." You can obtain full information by addressing J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

A GERMAN ROMANCE

HOW A COUNT GAVE UP A PRINCESS FOR A SHOP GIRL.

New York, Sept. 14.—In the wedding yesterday at Ossining of Count Hans Ferdinand Von Hochberg, heir to the famous castle and great estates of Rohnstock, playmate and companion of the German crown prince, nephew of Princess Marie Von Saxe Weimar and cousin of the Grand Duke Michael Von Saxe Weimar, a remarkable romance was revealed.

It is a story that has agitated the German court, that has caused the resignation of the superintendent of the royal opera in Berlin, that has estranged a dozen ancient families, that has separated a father and a son.

Duty alone destined Count Ferdinand Von Hochberg to marry a woman so far beneath his station in life. Louise Carow was her name, the daughter of a workman, while he was in daily attendance at the imperial palace as an officer of the first regiment of German foot, the Kaiser's personal bodyguard.

GAVE UP A PRINCESS.

The line of duty that he chose was beset with many obstructions. First of all there came the disgrace, for at the time of his decision he was to have married a princess of one of the reigning families. Then there was his father's threat of disinheritance, later carried out. Lastly there was dismissal from the army.

But he was determined in his decision in spite of the supreme sacrifices that had to be made, and when they sent him to America, hoping that he would forget, he gave up the remittance that came monthly and engaged himself as a chauffeur in Tarrytown. Then he cabled to Louise Carow, the shop girl, and begged her to come out to be his wife.

He had married her morganatically in Germany but that marriage, at the request of his father and his mother, was set aside by the Kaiser, so he married her again yesterday in the presence of a little daughter that had been born to them a week ago. The ceremony was performed in a boarding house where Count Ferdinand had a small hall bedroom.

When it was over they christened the baby. Her mother chose the name It is Johanna Louise, and by the domestic relations law of the state of New York the child through the marriage is legitimatized.

PLAYMATE OF CROWN PRINCE.

The young Ferdinand is a son of Count Bolko Von Hochberg, the lord of Rohnstock Castle in Silesia, the superintendent of the royal opera in Berlin and the composer of Clausine and Waerwolf. His mother, formerly the Princess Christene Eleanor Von Schonaich Caraloth, is a cousin of the Crown Princess Cecilie, and as a youth Von Hochberg attended the Bloen Military College with the Crown Prince William. There they became inseparable friends and at his wedding the latter appointed the young Count Von Hochberg chief usher

Early in life a military career was mapped out for Von Hochberg and after his graduation from Bloen he was appointed a lieutenant of the first regiment of German Foot and became attached to the Kaiser's personal bodyguard. He was continually at court, whether at Berlin or Potsdam. When his marriage with the princess was arranged the betrothal was announced with great ceremony in the palace, and the count and his bride-to-be were both presented to the Kaiser.

STUCK TO THE SHOP GIRL.

The day of his wedding drew close at hand when the discovery was made about Louise Carow, a shop girl, whom the count had met in a glove store. He told his father of the facts and of his decision to marry her. But the former tried to frustrate, offering the girl a life compensation.

The sudden discovery caused a great commotion at court, and the cancellation of the count's wedding in May scandalized all Germany. At last, in desperation, his father sent him to America, allowing him to travel on a monthly remittance.

But the young man, although he cared not a whit for the girl, could not bring himself to abandon her or even consent to pensioning her. He had come here with letters to many prominent persons and among several he was put up at the Metropolitan Club.

He obtained a position as chauffeur and succeeded in the last. Confident that he could make a living here in America, he cabled Louise Carow, the shop girl, and told her to come to him.

She escaped the country with difficulty, and when the police in Berlin discovered she had gone they cabled the German consul here to prevent her land at Ellis' Island on the ground that she was an immoral woman. But the warning came too late. The count and the shop girl had met.

The military court of honor is to try the young count as an officer of the guards next month and because an officer of his personal body guard is to be tried, the Kaiser himself will preside.

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Free to You, My Sister

Free to You and Every Sister Woman Suffering from Woman's Ailments

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from woman's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand woman's sufferings. What we women know from experience we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish Discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial, and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book "WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER," with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young.

To mothers or daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and painful or irregular menstruation in young ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality, who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days treatment is yours, also the book. Write to-day, as you may not see this offer again. Address

BELLEVILLE PEOPLE WERE IN C.P.R. WRECK.

MR. AND MRS. OWEN REED HAD PAINFUL EXPERIENCE—MR. M. DULMAGE WAS SQUEEZED—KINGSTON'S COURAGE.

It turns out that several people from this city were on the excursion train which was recently wrecked near Sudbury. Their names are:—Mrs. W. J. Magrath and little son, Adrian; Mr. and Mrs. Owen Reed, Mr. M. Dulmage, Mr. Henry Pitman, of the Front of Sidney, was also a passenger on the ill-fated train.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Reed live on College Hill, this city, and are a much respected couple. A Toronto paper publishes the following about them in its account of the scenes and incidents of the wreck;

WHAT SURVIVORS SAY.

Among the latter were an aged couple from Belleville, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Reed, Mrs. Reed lay in bed, her face white and her hands moving nervously, but she did not complain of the pain from which she suffered. Her grief was, first, that Mr. Reed, a sturdy old gentleman of 71, was injured; and, second, that she must defer her promised visit to her daughters in the West.

"They don't know that we were on that train," said the old lady, "but," and her eyes filled, "I would so like to see my children and grandchildren."

"So you shall, my dear, so you shall,' and Mr. Reed smiled. Then his injured back protested, and he repressed a groan with difficulty.

"You see," continued Mrs. Reed, forcing back the tears, "one of my daughters I haven't seen for thirteen years. And I was enjoying the journey so much, too. I suppose it was the expectation that I should soon see them all out West. You enjoyed it, too, father, didn't you?"

"Yes, indeed, mother, but the doctor says you will be able to move about before long. You are bruised from the waist up, but the doctor doesn't think any bones are broken. You will be all right," and Mr. Reed smiled cheerfully, and tenderly.

ALL THEIR CLOTHES GONE.

"But I have no clothes to wear. Our valises are gone, and nearly everything I had was torn off me. I don't think I have even a pocket handkerchief," and Mrs. Reed sighed again.

"Yes," assented Mr. Reed, "you were wedged in pretty tightly, but we'll not worry about the clothes. I am not much better off than you, as I have neither coat nor overcoat. However, we are both alive, and that's a good deal to be thankful for.'

"We were sitting together, in front of the smoking partition," said Mr. Reed. "The crash came, and Mrs. Reed was hurled head-first into the debris. I managed to extricate myself without much difficulty, and then got my wife out. The Schades sat in front of us. They had been eating breakfast, and Schade was in the act of hanging the lunch basket above his head, with both arms stretched up, when something hit him on the head or face, knocking him down. When he came to, I heard him cry, 'Save my wife! Save my wife! Mrs. Schade was not killed, and may recover though her injuries, combined with shock and sorrow, make her condition serious.

"An effort may be made to take her home. She mourns for her dead children, and, like Rachel of old, refuses to be comforted. The poor little girls were lifeless when the wreckage bearing them down was removed. Schade was able to walk down to the undertaker's yesterday, to view the bodies. He is almost as heart-broken as his wife."

She looked long and lovingly at her consort for life. "Truly, after all, I have reason to be thankful. We are spared to each other, and we have our children."

Mr Reed had not left the scene of the wreck before acquainting himself with the situation.

"From what I saw," he said, "I am convinced that my wife and I owe our lives to the fact that the cylinder of the air brake rested above us, and thus gave us protection."

C. W. Baker, cousin of Percy Baker, while in the washroom, called on Mr. and Mrs. Reed, and the dear old people were visibly affected by his thoughtfulness.

"It was so nice of him to think of us, poor young man. His cousin is dead, you know, and while he himself is not hurt, he is under a heavy nervous strain."

BAKER'S PREMONITION.

Mrs Reed was right when she said that young Baker was almost distraught. He was willing to tell reporters what he remembered of the awful ordeal, but his feelings overcame him more than once.

"Apart from a premonition of misfortune, for which I can't account, my first warning," began Baker, "was a crash, followed by a loud yell. I jumped from my seat and ran down the aisle to the rear. There was a ripping, tearing noise, and the timbers were wrenched apart. A young woman from Caledonia, joined me, and, rushing to the door, we leaped out. Neither of us was at all badly hurt. My cousin Percy, who was killed, was injured about the head and his neck crushed."

C. W Baker's brother, who heard of the disaster, was told that C. W. was killed. When he reached Sudbury he found that he still had a brother, but was bereft of a cousin. They went home with the remains last night.

The following reference is made to Mr. Samuel Kingston, of Frankford, who seems to have faced death like a man;

KINGSTON'S COURAGE.

"That man Kingston, of Frankford, Ont., who died at night, had nerve. He sat on the bank while waiting for the doctor to examine his broken leg, and wrote a postal card. Then, on the way to Sudbury, he pencilled another on the window ledge. Even then the death grip was on him."

OLD COUPLE COMFORTED EACH OTHER.

Another Toronto paper has this to say of Mr. and Mrs. Owen Reed;

"In a room at the Balmoral Hotel were Mr. and Mrs. Owen Reed, of Belleville, who were going to visit their daughters in the West, one of whom they had not seen in thirteen years. They were sitting just behind the Schades. Mrs. Reed was buried and pinned under debris from head to waist. She was caught under timbers and badly bruised and shaken up. Only the cylinder of the air brake on the baggage car which telescoped the colonist prevented them from being crushed to death. Mr. Reed had his hip bruised and also had his back strained. He lost two coats and Mrs. Reed nearly all her clothes. Mr. and Mrs. Reid are 71 and 66 years old respectively, and both suffered severe nervous shocks. But in a quaint and cheery manner they comforted each other, and they hope to be able to return home in a few days."

AN AWFUL EXPERIENCE.

Perhaps most terrible was the white drawn grief-stricken face of one man with a silent, worn, lame little woman beside him, who watched beside two boxes. The boxes contained the bodies of their two little daughters, both killed in the wreck.

WILL NOT RETURN HOME YET.

Relatives in this city have heard from Mr. and Mrs. Owen Reed. They say they will not yet return home, but will continue on their journey and visit their children and grandchildren in the Prairie Province.

Will Build Trent Canal.

Ottawa, Sept. 14. — The Trent Valley Canal, it is understood, will be completed as speedily as possible.

This work has been going on for a number of years and a good deal of work has been done. Now it is estimated that two years will enable the work to be finished from Georgian Bay to Peterboro at a cost of half a million and another year will complete the canal from Georgian Bay through to Trenton on Lake Ontario.

Committed For Trial

TYENDINAGA YOUTH CHARGED WITH A SERIOUS OFFENCE.

(Deseronto Tribune.)

Nelson Maracle, a lad hailing from the Township of Tyendinaga, was arrested on Friday last in Prince Edward County, by County Constable Wilson, on a warrant charging him with having committed a serious offence. There were also two charges of theft against him, one of which was for stealing a watch from the dwelling house of Peter Hardy, jr., on the Reserve, and the other was for stealing four silver-plated spoons. He was brought before the Police Magistrate on Saturday and after hearing the charges read was remanded until Tuesday, to enable the County Crown Attorney and the Crown witnesses to attend.

On Tuesday Maracle appeared in custody, and after hearing sufficient witnesses to make a prima facie case His Worship formally committed him for trial on the first and second charges and dismissed the last mentioned. The magistrate declined to try the case, chiefly on the ground of the defendant's youth. He said if proved guilty he felt at a loss what to do with him, and preferred that a higher court should in that case determine the punishment. The Crown Attorney appeared for the prosecution. The accused was undefended. It would appear that this is not the first time he has been accused of an assault on the same girl. Last year he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment for a precisely similar offence, the short sentence being on account of his extreme youth.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

MISS TROTTER'S RECITAL.

The elocutionary recital given in the Carman opera house last evening, by Miss Gertrude Trotter, was not largely attended. The programme consisted of readings by Miss Trotter; orchestral music; piano duet by Mrs. Decton and Miss Riggs; vocal duet by the Misses Leslie.

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY."

A New York paper thus speaks of Hal Johnson, a clever actor who comes with "The Arrival of Kitty" to the Carman next Tuesday night; "When dressed as a girl, impersonating Kitty in "The Arrival of Kitty," at the Casino, it is a very hard matter to distinguish that Hal Johnson is not the real thing. He is about as clever, most of his audience thinks, as any female impersonator that has been seen here in a long time. Tall and slender, pink of skin, with very small feet and hands he has little trouble in effectually disguising himself, so that, in playing that he is somebody else, a vaudeville actress with whom an uncle has had high times in the past, he succeeds in getting everybody into a peck of trouble. Johnson, who is a young man, manages to squeeze himself into a 21 inch pair of corsets, and that gives the straight front effect to a nicety. His costumes are exact counterparts of the ones worn by Miss Eveleen Dunmore, the star of the company. He dresses the part 'from the skin out.'"

BLACK DIKE BAND COMING.

The fact that the famous Black Dike Band, which has been winning golden opinions all over Canada, is coming to this city next Wednesday evening, will be welcome news to local music-lovers. The band is new to this country, but in the few places where it has appeared it has won unlimited praise. Press and people have been unanimous in their indorsement, declaring the band to be not only vastly out of the ordinary as a musical organization, but capable of the most beautiful and impressive effects. The playing of this band has often been likened to the music of a cathedral organ. An idea of the merit of this organization may be had from the following list of prizes and medals it has won. It has won 104 first prizes, sixty-two second prizes, thirty-three third prizes, ten fifth prizes, sixty-one special prizes for soloists, on twelve occasions has tied with other bands, twenty-seven prizes for marches and glees, fifty gold medals, thirty silver medals, twenty challenge cups, five uniform prizes and sixteen glee prizes.

Young ladies should be most particular about their looks. Don't attire yourself carelessly; be faultlessly dressed, and Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea will do the rest. Tea or Tablets, 35 cents.—D. M. Waters.

Hot Weather HEADACHES

Tablets, powders, drugs, of any kind will NOT cure headaches. Simply because they never reach the CAUSE of the headache.

What causes headaches? Poisoned blood, always.

If the bowels are constipated—

If the kidneys are weak—

If the millions of pores of the skin are not active—

There are bound to be headaches.

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

cure headaches because they cure the cause of headaches. They do not drug the nerves. They go to the root of the trouble, invigorate and strengthen the liver and increase the flow of bile into the bowels, which cure constipation. Act directly on the kidneys, heal all kidney irritation. Act on the skin, stimulate and open the pores.

With bowels, kidneys and skin all healthy and working in harmony, the blood is kept pure and rich and there can be no headaches.

McINTOSH BROS.

FOR ONE CHURCH AGAIN

Archbishop Bruchesi For Unity as of Centuries Ago.

His Grace Expresses His View of Proposed Union of Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and Other Churches — Proceedings In Methodist Conference — Committees at Work—Women In the Churches.

Montreal, Sept. 15.—A notice of motion before committee on missions of the Methodist General Conference stands in the name of C. W. Cate, K.C., "That the French work be discontinued."

In connection with this and the general question of the conference, as well as the proposed union of Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregationalist and other churches, Archbishop Bruchesi, Roman Catholic, was yesterday asked the feeling of the church in Quebec, with regard to the Methodist Conference and the proposed union.

Archbishop Bruchesi For Amity.

"It is not a matter in which I desire to interfere, or to say anything," he began. "I do not want to say one word that might be misunderstood. I have great respect for all those gentlemen who are gathered together in other assemblies or churches, for, of course, church means an assembly, but to me it is not a question of churches. I know only one church; I have my own convictions, of course, and to me there is only one church."

It was not a question of churches or unity, he continued, for there was but one church established by the Lord.

"Other sheep I have which are not of this fold," he quoted from St. John x. 16: "Them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

"My desire and prayer every day," he remarked in further conversation, "is that there shall be one church again as there was four or five centuries ago."

Committees at Work.

The conference yesterday was still indisposed, if not unprepared, for work. The committees are in full swing, and it was agreed during the afternoon to give them free play till Monday afternoon, so that business should then be forward enough to take up in full conference.

There was a little ruffle over a proposal of the memorial committee that in the election of the general superintendent the book steward, the connexional editors, the secretaries for missions, education, superannuation, temperance and young people's societies, the department or committee charged with the work should nominate three or more persons after which any members of conference would have the privilege of nominating any other person. After considerable debate the motion to adopt was lost.

Women In the Church.

A promising debate on the status of women in the church was started by the proposal to change "layman" or "laymen" in the discipline to lay member or members.

Dr. Langford feared it would arrest the whole question of union at this stage of the negotiations to make such a fundamental change.

Mrs. MacLachlan, Mrs. Radford, Miss Richardson, Mrs. Morkill and Mrs. Luddington, represented the W. C. T. U., the first-named being spokeswoman. Women's work, she declared, knew no denominationalism. She hoped it would not be long before her Methodist sisters had, like herself, a voice in their church management.

Deputations were received from the Dominion Alliance and the Bible Society, and votes of thanks were passed to them.

UNITED STATES INTERVENES.

Taft to Sail For Cuba to Assist Peace Measures.

Washington, Sept. 15.—It is officially announced that Secretary of War W. H. Taft will leave Washington for Cuba on Sunday, Sept. 16. He will be accompanied by Robert Bacon, assistant Secretary of State. They will go direct to Key West and leave at once for Havana on board a naval vessel.

President Roosevelt has written to President Palma a letter in which he affirms that the situation is such that advantage must be taken of the treaty right to protect the interests of United States residents of the island. The letter concludes:

"I am sending to Havana the Secretary of War, Mr. Taft, and the assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Bacon, as the special representatives of this Government, who will render such aid as is possible toward those ends."

Fighting Has Ceased.

Havana, Sept. 15.—The emissaries sent into Havana yesterday by Alfredo Zayas, the Liberal leader, informed the Associated Press that Zayas has telegraphed to the insurgent commander of every Province to cease fighting because negotiations were pending for surrender to the American naval commander.

The extra session of congress called by President Palma completed one sitting yesterday afternoon, the business for which it was summoned, namely, the granting to President Palma of the fullest powers not already constitutionally possessed by the executive for carrying on the war.

Steamer Sinks Barge Cornwall.

Montreal, Sept. 15.—In the Cornwall Canal yesterday morning the steamer Dundurn, owned by the Mackay Co. of Hamilton, ran down and sank the Montreal Transportation Co.'s' barge, Cornwall. The latter was grain-laden, and bound for Montreal.

Work on Trent Valley Canal.

Ottawa, Sept. 15.—It is said that the Trent Valley Canal will be pushed to a speedy completion. The work has been going on piecemeal for many years.

In Dresden 300 years ago "epicures" used to eat Venetian oysters that had been on the way three weeks.

"MONEY TO BURN AND WE BURN IT"

Home Life Concluded—Counsel Insinuates, But Witness Denies—Ex-Manager Pattison Tells Mr. Tilley That He Did Not "Divide" With Mr. Stratton, and Never Said So — Dr. Oronhyatekha's Evidence.

Toronto, Sept. 15.—At the beginning of the morning session of the Royal Insurance Commission yesterday, Dr. Oronhyatekha wished a statement made to the Insurance Department, giving the actuary's table, which was the cause of the opposition of the Department at the time the bill providing for the Dominion charter put on record. He claimed the statement to be wholly inaccurate, as proved by after events. Mr. Shepley acquiesced, and the statement was put on record and will be gone into later.

Counsel continued the reading of the memorial, and discussing same with the chief ranger. Witness took objection to many of the ideas set forth by the committee. He contended that the impression was made that the Foresters had not an assessment system, which was erroneous.

Certain correspondence in reference to the issuing of certificates by the Insurance Department, between Mr. Fitzgerald and Hon. George E. Foster, was read. Witness explained that in some of the United States the order was not recognized as a fraternal society, and the order wanted a certificate from Mr. Fitzgerald to show that they were.

Illinois, he said, had not allowed them to do business inside the state, because Ontario prevented any foreign society entering its confines.

"Then the method you sought was that Illinois fraternal societies be admitted to Canada?"

"Yes, and we got it under section 40, when Canadian territory was thrown open. Only Ontario had the exclusion act."

On Dec. 23, 1891, an application was made for registration on the assessment plan. The society did so to get inspection.

"Did Mr. Fitzgerald's report end your attempt to get what you wanted?"

"Money to Burn."

In 1895 the order sought an amendment to their act. It was again opposed by the Department, and some of the old line companies, though not so bitterly.

"I presume they had enough sense to know it was a useless fight," said Dr. Oronhyatekha, who first said the old line companies did not oppose the bill, but he was reminded by Mr. Hunter, his assistant, that three representatives of the companies were lobbying against the bill.

"How many were lobbying for it?"

"Two, Mr. McGillivray, the secretary, and myself. I believe Mr. Laidlaw also helped us."

Mr. Shepley then read from a memorandum of the superintendent of insurance stating objections to the bill. It showed that insurance literature of the order said that no assessments were made on deaths. This seemed to conflict with the "safety clause" giving power to assess if there happened to be no surplus.

The witness said that no such assessments had been made, and they had never been in sight of such a necessity.

"We have money to burn, and we burn it for the benefit of the order," he said.

He also stated that the power to levy the assessments under the safety clause had been modified so that this may be done not only if there is absolutely no surplus, but no available surplus.

Mr. Shepley took up certain articles written against this plan of insurance. The witness said that the history of the Foresters had put actuarial science and the paid writers of the old line companies in a very bad light.

Expenses Compared.

The following expense sheet of the order in comparison with other companies was handed to Mr. Shepley by the witness and put in as an exhibit.

All Canadian companies:

Number of policies in force Dec. 31, 365,698; amount of insurance, $404,004,860; expense per policy, $15.61; expense per $1,000 in force, $14.13.

I. O. F.:

Number of certificates, including sickness, 278,788; amount of insurance, $248,801,000 Expense per policy, $2.10; expense per $1,000 in force, $2.35.

Witness was asked the reasons why in a business like the Foresters how reserves were compulsory.

"We pay no surrender value, and, therefore, we do not require an excess of premium. What we require is a premium rate barely exceeding the cost of risk so that in after years the risks are carried on the same principle as the old line companies, and the no dividend to earn for stockholders is an element in the reduction of cost. Then again the benefit of a medical selection makes considerable difference.

Continuing, Oronhyatekha said that the fraternal society had a better chance than the old line company because they would deliberately accept impaired lives by charging a higher rate or adding to the years. The mortality rates were therefore greatly increased. Witness also pointed out that the Foresters had the power to terminate a member's policy of the order under certain circumstances, such as drunkenness.

Mr. Shepley went over many tables in company with the witness, who pointed out the various advantages the Foresters' tables had.

Home Life Concluded.

The enquiry into the Home Life was concluded in the afternoon. Mr. Pattison said Mr. Stratton made a verbal agreement with witness that the price should be $90,000, and the sum was fixed six weeks or two months prior to the date of the agreement, Oct. 12. No suggestion had been made to witness that he should pay any part of the $90,000 to the People's Life, from the start of the negotiations.

Who was the first person to mention the amount to you on Oct. 12?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"Mr. Stratton."

"What did he say?"

"You will have to reduce the amount from $90,000 to $80,000," and I did not agree at first. It was on the way to the bank that the amount was accepted. There was no discussion."

"Did Stratton want the $10,000 for himself?"

"No."

"Did you not tell a director that you had to divide with Mr. Stratton?"

"No."

"Will you swear that?"

"Yes."

"Did you leave any inference?"

"No, although I told a director that I had to pay some brokerage."

"What broker?"

"Commission, I mean."

"To whom?"

"Mr. McPhillips."

"How much?"

"$1,500."

"Who is McPhillips?"

"A reporter on an insurance journal."

"Did he originate the deal?"

"Yes."

"Why did you not tell us this before?"

"I was never asked."

Who Commenced the Deal.

"Certainly you were asked?" retorted Mr. Tilley. "Who commenced the deal?"

"Mr. McPhillips."

"How much did he want?"

"$3,000."

"You gave him $1,500?"

"Yes."

"Did he know you got private money?"

"The transaction between Mr. Stratton and myself was not private."

"Did you tell McPhillips you were getting $80,000?"

"No."

"How is it possible that you said something to this director to leave the inference already mentioned?"

"It might be, although those are all the payments I made out of the $80,000."

Mr. Tilley went into the transaction at the bank. Witness received at the Traders' Bank $80,000, and $29,220, in $1,000 and $500 bills, from Mr. Stratton. He did not know where Mr. Stratton got the money. The money was handed to witness in a roll of bills, which Mr. Stratton had apparently already counted.

Mr. Pattison deposited the money in three different banks.

"Why was the money divided in that way? Did you want it known you had that amount of money?"

"I had no objection."

"Did you know that Stratton had the other $10,000?"

"I did not."

Witness told Mr. Stratton that he was disbursing some of the $80,000 for the stock, but did not tell him the amount he was giving away, although he did not mislead him. He gave Mr. Stratton the impression that it wasn't all profit he was getting after the $90,000 deal was agreed upon.

Mr. Pattison denied that he told Mr. Stratton he was paying quite a sum to his directors, and to the directors that he was dividing up with Mr. Stratton.

A Post Entry.

Mr. Stratton was recalled again. The Peterboro' bank book was produced and examined by Mr. Tilley.

"I see the $10,000 cheque written in here. When was it written in?"

"It was entered yesterday. I telephoned the teller to get the book and bring it here. He found the entry was not there and he inserted it."

Mr. McLaughlin spoke out and said that no inference could be made that there was anything wrong because the totals were correct. Judge MacTavish accepted the explanation.

The evidence on where the money came from, and how Stratton got it, and how much it was, and the number of bills, and how Pattison got it, and where he got it, and McCutcheon's agreement, etc., was all rehashed.

Mr. Stratton denied that he ever intended to keep the $10,000, although he deposited it in an account that was $16,000 overdrawn.

CANADA'S NEW TARIFF.

To Provide From 10 to 75 Per Cent. Preference.

Ottawa, Sept. 15.—The Government intends to have the tariff schedule ready to be presented to Parliament when the House meets either on Nov. 8 or Nov. 15, and orders have been given to the statistical branch of the Customs Department to have the trade and navigation returns ready for the beginning of November.

There will be practically a new tariff, as provision is made for a maximum, a minimum and a preferential list. This will give a three-column list, instead of one as at present.

But while the changes will be numerous, the effect will not be to either increase or materially reduce the existing tariff.

The preference, which is now extended to Britain, and certain other countries where tariffs are as favorable to Canada, as Canada is to them will be changed so that some items may have a higher preferential rate and some lower. There will be as low as a ten per cent. preference, and as high as 75.

London Teamsters Strike.

London, Sept. 15.—The teamsters of the Shedden Co. and the Michigan Central Railway went out on strike yesterday morning. It is understood the men demand $45 a month and shorter hours. The men refuse to return to work until they get the increase. The Lake Erie and Dominion teamsters are in sympathy, and are likely to go out.

Lehigh Follows the Lead.

New York, Sept. 15.—It was announced yesterday that, to take effect on Nov. 1, or as soon thereafter as possible, the maximum passenger rate per mile on the Lehigh Valley Railroad system will be on the basis of 2 1-2 cents.

Fire In Flesherton.

Flesherton, Sept. 15—The Globe Hotel and the stables, at Ceylon, Flesherton Station, were totally destroyed by fire yesterday morning, due to a defective chimney. Loss $3,000; insurance $1,500 in Waterloo Mutual.

CAPTAIN MAINTAINED ORDER.

Threatened to Shoot Men Attempting to Escape Wrecked Steamer Oregon.

Valdez, Alaska, Sept. 17.—Passengers and seamen of the steamer Oregon, which ran on the rocks at Hinchinbrook Island Thursday night took the life boats the morning after the steamship struck and were picked up several hours later by the lighthouse tender Columbine. The Columbine arrived at Valdez with the passengers and mail yesterday morning. The revenue cutters sent to the wreck have not returned.

The Oregon was three miles off her course east of Hinchinbrook and struck the rocks 50 yards from shore, where the bank is perpendicular. There was no chance to land. She slid off until she listed in a few feet of water, with several fathoms under the stern. She is hard and fast aground, filled with water to the second deck and will probably go to pieces in the first swell of the ocean.

The captain' maintaind good discipline, and threatened to shoot men who wanted to get off in a life boat, after which his orders were obeyed without question, and all got off without accident.

The Oregon is an iron vessel of 1,650 tons net register. She was built at Chester, Pa., in 1878, and has had a checkered career.

Aground In the Pacific.

Midway Island, North Pacific Ocean, Sept. 17.—The Pacific mail steamship Mongolia, a sister ship of the Manchuria, is aground on Midway Reef. The ship is being lightered and her passengers are being landed safely. The weather is fine and the sea smooth.

The steamship Manchuria, which went ashore on Rabbit Island, Aug. 20, has been floated.

Eleven Smacks Lost.

St. John's, Nfld., Sept. 17.—The Government yesterday despatched the cruiser Fiona with provisions and other supplies for the fishermen who were shipwrecked in the Straits of Belle Isle during Friday night's gale and later sought temporary refuge with the keeper of the lighthouse on Belle Isle.

In all eleven fishing vessels returning here from Labrador with the season's catch, were driven ashore an.. the 140 men, women and children aboard barely escaped with their lives. The smacks with their cargoes are total losses.

The Fiona will bring the fishermen here.

Gen. Trepoff Dies In Bed.

Nevertheless Russia's Man Of Iron Was Partly a Victim of the Assassins as His Final Illness Was Superinduced by Constant Fear of Taking Off at Hands of the Bomb Throwers—Dictator of Russia a Despot.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 17.—Gen. Dmitri Feodorovich Trepoff, commandant of the imperial palace, died Saturday evening.

For several months he had been suffering from a heart affection, and asthmatic troubles, and sometime ago was forced to abandon a large amount of the routine work, included in his duties as commandant of the palace, but remained in office and was still in touch with the Emperor.

In Perpetual Fear of Death.

Gen. Trepoff's death was due to natural causes; but the revolutionists can at least claim partial responsibility for his end, as his illness was superinduced by the contant strain due to perpetual fear of death, which, with lack of exercise and recreation during the last two years, wore down his originally superb constitution. He had become so nervous of late that recently, when a military attache of a continental power was unexpectedly ushered into his room, Gen. Trepoff sprang to his feet and stood in an attitude of defence, but when he recognized the visitor he sank into his chair all unnerved.

His Death a Surprise.

The gravity of his malady was recognized, but his death came as a great surprise. He was able to be up and around to the very last.

Gen. Trepoff's death will not have any immediate influence on the policy of the Government, which, for the time being at least, is firmly in Premier Stolypin's hands.

Gen. Dedloulin, former prefect of St. Petersburg, will succeed the late Gen. Trepoff as commandant of the imperial palace.

A Despot by Inclination.

Gen. Trepoff was in many respects a remarkable man. He was a natural despot, a tyrant by inclination, education and conviction. He was one of those men who have constantly appeared, like evil geniuses, in Russian history, just at the time when conditions were most promising for putting an end to despotism, turning the Russian rules from Liberalism back into paths of reaction. Trepoff was a police master.

Dimitri received his education in the swell page corps and followed his father's footsteps in the police department. He rose quickly, and, after acting as police master at various provincial towns, he attracted the attention of Sergius, then Governor-General of Moscow. Trepoff soon became Sergius' right-arm in fighting the revolutionary student agitation. He broke up the meetings of the liberal-minded students in the university with police, and in the streets with Cossacks, and had hundreds flogged and many of them sent into exile.

Trepoff's life was many times attempted, but he always escaped.

Dictator of Russia.

When the Grand Duke Sergius was assassinated he was named Governor-General of Moscow. The situation at the capital, calling for the strongest man in Russia, Trepoff was summoned to St. Petersburg and given the command of the Imperial Guard and made Governor-General of the city. He took up his residence in the winter palace, and became, in fact, if not in name, dictator of Russia. During the recent trying weeks his name was anathematized and plot after plot to kill him was discovered and frustrated.

Countess Tolstoi Ill.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 17.—Countess Tolstoi continues seriously ill, and Prof. Inemanoff, surgical expert of the St. Petersburg University, has been summoned to Yasnaya Polyana for a consultation.

Royalty In Finland.

Helsingfors, Sept. 17.—Emperor Nicholas and Empress Alexandra and the Emperor's suite hunted Saturday on Kalfholm. Their Majesties hitherto had never landed on the mainland. It is expected that the imperial party will sail for Peterhof Monday.

STEALS FROM I. C. R.

Accountant and Cashier Arrested For Embezzlement.

Halifax, N. S., Sept. 17.—Stanley W. Fiddler, accountant, and Harry W. Roome, assistant cashier, employes of the I. C. R. freight department, were arrested Saturday night at the instance of District Superintendent Jarvis, on the charge of embezzling $1,200 from the I. C. R. freight department.

It is alleged that by collusion between the two men the thefts have extended over a period of 18 months without being discovered.

The preliminary examination will take place to-day.

Teamsters Get Increase.

London, Sept. 17—The striking teamsters returned to work on Saturday on the promise of the same rate of wages as the Toronto teamsters receive, namely: $44 a month. The Pere Marquette teamsters were informed that they would receive $45 a month, ten hours a day, and extra pay for overtime, and they also returned to work.

On Charge of Murder.

St. Thomas, Sept. 17.—At the Police Court Saturday morning, Mrs. Louisa Smith was arraigned on the charge of having murdered the new-born babe of her daughter, Lizzie Smith, in the Victoria Block. The aged prisoner, who was dressed in black, appeared very nervous in the box. The adjournment was made till Monday at 9.30 a. m.

Three Victims Buried.

New Hamburg, Sept. 17.—The funeral of three of the victims of the Canadian - Pacific Railway disaster, near Sudbury, took place here on Saturday. The bodies left the homes of the victims at the same hour. They were Henry Herman, Wm. B. Puddicombe and Thomas B. Puddicombe.

Child's Corpse Cremated.

Montreal, Sept. 17.—The body of the seven-year-old daughter of Joel Gagnier was nearly consumed by fire yesterday, owing to the display of the death chamber, in which the child's body lay, taking fire from lighted candles.

Auto Driver Fined.

Preston, Sept. 17.—Lea Audrus of St. Catharines, whose automobile scared a horse and nearly caused the death of its one-armed driver here Saturday, was fined $10 and costs by Magistrate Webster for exceeding the speed limit.

Fourteen Inches of Snow.

Telluride, Col., Sept. 17.—Snow to the depth of 14 inches fell on the mountains of west Colorado Saturday. Below an elevation of 10,000 feet the snow melted as it fell.

Canada's Foreign Trade.

In the fiscal year which closed on June 30th last, Canada's foreign trade totalled $550,854,246. This is largely in excess of the trade returns for any previous year. It equals one-sixth of the foreign trade of the United States, although that country has fourteen times our population. When we proceed to analyze the factors that make up this imposing whole, we find some causes for dissatisfaction. For instance, the balance of trade is materially against us While our imports amounted to $291,267,616, our exports reached only $256,586,630. In other words, foreign countries sent into Canada thirty eight million dollars' worth more goods than Canada sold to them. Looking to the United States returns we find the trade balance is constantly in its favor. Its exports last year reached one and three-quarter millions, while its imports amounted to a little over one and one-quarter millions.

The significance of these figures will appeal to every thoughtful business man. Canada's fiscal policy, based upon purely patriotic lines would develop a foreign trade in which our exports would exceed our imports, in preference to sending, as we do now, nearly forty millions of Canadian money to other countries to balance our trade account.

Another striking feature of the returns is that the increases are largely on the side of imports. In 1906 we imported goods to the value of $294,267,616, as against $266,834,417 in 1905. That is, we increased our imports in a single year by $28,000,000 In the United States the larger increase was in exports. In 1905 the exports of that country were $1,518,561,666 and the imports $1,117,513,071, or, together, $2,636,074,737 in value. In 1906 its exports were $1,743,763,612, and its imports $1,226,615,379, or, together, $2,970,378,991 in value. That is, in the single year it increased its exports by $225,201,946, and its total foreign trade by $334,304,254. But the important point to note is that the exports exceed the imports in value by upwards of half a billion dollars, and one-fifth of this enormous balance was piled up at Canada's expense. Last year we sold to the United States goods to the value of $83,546,406, whereas we bought from that country merchandise of the total value of $180,729,458. In other words, the balance in our neighbor's favor in its trade with Canada last year was but little short of $100,000,000.

It should be possible, without unduly burdening any section of our people to re-adjust the duties so that our trade with the U. S. might be placed on a better basis. It is not encouraging to observe that while they purchase from us only $83,000,000 a year, we import of their produce to the value of $180,000,000.

Discussing the Knox amendment to the Dog by-law, an alderman said yesterday; "It has not in any way lessened the dog nuisance. There has been a little added revenue, but the increase has come from people who obey the laws and look after their dogs. The people whose dogs are a nuisance have not paid the added tax, in fact it's doubtful if they paid any. Things will not improve till the police enforce the by-law. If they would make a few examples there would be an improvement."

Improvements are being made to the local post office, but among the said improvements (so far as we have heard) is not one looking to putting the office on a Civil Service footing once more. That is the improvement most needed. However, people will be, able to gaze on and admire the new fittings, even if they don't get their mail on schedule time, and the underpaid clerks will be able to point with pride to the fact that, if they are not laying up many earthly treasures, they are working in more beautiful quarters, anyhow.

The following rather good story is told us; A gentleman driving an automobile on a country road met an old-fashioned high carriage in which was an old-fashioned couple. They jumped to the ground and the automobile came to a halt. The gentleman of the car stepped forward, and offered to help lead the horse past the machine. "Oh, never mind the horse, never mind the horse," said the old gentleman, "You lead the old lady past that thing, and I'll get the horse by all right."

The "Saturday Musings" man in the Hamilton Spectator, who occasionally turns out some very readable and clever things, thus discusses a matter which probably affects many other places besides Hamilton How many men in Belleville, Prinstance, are playing solitaire when they should have a partner in life? The Spec. man says:

"Visit any of the boarding houses in Hamilton and you will find a number of men of marriageable age who ought to be sitting by their own fireside, with a good wife and a few responsibilities playing on the hearthstone. This fireside and hearthstone business is a myth, but it sounds well when talking about the comforts of a home. Everywhere these disconsolate bachelors are to be met, of all ages and sizes. They mostly seem to be possessed of all that would make married life happy, yet they don't marry. This condition should not exists in a town like Hamilton, where the number of good-looking marriageable girls is far in excess of the number of bachelors. Talk to the young man and the young girls about the condition of affairs and both sexes will agree that single blessedness is a very unnatural way to live, and that the morals of society would be better if there were more homes and fewer bachelors and spinsters. Its causes, therefore, must be customs or habits repugnant to nature and reason. In the good old days when young people married for love the divorce courts were almost unheard of. Married life is the foundation stone of the morals of a community. To live alone makes both sexes selfish. There is room for a great work along the matrimonial line here in Hamilton."

Mr. J. A. Culverwell, managing director of the Northumberland-Durham Power Co., and Councillor Chas. A. Munson, of Cobourg, are in the city at present, looking over the power question in this city, their desire, if conditions are found favorable, being to supply Belleville with power from the now-famous Healey Falls. Messrs. Culverwell and Munson informed us to-day that they have had an engineer from Toronto looking over the situation in this city, and he finds that there is a splendid field for their product here, so much so, in fact, that the company will, ere long, make application to the City Council for a franchise. In reply to a question Mr. Culverwell said the distance for transmission of Healey Falls power to Belleville would be about 50 miles. This proposition, he said, had nothing to do with the Belleville City Council's application to the Power Commission, which body would have control of the rates to be charged by the Company with which Mr. Culverwell is connected.

Gospel First.

Toronto, Sept. 17. — "The first duty of the Christian minister," said Rev. George Jackson in Sherbourne St. Methodist Church yesterday morning, "is not to write books or try to run the British empire, or to give pointers to politicians, but to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

"There is no man who is a greater subject for pity than the minister, who, famed for his dexterity in curling and kindred sports, fails to impart to his flock the bread of life. The church is a spiritual organization for imparting spiritual gifts, and the preacher who can do anything else better than he can preach ought to resign his place in the pulpit and do it.

"If the pew goes to sleep it is generally the pulpit that has set the example."

Eye Strain

(Brain Strain)

By far the commonest cause of NERVOUSNESS.

The actual underlying cause of many ills, which the thousands of sufferers are vainly trying to relieve by drugs. Really the most dangerous evil that now exists, because it gives rise to brain irritation of so many different degrees. The most unsuspected, and therefore, neglected menace to the general health, because the very brain-strain enables the person to "see alright."

Some very remarkable CURES have followed the correction of hidden eye defects by our expert Optician.

IN PATHS OF PEACE.

War Secretary Haldane Says Great Britain Is Leading.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, Sept. 17.—Addressing a conference of the commanders of the local volunteers Saturday afternoon, War Secretary Haldane said he believed the time was nearer than most people thought when the work of compelling a reduction of the crushing burden of armaments would be undertaken.

Great Britain was trying to give a lead in that direction, the secretary said, but to ensure success other great nations must co-operate.

In the meantime, Great Britain could not afford to place herself in a weak condition, but must maintain her present means of defence in a high state of efficiency, as a guarantee for peace.

Peace Congress at Milan.

Theodora Moneta was unanimously elected president of the conference, and in a speech summarized the objects of the organization, which are chiefly to sanction the arbitration measures of The Hague tribunal, and to prepare a program for the second Hague conference.

YOUR HAT

May be a Stylish One, But It Makes Trouble.

A man usually buys a hat that's "in style," but the modern hat for men has lots to answer for.

Baldheads are growing more numerous every day. Hats make excellent breeding places for the parasitic germs which sap the life from the roots of the hair.

When your hair begins to fall out and your scalp is full of dandruff it is a sure sign that these countless germs are busily at work.

There is but one way to overcome the trouble and kill the germs—that way is to apply Newbro's Herpicide to the scalp—it will kill the germs and healthy hair is sure to result.

Graceful Letters.

WRITTEN BY BELLEVILLE DELEGATES TO AN ENGLISH NEWSPAPER.

Lieut.-Colonel Ponton, the Canadian gentleman, who made such an excellent speech at the luncheon, in writing for a paper containing an account of the "very pleasant and instructive visit to Luton," adds, "While we enjoyed thoroughly the hospitality and kind personal attention, we also appreciated fully the public spirit and progressive energy which evidently characterize your city."

In a subsequent letter he says:—"Certainly your Chamber of Commerce is entitled to all the honors, as energetic workers as well as tactful administrators, and it is not always that organizations of this kind—no matter how public-spirited are backed up so well by private or official munificence and hospitality. You will find that good practical results will follow, apart from the natural local pride, which always aids the spirit of work, both in employees and employers."

Mr. J. W. Johnson, ex-Mayor of the city of Belleville, Ontario, Canada, writes:—"I feel it to be incumbent upon me, as one of the Canadian delegates to the Congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire who participated in the splendid hospitality provided for the members during their visit to Luton, to express my appreciation of all that was done for us. But I wish to do more; I want to express my gratification at having had the opportunity of visiting several of the factories and of seeing for myself the actual production of British goods. I could see in the lines for which Luton is famous, the thoroughness and skill that have given the words 'British manufacture' the meaning that is everywhere acknowledged. Such goods as you make are altogether worthy of the markets of the world, and I was pleased to observe how widespread is your field. I cannot refrain from expressing my pleasure that my colleague Lieut.-Col. W. N. Ponton, of Belleville, Ontario, was one of the gentlemen called upon to respond to a toast at the delightful luncheon given by the High Sheriff, and that his speech was so well received. We have come to England and have been interested and instructed. Canada affords instruction and interest to English visitors. Canadians cordially extend the right hand of fellowship to their fellow subjects, whether they come as visitors or as transferring their residence from one part of the Empire to another part. We owe it to you and we owe it to ourselves and to our children that the great British heritage, the splendid patrimony that is ours, shall be preserved and strengthened and handed on in perpetuity. There is nothing like it in the world."

Tragic Sequel of Child's Dream.

Strathcona, Sept 13. — A curious co-incidence in connection with the death of young Gould, the English lad who was accidentally shot by A. E. Wilde, on Labor Day, and who was a nephew of Lord Kinnaird of Scotland, has come to light.

On the morning of the accident Gould told at the breakfast table how he had dreamed during the night that a man was chasing him with a gun. The members of the family joked him about the dream and after supper while Wilde was cleaning his guns he picked up one and pointing it at the boy, said, "I suppose this is the way the man was chasing you in your dream." To his horror the gun exploded while in his hands, the bullet striking the boy's heart, causing instant death. It is probable that the remains will be shipped to England for burial.

SHANNONVILLE.

The annual harvest festival service was held in Trinity Church, here on Sunday, 16th inst. The church was beautifully decorated, much artistic taste being shown in the arrangements. The congregation was large and the service very bright and hearty. The Rev. R. C. Blagrave, rector of Christ Church, Belleville, preached a most appropriate and well delivered sermon. The service was taken by the Rev. F. Fraser and Rev. A. L. Geen. Mrs. Bell ably presided at the organ and the choir sang well.

Mrs. Dixon Dodges

New York, Sept. 13. — With the now famous "living image of Pat," Mrs. Mary A. Dixon, who recently brought suit again Senator P. H. McCarren for $200,000, has mysteriously disappeared from the home she was occupying in Flatbush.

About two weeks ago Mrs. Dixon repudiated the statements she had made about McCarren, alleging that he was the father of the two-year-old infant that she had flaunted about Brooklyn as Patrick H. McCarren, jr. After making a statement that the allegations on which she had brought her suit for recognition as the wife of McCarren were false, she was quiet for a few days, and then was said to have made another statement. This was that she was not going to withdraw her suit, and that her other statement need not worry any one.

The general impression was that Mrs. Dixon had discontinued her suit for some reason.

All that the long political boss of Brooklyn would say when Mrs. Dixon was most clamorous for recognition was that he knew her, and that he also knew she had a husband who was living, and, consequently, he did not see where she could claim a common law marriage with him while her husband lived.

HUSBAND MADE AFFIDAVIT.

McCarren's lawyer in time produced an affidavit from her husband, and then followed the announcement by Mrs. Dixon that she had no claim against McCarren. But while the excitement lasted Patrick H. McCarren, jr., came in for quite an amount of notoriety. He was photographed in his mother's arms while she uttered the now famous expression that he was "the image of Pat."

She told of the child's fondness for horses, whether they ran or were just hobby horses, and of other sporting inclinations. All these traits, Mrs. Dixon insisted, were evidences of paternity which showed that Patrick H. McCarren, jr., had inherited from his alleged father tendencies that in after life would make him a chip off the old block.

The disappearance of Mrs. Dixon has probably closed the case, and the person most interested is Clarence E. Spayd, the owner of the house, No. 82 Lenox road, which was occupied by her. According to the neighbors, who have paid a great amount of attention to the handsome woman since her story became public, she left the house last Sunday morning with a woman companion, a maid and the "image of Pat."

LANDLORD SEEKS HER.

On Sunday evening an expressman called and her trunks were taken away. On Tuesday Mr. Spayd called and noticed the house was closed. Neighbors told him that the occupants had gone. Mr. Spayd was interested because of financial transactions with his tenant. To a reporter he said:

"I rented my house to Mrs. Dixon in March last for one year at a rental of $125 a month. I let her have all the furniture in the house, besides linen, china, cooking utensils, some silverware and other articles, for which she agreed to pay about $500. She paid me six weeks' rent in advance, and also $50 on account for the furniture and furnishings. She said she expected to get a large settlement from Senator McCarren, and that she would pay me every cent. of any obligation she might incur."

Mr. Spayd went on to say that the woman ran up telephone bills to the amount of nearly $100, and as he failed to collect the money from her he had the telephone company disconnect the instrument, which was in his name.

"Besides this," continued Mr. Spayd, "Mrs. Dixon used up about forty dollars' worth of coal in the cellar that belonged to me, and departed owing me rent for the months of August and September."

SPOTLESS SERVICE.

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. One steps down at a journey's end over the Lake Shore as clean as when he boarded the train. Cleanliness is but one feature that has made The Lake Shore the most popular road in America. Others are its luxurious coaches, absolute safety, highest speed and punctuality. Tell the agent to have your ticket read "Via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for information concerning rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY."

A New York paper thus speaks of Hal Johnson, a clever actor who comes with "The Arrival of Kitty" to the Carman next Tuesday night: "When dressed as a girl, impersonating Kitty in "The Arrival of Kitty," at the Casino, it is a very hard matter to distinguish that Hal Johnson is not the real thing. He is about as clever, most of his audience thinks, as any female impersonator that has been seen here in a long time. Tall and slender, pink of skin, with very small feet and hands he has little trouble in effectually disguising himself, so that, in playing that he is somebody else, a vaudeville actress with whom an uncle has had high times in the past, he succeeds in getting everybody into a peck of trouble. Johnson, who is a young man, manages to squeeze himself into a 21 inch pair of corsets, and that gives the straight front effect to a nicety. His costumes are exact counterparts of the ones worn by Miss Eveleen Dunmore, the star of the company. He dresses the part 'from the skin out.'"

BLACK DIKE BAND COMING.

The fact that the famous Black Dike Band, which has been winning golden opinions all over Canada, is coming to this city next Wednesday evening, will be welcome news to local music-lovers. The band is new to this country, but in the few places where it has appeared it has won unlimited praise. Press and people have been unanimous in their indorsement, declaring the band to be not only vastly out of the ordinary as a musical organization, but capable of the most beautiful and impressive effects. The playing of this band has often been likened to the music of a cathedral organ. An idea of the merit of this organization may be had from the following list of prizes and medals it has won. It has won 104 first prizes, sixty-two second prizes, thirty-three third prizes, ten fifth prizes, sixty-one special prizes for soloists, on twelve occasions has tied with other bands, twenty-seven prizes for marches and glees, fifty gold medals, thirty silver medals, twenty challenge cups, five uniform prizes and sixteen glee prizes.

JOHN GRIFFITH AS "RICHARD."

Shakespeare's sublime tragedy, "King Richard the Third," as revised and adapted by Colley Cibber, is the most satisfying of all the great dramatist's plays. This is the version used by the eminent tragedian, John Griffith, on his present tour, and he gives to it all possible animation and effect. Mr. Griffith's supporting company this season is surprisingly good, his costuming, scenery and general equipment is rich and historically correct: in fact, his management has brought all the illumination of modern art and modern thought to the Shakespearean classic, and it exceeds in interest any current revival of the divine bard's immortal works. Mr. Griffith's success being the sensation of the season in theatrical and kindred circles. Mr. Griffith is booked to appear in this city on Friday, Sept. 21, at the Carman, and he certainly will attract a very big audience.

Australia Wants Jews.

In view of the offer of Joseph Fels to contribute £20,000 for the purpose of founding a Jewish colony, providing the principle of land nationalization is adopted, it is interesting to note that Australia has now been suggested as the location of such a colony. Writing in the Jewish Chronicle and Jewish World, Dr. Richard Arthur, a member of the New South Wales Legislative Assembly, and President of the Australian Immigration League, states that Africa is not a suitable place for Europeans. The northern territory of Australia he suggests, would probably be the most suitable locality to make this experiment. The northern territory is six or seven times as large as Great Britain, and contains vast areas of fertile land. Its climate is a subtropical one, although there are elevated plateaus where a much more temperate climate can be obtained. It is certain that the territory will be taken over shortly by the Commonwealth Government and utilized as a field for immigration on a huge scale. "I am certain," he states, "that the immigration league of Australia would gladly co-operate in such a movement. Only it must be distinctly understood that the people we want in Australia are those who will settle on the soil and become primary producers. Australia may seem a far-distant land to those to whom Europe is the world. But we have almost everything here that Europe can offer, and much that she cannot. We have the finest and healthiest climate in the world, our form of Government is the freest, and the poorest man has the amplest opportunities open to him."

CANNED MUSIC.

(Berton Braley, in Butte Inter-Mountain.)

There's a gramophone next door,
'Cross the street are seven more,
And about the block I live in there must be at least a score
(I have counted twenty-four).
And they warble and they sing,
And they do most everything,
Ragtime, jagtime, band tunes, grand tunes,
Banjo tunes and highland fling;
And they cackle and they hoot,
And they whistle and they toot
"Cavalleria Rusticana,"
"Miserere," "Carmen," "Hannah,"
Everything that you can think of played in every sort of "mannah."
Sleep's entirely out the question;
It has spoiled my good digestion;
Edison be cursed forever! How can anybody praise
One who made that screechy ways?

We are living in a flat—
There is nothing strange in that—
But whenever we endeavor to engage in friendly chat
There's a gramophonic din
Which comes floating loudly in
From below us and above us,
Drowning out the voices of us—
Stuff from "Johnny Jones" or "Woodland," arias from "Lohengrin," Shreds and patches of a tune
Operatic, love or coon,
Slow or fast time, what a pastime.
Underneath the silver moon;
George M. Cohan's "Yankee Doodle,"
Mixed with "Traumerei" and such,
Till your poor bewildered noodle
Whirls and spins to beat the Dutch.
I would move, but that is useless; it is hopeless to escape,
For wherever I might wander I should meet that fearful shape
Yes, and hear the strident tone
Of that measly gramophone!

There is just one cure I see,
And it don't appeal to me,
But I think I'll have to take it, however harsh it be—
It is this; I'll take my pelf
From the jar upon the shelf
And—oh, fearful vengeance!—buy a gramophone myself.

It is hardly worth while to discuss the question whether the Englishman or the Scotsman is the more popular when he comes to settle in Canada. As a matter of simple fact, as a Quebec paper says, neither of them ever becomes popular until he becomes Canadian, and the sooner he effects the transformation the better for himself. Old country peculiarities may afford amusement but will never win popularity, and any sincere effort to become Canadianized will be noticed and appreciated.

Why should not every school—asks the Montreal Witness — have a swimming bath like the Sarsfield school? The length of our winter and the great cost of land are given as the reasons why our schools have no playgrounds—a very regrettable fact. Neither of these objections applies to the present proposal, as every school has space under it that might be so used, and there is no more wholesome or more useful bodily exercise than swimming. It would, of course, require unceasing supervision, but is that not true of all school sports With a good master's presence, sympathy and guidance, the playground might furnish a very valuable — perhaps the most valuable — part of education.

THE CAMPHOR LAUREL.

The camphor laurel, from which the greater part of the camphor of commerce is produced, is a native of China, Japan, Formosa and Cochin-China. It is a hardy, long lived tree and sometimes grows to a great size. It has evergreen leaves, yellowish white flowers in panicles and is a very ornamental tree, the trunk running up to a height of twenty or thirty feet before branching. The fruit is very much like a black currant.

In the extraction of camphor the wood is first cut into small chips, and the chips are put into water in a still and steamed. The head of the still is filled with straw, and as the steam carries off the camphor in vapor it is deposited in little grains around the straw.

The crude camphor is then heated in a vessel, from which the steam is allowed to escape through a small aperture. The camphor sublimes in a semitransparent cake. In the manufacture of camphor the tree is necessarily destroyed, but by a rigid law of the lands in which the tree grows another is planted in the place of every one that is cut down. The wood is highly valued for carpenter's work.

Camphor was unknown to the Greeks and Romans and was first brought to Europe by the Arabs.

BROEK, IN HOLLAND.

It Is Said to Be the Cleanest Town In the World.

The cleanest town in the world is said to be Broek, in Holland. It is only a few miles from the capital, and has been famous for its cleanliness from time immemorial. It is also notable on account of the fanciful style of its houses and yards and gardens and streets.

The people, though only peasants, are all well to do, and all feel a pride in their town. It seems to be the first business of their lives to keep their houses freshly painted, their gardens in perfect order and their yards and streets as clean as a new pin. No carts are allowed in the streets, and no cattle.

Though the raising of stock and the making of butter and cheese are their occupations, a stranger would never imagine that there were any cattle in the region, unless he went to the beautiful green meadows at the back of the houses or the stables out there, where cows are kept in stalls scrubbed and washed like a kitchen.

The streets are too fine and neat for the feet of the animals to step on. All are paved with polished stone, intermingled with bricks of different colors, and kept so scrupulously clean that a lady could walk anywhere in white satin slippers.

A Case Where Proceedings In Court Were Unnecessary.

"A big, burly fellow from the Michigan pine forests came into my office," said one of them, "and told a very mean story about a rich man here in town who was trying to cheat him out of $2,000 or $3,000 and who had managed to get a pretty tight clutch on the money. The backwoodsman looked and talked like an honest man, and the old miser's reputation was mean enough to match the story, so I felt inclined to believe it. When he had finished I looked him up and down from head to foot. He asked me what I was looking him over for. 'Well,' said I, 'I was thinking that if I were over six feet tall and as powerful a man as you I wouldn't hire a lawyer to help me get that money.' The man's excited face smoothed out into blank astonishment. 'What do you mean?' he said. I answered: 'I mean just what I say. You are sure, are you, that he has that money in his office?' 'He had it there last night.' 'Well, you don't need a lawyer.'

"The man turned on his heel and left without another word. In a day or two he sent me a check for $50 and his thanks for my advice."

Wit.

Wit, like every other power, has its boundaries. Its success depends on the aptitude of others to receive impressions, and that as some bodies, indissoluble by heat, can set the furnace and crucible at defiance, there are minds upon which the rays of fancy may be pointed without effect and which no fire of sentiment can agitate or exalt.—Johnson.

Has Taken a Thousand

Zutoo

Always Cured Headache.
Never Affected her Heart.

Here is a testimonial from the wife of Doctor W. L. Shurtleff, K.C., of Coaticook, Que., who has taken a thousand Zutoo Tablets (the Japanese Vegetable Headache remedy.)

It should convince any doubting one, that while the tablets cure headache, they do not, like the drug cures, affect the heart, nerves or stomach. No one would or could take such a number if they were not perfectly harmless. Mrs. Shurtleff herself had to discard the drug cures.

Here is what she says:

I have always been a great sufferer from headache, and have taken a great many headache cures. I found that after taking them for a time they caused palpitation of the heart. Three years ago I began using Zutoo. I have likely taken over a thousand tablets. I have never yet felt the least ill-effect from using them and they cure my headaches as quickly as any remedy I ever took.

They are Harmless as Soda.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

He had a depot of tinned meats cached by one of his agents up a mangrove creek, and under cover of night he sailed up and got these on board, and built them in tightly under the thwarts of his boat so that they would not shift in the seaway. And finally, again cloaked by friendly darkness, he ran on to the beach of the turtle-backed isle, hid his boat in a gully of the sand, scooped out a personal residence where he would be visible only to God and the seafowl, and sat himself down to wait for an appointed hour.

By day the sun grilled him, by night the sea mists drenched him to the skin, and at times gales lifted the surface from the Caribbean and sent it whistling across the roof of the isle in volleys of stinging spindrift. Moreover, he was constantly pestered by that local ailment, chills-and-fever, partly as a result of two or three trifling wounds bestowed by the gendarmerie, and partly as payment for residence in the miasmatic mangrove swamps; so that, on the whole, life was not very tolerable to him, and he might have been pardoned had he cursed Miss Carnegie for sending him on so troublesome an errand. But he did not do this. He remembered that she was occupying herself at home in Newcastle with the creation of poetry for the British magazines according to their agreement, and he forgot his discomforts in the glow of a Mecenas. It was the first time he had been a bona fide patron of letters, and the pleasure of it intoxicated him.

A fortnight passed by—he had given Clare a fortnight in the message he smuggled into the convict station for him to make certain preparations—and at the end of that space of time Capt. Kettle rolled his MSS inside an oilskin cover and addressed it to Miss Carnegie—in case of accidents. He put beckets on the top of his cap, slipped his revolver into these, and put the cap on his head; and then, stripping to the buff, he left his form and got up on to the sand, and walked down its milk-warm surface to the water's edge.

The ripples rang like a million of the tiniest bells upon the fine shingle, and the stars in the velvet night above were reflected in the water. It was far too still a night for his purpose—far too dangerously clear. He would have preferred rain, or even half a gale of wind. But he had fixed his appointment, and he was not the man to let any detail of added danger make him break a tryst. So he waded down into the lonely sea, and struck out at a steady breast-stroke for the isle de Salut, which loomed in low black outline across the waters before him.

A more hazardous business than this part of the man's expedition it would be hard to conceive. There were no prisoners in the world more jealously guarded than those in the pestilential settlement ahead of him. They were forgers, murderers, or, what the French hate still more, traitors and foreign spies; and once they stepped ashore upon the beach they were there for always. They were all life-sentence men. Until ferocious labor or the batterings of the climate sent them to rest below the soil, they were doomed to pain with every breath they drew.

Desperate gaoling like this makes desperate men, and did any of the prisoners—even the most cowardly of them—see the glimmer of a chance to escape, he would leap to take it, even though he knew that a certain hailstorm of lead would pelt along his trail. And as a consequence the rim of the isle bristled with armed warders, all of them marksmen, who shot at anything that moved, and who had as little compunction in dropping a prisoner as any other sportsman would have in knocking over a partridge.

To add to Capt. Kettle's tally of dangers, the phosphorescence that night was peculiarly vivid; the sea glowed where he breasted it; his wake was lit with streams of silver fire; his whole body stood out like a smolder of flame on a cloth of black velvet. His presence moved upon the face of the waters as an open advertisement. He was an illuminated target for every rifle that chose to sight him, and, far worse, he was a fiery bait enough to draw every shark in the Caribbean. And sharks swarmed there. His limbs crept as he swam with them.

To move fast was to increase the phosphorescence; to move slow was to linger in that horrible suspense; and I think it is one of the highest testimonials to Kettle's indomitable courage when I can say that not once during that ghastly voyage did he either hurry, or scurry, or splash. He was a prey to the most abominable dread; he expended an hour and a half over an hour's swim, and it seemed to him a space of years; and when he grounded on the beach of the isle de Salut he was almost fainting from the strain of his emotions, and for a while lay on the sand sobbing like a hysterical schoolgirl.

But a sound revived him and sent full energy into his limbs again without a prelude. From the distance there came to him the noise of shod feet crunching with regulation tread along the shingle. He was lying in the track of a sentry's beat.

By instinct his hand dragged the revolver from its beckets on his cap, and then he rose to his feet and darted away like some slim pink ghost across the beach into the shelter of the thickets. He lay there holding his breath, and watched the sentry pace upon his patrol. It was evident that the man had not seen him; the fellow neither glanced toward the cover nor searched the beach for foot tracks; and yet he carried his rifle in the crook of his arm ready for a snap shot, and flickered his eyes to this side and to that like a man habitually trained to sudden alarms and a quick trigger finger. His every movement was eloquent of the care with which the isle de Salut was warded.

Kettle waited till the man had gone off into the dark again and the soundless distance, and then stepped out from his ambush, and ran at speed along the dim, starlit beach. The sand-pats sprang backward from his flying toes, and the birds in the forest rim moved uneasily as he passed. The little man was sea-bred first and last; he had no knowledge of woodcraft; a silent stalk was a flight far beyond him; and he raced along his way, revolver in hand, confident that he could shoot any intruding sentry before a rifle could be brought to bear.

Of course, the discharge of weapons would have waked the isle, and brought the whole wasps' nest about his ears. But this was a state of things he could have faced out brazenly. Throughout all his stormy life he had never yet shirked a melee, and perhaps immunity from serious harm had given him an overestimate of the percentage of bullets which go astray. At any rate, the thrill of brisk fighting was a pleasure he well knew, and he never went far out of his way to avoid it.

But, as it was, he sped along his path unnoticed. The blunders of chance threaded him through the shadows and the chain of sentries so that no living soul picked up the alarm, till at last he pulled up panting at the edge of the open space which edged in the grim convict barrack itself.

And now began a hateful tedium of waiting. The day he had fixed with Clare was the right one; the hour of the rendezvous was vague. He had said "as near midnight as may be" in his message; but he was only able to guess at the time himself, and he expected that Clare was in a similar plight. Anyway, the man was not there, and Kettle gnawed his fingers with impatience as he awaited him.

The night under the winking stars was full of noise. In the forest trees the jarflies and the tree-crickets and the katydids kept up their maddening chorus. The drumming mosquitoes scented the naked man from afar and put every inch of his body to the torment. The moist, damp heat of the place made him pant to get his breath. The prison itself was full of the uneasy rustling of men sleeping in discomfort, and at regular intervals some crazy wretch within the walls cried out "Dieu, Dieu, Dieu!" as though he were a human cuckoo clock condemned to chime after stated lapses of minutes.

An hour passed, and still the uneasy night dozed on without notice that a prisoner was trying to escape. Another hour went by, and Capt. Kettle began to contemplate the possibilities of attacking the grim building with his own itching fingers, and dragging Clare forth in the teeth of whatever opposition might befall. "Dieu, Dieu, Dieu!" rang out the tormented man within the walls, and then from round the further angle of the place a figure came running, who stared wildly about him as though in search of some one.

Kettle stepped out from his nook of concealment, a clear, pale mark in the starlight. The runner swerved, stopped, and hesitated. Kettle beckoned him, and the man threw away his doubt and raced up. The little sailor thrust out a moist hand. "You'll be Mr. Clare, sir, I presume?"

"Yes."

"I'm very pleased to have the honor of meeting you. I'm Capt. Kettle, that was asked as a favor by Miss Carnegie——"

"Let us get away, quick. They will be after me directly, and if they catch me I shall be shot. Mr. Kettle, quick, where is your boat?"

But the little naked man did not budge. "I am accustomed, sir," he said stiffly, "to having my title."

"I don't understand. O, afterwards; but let us get away now at once."

"Capt. Kettle, sir."

"Capt. Kettle, certainly. But this waiting may cost us our lives."

"I am not anxious to take root here, sir, but, as for the boat, you've a good swim ahead of you before we reach that." And he told of the way he had come. "There was no other plan for it, Mr. Clare. It would have been sheer foolishness to have brought by boat to this island with all these busy people with guns prowling about. I had just got to leave her at my headquarters, and you must make up your mind to swim and risk the sharks if you wish to join her."

"I am open to risking anything," said Clare. "It's neck or nothing with me after what I did five minutes back in that hell over yonder. One of the warders—" he broke off and dragged a hand across his eyes. "Look here, captain, we are bound to be seen if we go back around by the beach. Come with me and I'll show you a track through the woods."

He started off into the cover without waiting for a reply, and Kettle with a frown turned and followed at his heels. Capt. Kettle preferred to do the ordering himself, and this young man seemed apt to assert command. However, the moment was one for hurry. The night was beginning to thin. So he got up speed again, and the trees and undergrowth closed behind him.

"Dieu, Dieu, Dieu!" cried out the tormented prisoner within the walls as a parting benediction.

Some men like the historical Dr. Fell, have the knack, unknown to themselves, of inspiring dislike in others, and Clare had this effect upon Capt. Owen Kettle. The little sailor's dislike was born at the first moment of their meeting. It grew as he ran through the forest of isle de Salut; and even when Clare fell upon a sentry and beat the sense out of him as neatly as he could have done it himself, Kettle failed to admire or sympathize with him.

On the return swim to the turtle-backed island he came very near to wishing that a shark would get the man, although such a calamity would have meant his own almost certain destruction; and when they lay together, packed like a pair of sardines, in the shelter pit, under the intolerable sunshine of the succeeding day, it was with difficulty he could keep his hands off this fellow whom he had gone through so much to help.

Clare put in what of talking was done; the sailor preserved a sour, glum silence. He felt that if he gave his vinegary tongue the freedom it wished for, nothing could prevent a collision.

He argued out with himself the cause for this dislike during the succeeding night. They had got the boat in the water, had mastheaded the lug, and were running northwest before a snoring breeze towards the British West Indian islands. He himself, with mainsheet in one hand and tiller in the other, was in solitary command. Clare was occupied in bailing back the seas to their appointed place.

For a long time the utmost he could discover against the man was that on occasions he "was too bossy," and with bitter satire he ridiculed himself for a childish weakness. But then another thought drifted into his mind, and he picked it up, and weighed it, and balanced it, and valued it, till under the fostering care it grew, and the little sailor felt with a glow and a tightening of the lips that he had now indeed a real and legitimate cause for hate.

What mention had this fellow Clare made of Miss Carnegie? Practically none. He, Kettle, had stated by whom he was sent to the rescue, and Clare had received the news with a casual "O!" and a yawn. He had offered further information (when the first scurry of the escape was over, and they were cached in the sandpit) upon Miss Carnegie's movements and her condition as last view in Newcastle, and Clare had pleaded tiredness and suggested another hour for the recital. Was this the proper attitude for a lover? It was not. Was this meet behavior for the future husband of such a woman as Miss Carnegie, who was not only herself, but, who also wrote poetry for the magazines? Ten thousand times over it was not.

He sheeted home the lug a couple of inches in response to a shift of the breeze, and opened his lips in speech.

"Miss Carnegie, sir," he began, "is a lady I esteem very highly."

"She is willing to beggar herself to do you service, sir."

"Yes, I know she is very fond of me."

"And I should like to know if you are equally fond of her?"

"Steady, captain, steady. I don't quite see what you have got to do with it." He paused and looked at the sailor curiously. "Look here, I say, you seem to talk a deuce of a deal about Miss Carnegie. Are you sweet on her yourself?"

Capt. Kettle glared, and it is probable that, if such an action would not have swamped the boat, he would have dropped the tiller and left the marks of his displeasure upon Clare's person without further barter of words. But, as it was, he deigned to speak.

"You dog," he said, "if you make a suggestion like that again, I'll kill you. You've no right to say such a thing. I just honor Miss Carnegie as though she were the queen, or even more, because she writes verse for the magazines, and the queen only writes diaries. And besides there could be nothing more between us; I'm a married man, sir, with a family. But about this other matter. It seems to me I'm the party that kind of holds your fate just at present, young man. If I shove this tiller across, the boat'll broach to and swamp, and whatever happens to me—and I don't vastly care—it's a sure thing you will go to the place where there's weeping and gnashing of teeth. How'd you like that?"

"Not a bit. I want to live. I've gone through the worst time a human being can endure on that ghastly island astern there, and I'm due for a great lot of the sweets of life to make up for it. And if it interests you to know it, captain—I do owe you something personally, I suppose, and you have some right to be in my confidence—if it interests you to hear such a thing, I may tell you I shall probably marry Miss Carnegie as soon as I get back to her."

"Then you do love her?"

"I don't quite know what love is. But I like her well enough, if that will do for you. Hadn't we better take down a reef in the lug? I can hardly keep the water under."

"By James, you leave me to sail this boat," said Kettle, "and attend to your blessed bailing, or I'll knock you out of her."

The conversation languished for some hours after this, and Kettle, with every nerve on the strain, humored the boat as she raced before the heavy following seas, while the ex-convict scooped back the water which eternally slopped in green streams over her gunwhale. It was Clare who set up the talk again.

Did she know anything about those plans of the French fortresses?"

"Miss Carnegie had the most definite ideas on the subject."

"I suppose she'd found out by that time that I really did get hold of them out of the office myself, and sell them to the Germans?"

For one of the few times in his life Capt. Kettle lied. "She knew the whole yarn from start to finish."

"Well, I was a fool to muddle it. With any decent luck I ought to have brought off the coup without anybody being the wiser. I could have laid quiet a year or two till the fuss blew over, and then had a tidy fortune to go upon, and been able to marry whom I pleased, or not marry at all. Eh—well, skipper, that bubble's cracked, and I suppose the best thing I can do now is to marry old Carnegie's girl after all."

"Then you've quite made up your mind to marry this lady?"

"Quite."

"That's what you say," retorted Kettle. "Now you hear me. Miss Carnegie thinks you are in love with her, and you are not that by many a long fathom; so there goes item the first. In the second place, she thought you were sent to Cayenne unjustly, whereas by your own showing, you're a dirty thief, and deserved all you got. And, thirdly, I don't approve of squeezing fathers-in-law as an industry for young men newly out of jail."

"You truculent little ruffian, do you dare to threaten me?"

"I'd threaten the emperor of Germany if I was close to him and didn't like what he was doing. Here, you! Don't you lift that bailer at me, or I'll slip some lead through your mangy hide before you can wink. Now you just understand, for the rest of this cruise, till we make our port, you stay forrard, and I'm on the quarter-deck. If you move aft I'll shoot you dead and thank you for giving me the chance. But if you get ashore all in one piece, I'll spike your guns in another way."

"How?" asked the man sullenly.

"You'll find out when you get there," said Kettle grimly. "And now don't you speak to me again. You aren't wholesome. Get on with your bailing. D'ye hear me, there? Get on with that bailing. I don't want my boat to be swamped through your cursed laziness."

Now, to which port it was of the British West India islands that the lug-sail boat and its occupants arrived, I never quite made out, and indeed the method in which Capt. Kettle "spiked" Mr. Clare's "guns" was hidden from me till quite recently. A week ago, however, a letter of his drifted into my hands, and, as it seems to explain all that is necessary, I give it here exactly as it left his pen.

West India Islands.

To Miss Carnegie, Jesmond St., Newcastle, Eng.:

Honored Madam—Am pleased to report have carried out part of y' esteemed commands. Went to Cayenne, as per instruction, and took Mr. Clare away from French Government, they not consenting. Landed him in good condition at this place. Having learnt that he did steal those plans, and, moreover, he saying he did not care for you the way he ought, have taken liberty to guard lest he should trouble you in future. To do this, found old colored washerwoman here (widow) who was proud to have white husband. Him objecting, I swore to tell French Consul if he did not marry, and get him sent back to Cayenne. So he married. She weighs 250 lbs. I inclose copy of their marriage lines, so you can see all is correct.

Trust you will excuse liberty. He has made one escape; you have made another.

The weather is very sultry here, but they say there is fine scenery up-country.

Shall get English magazines some day, when things blow over a bit, and I can come that way again, to look for your poetry.

Hoping this finds you in good health as it leave me at present.

Y's obedient,

O. Kettle, Master.

FORTUNES ADRIFT.

Cortolvin came out under the bridge deck awning up through the baking heat of the companionway, and dropped listlessly into a deck chair. He was dressed in slop-chest pajamas of a vivid pattern, and had a newly-shaven chin, which stood out refreshingly white against the rest of his sun-darkened countenance.

"Well," said Capt. Kettle, as he shoved across the box of cheroots, "are we any nearer getting under way?"

"I looked in at the engine room as I came past," said the tall man with a laugh, "and the chief had a good deal to say. I gathered it was his idea that the fellow who last had charge of those engines ought to die a cruel and lingering death."

"It's a sore point with McTodd when she breaks down. But did he say how long it would be before he could give her steam again? I'm a bit anxious. The glass is tumbling, hand over fist; and what with that, and this heat, there's small doubt but what we'll have a tornado clattering about our ears directly. There's the shore close aboard, as you can see for yourself, and if the wind comes away anywhere from the east'ard, it'll blow this old steamboat half way into the middle of Africa before we can look around us. It's a bad season just now for tornadoes."

The clattering of iron bootplates made itself heard on the brass-bound steps of the companionway. "That'll be the chief coming to answer for himself," said Cortolvin.

Mr. Neil Angus McTodd always advertised his calling in the attire of the outward man, and the eye of an expert could tell with sureness at any given moment whether Mr. McTodd was in employment or not, and, if so, what type of steamboat he was on, what was his official position, what was his pay, and what was the last bit of work on which he had been employed.

The present was the fourth occasion on which the Saigon's machinery had chosen to break down during Capt. Kettle's two months of command, and after his herculean efforts in making repairs with insufficient staff and materials, Mr. McTodd was unpleasant both to look upon and associate with. He was attired in moist black boots, gray flannel pyjama trousers stuffed into his socks, a weird garment of flannel upon his upper man, a clout round his neck, and a peaked cap upon his grizzled red hair, anointed with years of spraying oil. His elbows and his forehead shone like dull mirrors of steel, and he carried one of his thumbs wrapped up in a grimy, crimson rag. His conversation was full of unnecessary adjectives, and he was inclined to take a cantankerous view of the universe.

"They'd disgrace the scrap heap of any decent yard, would the things they miscall engines on this rotten tub," said he by way of preface.

"They are holy engines and that's a fact," said Kettle. "How long can you guarantee them for this time?"

The engineer mopped his neck with a wad of cotton waste. "Ten revolutions, if you wish me to be certain. It's a verra dry ship, this."

"And how many more? We shall want them. There's a tornado coming on."

"I'm no' anxious ta perjure mysel', captain, but they might run on for a full minute, or they might run on for a day. There's a capreciousness about the rattle traps that might amuse some people, but it does not appeal to me. I'm in fear of my life every minute I stand on the footplates."

"I'd not have taken you for a frightened man."

"I'm no' that as a usual thing, but the temperature of yon engine room varies between a hundred and twenty and hundred and thirty of the Fahrenheit scale, and it's destroying to the nerves. All the aqueous vapor leaves the system, and I'm verra badly in need of a tonic. Is yon whusky in the black bottle, captain?"

"Take a peg, Mac."

"I'll just have a sma' three fingers, now ye mention it." He laid the thickest part of his knotty knuckles against the side of the tumbler, and poured out some half a gill of spirit. "Weel," said he, "may we get as good whusky where we are going to," and enveloped the dose with a dextrous turn of the wrist. After which ambiguous toast he wiped his lips with the cotton waste and took himself off again to the baking regions below; and presently a dull rumbling, and a tremor of her fabric announced that the Saigon was once more under way.

The little steamer had coaled at Perim island, in the southern mouth of the Red sea, had come out into the Indian ocean through the straits of Bab-el-Mandeb, had rounded Cape Guardaful, and was on her way down to Zanzibar in response to the cabled orders of her Parsee owner in Bombay. Cortolvin was still on board as passenger. His excuse was that he wanted to inspect the island and the city of Zanzibar before returning to England and respectability; his real reason was that he had taken a fancy to the little ruffian of a skipper, and wished to see more of him.

"Cheerful toast, that of McTodd's," said Cortolvin.

"Those engines are enough to discourage any man," said Kettle, "and the heat down there would sour the temper of an archangel."

Cortolvin loosened a couple more buttons of his pajamas and bared his chest. "It's hard to breathe even here, and I thought I'd learned what heat was out in those Arabian deserts. There's a tornado coming on, that's certain."

"It will clear the air," said Kettle. "But it will be a sneezer when we get it. Mr. Murgatroyd!" he called.

The old grizzle-headed mate thrust down a purple face from the head of the upper bridge ladder—"Aye, aye?"

"Get all the awnings off her," the shipmaster ordered: "Put extra grips on the boats, and see everything lashed fast that a steam crane could move. We're in for a bad breeze directly."

"Aye, aye," rumbled the mate, and clapped a leaden whistle to his mouth, and blew it shrilly. A minute later he reported: "A big steamer lying to just a point or two off the starboard bow, captain. I have'nt seen her before because of the haze." He examined her carefully through the bridge binoculars, and gave his observations with heavy deliberation. "She's square-rigged forrard, and has a black funnel with a red band—no, two red bands. Seems to me like one of the German mail boats, and I should say she was broke down."

Capt. Kettle rose springily from his deck chair, and swung himself onto the upper deck bridge. Cortolvin followed.

A mist of heat shut the sea in a narrow ring. Overhead was a heavy, purply darkness, impenetrable as a ceiling of brick. The only light that crept in came from the mysterious unseen plain of the horizon. From every point of the compass uneasy thunder gave forth now and then a stifled bellow, and, though the lightning splashes never showed, sudden thinnings of the gloom would hint at their nearness. The air shimmered and danced with the baking heat, and though lurid greys and pink predominated, the glow which filled it was constantly changing in hue.

The scene was terrifying, but Kettle regarded it with a satisfied smile. The one commercial prayer of the shipmaster is to meet with a passenger steamer at sea, broken down, and requiring a tow; and here was one of the plums of the ocean ready to his hand and anxious to be plucked. The worse the weather, the greater would be the salvage, and Capt. Kettle could have hugged himself with joy when he thought of the tropical hurricane's nearness.

He had changed the Saigon's course the instant he came on the bridge, and had pulled the syren string and hooted cheerfully into the throbbing air to announce his coming. The spectral steamer grew every moment more clear, and presently a string of barbaric colors jerked up to the wire span between her masts. There was no breath of wind to make the flags blow out; they hung in dejected cowls; but to Kettle they read like the page of an open book.

"Urgent signal H. B.!" he cried, and clapped the binocular back in the box and snapped down the lid. "H. B., Mr. Cortolvin, and don't you forget having seen it. 'Want immediate assistance,' that means."

"You seem to know it by heart," said Cortolvin.

"There's not a steamboat officer on all the seas that doesn't. When things are down with us, we take out the signal book, and hunt up H. B. among the urgent signals, and tell ourselves that some day we may come across a Cunarder with a broken tailshaft, and be able to give up the sea and be living politely on £200 a year well invested, within the fortnight. It's the steamboat officer's dream, sir, but there's few of us it ever comes true for."

"Skipper," said Cortolvin, "I needn't tell you how pleased I'll be if you come into a competency over his business. In the meanwhile, if there's anything I can do, from coal trimming upward, I'm your most obedient servant."

"I thank you, sir," said Kettle. "And if you'd go and carry the news to the chief I'll be obliged. I know he'll say his engines can't hold out. Tell him they must. Tell him to use up anything he has sooner than get another breakdown. Tell him to rip up his soul for struts and backstays if he thinks it'll keep them running. It's the one chance of my life, Mr. Cortolvin, and the one chance of his, and he's got to know it and see we aren't robbed of what is put before us. Show him where the siller comes in, sir, and then stand by and you'll see Mr. McTodd work miracles."

Cortolvin went below, and Kettle turned to the old mate. "Mr. Murgatroyd," said he, "get a dozen hands to rouse up that new manilla out of the store. I take you from the foredeck, and give you the afterdeck to yourself. I'll have to bargain with that fellow over there before we do anything, and there'll be little enough time left after we've fixed upon prices. So have everything ready to begin to tow. We'll use their wire."

"Aye, aye," said the mate. "But it won't do to tow with wire, captain, through what's coming. There's no give in wire. A wire hawser would jerk the guts out of her in 15 minutes."

Kettle tightened his lips. "Mr. Murgatroyd," said he, "I am not a blame fool. Neither do I want dictation from my officers. I told you to rouse up the manilla. You will back the wire with a double bridle of that."

"Aye, aye," grunted the mate; "but what am I to make fast to? Them bollards aft might be stepped in putty for all the use they are. They'd not tow a rowboat through what's coming. I believe they'd draw if they'd a fishing line made fast to them."

"I should have thought you'd been long enough at sea to have known your business by this time," said Kettle unpleasantly. "D'ye think that every steamboat that trades is a bran-new 'Hartland and Wolff?"

"Well," said the mate sullenly, "I'm waiting to be taught."

"Pass the manilla round the coaming of the after hatch, and you won't come and tell me that's drawn while this steamboat stays on the water top."

"Aye, aye," said the mate, and stepped into his slippers and shuffled away. Capt. Kettle walked briskly to the centre of the upper bridge and laid a hand on the telegraph. He gave crisp orders to the Lascar at the wheel and the Saigon moved in perfect obedience to his will.

Ahead of him the great slate-colored liner lay motionless on the oily sea. Her rail was peopled with the anxious faces of passengers. Busy deckhands were stripping away the awnings. On the high upper bridge were three officers in peaked caps and trim uniforms of white drill, talking together anxiously.

The little Saigon curved up from astern, stopped her engines, and then, with reversed propeller, brought up dead, so that the bridges of the two steamers were level and not more than 20 yards apart. It was smartly done, and (as Kettle had intended) the Germans noticed it and commented. Then began the barter of words.

"Howdy, captain," said Kettle. "I hope it's not a funeral you've brought up for?" This heat's been very great. Has it knocked over one of your passengers?"

A large-bearded man made reply: "We haf seen a slight mishap mit der machinery, captain. My ingeneers will mend."

"O, that's all right. Thought it might be worse. Well, I wish you luck, captain. But I'd hurry and get steam on her again, if I were you. The breeze may come away any minute now, and you've the shore close aboard, and you'll be on it if you don't get your steamboat under command again by then, and have a big loss of life. If you get on the beach, it'll surprise me if you don't drown all hands."

Capt. Kettle put a hand on the telegraph, as though to ring on his engines again, but the bearded German, after a preliminary stamp of passion, held up his hand for further parley. But for the moment the opportunity of speech was taken from him. The passengers were either English, or for the most part understood that tongue when spoken; and they had drunk in every word that was said, as Kettle had intended; and now they surged in a writhing, yelling mob at the foot of the two bridge ladders, and demanded that assistance should be hired, let that cost what it might.

There was no making a hail carry above that frightened uproar, and the German shipmaster raved, and explained, and reasoned for full a dozen moments before he quelled it. Then, panting, he came once more to the end of his bridge, and addressed the other steamer.

"Dose passengers vas nervous," said he, "because dey thought dere might come some leetle rain squall; so I ask you how mooch vould you take my rope and tow me to Aden or Perim?

"Phew!" said Kettle. "Aden! That's wrong way for me, captain. Red sea's where I've come from, and my owner cabled me to hurry and get to Zanibar."

"Vell, how mooch?"

"We'll say £100,000, as your passengers seem so anxious."

"Hondred tousand teufels! Herr Gott, I haf not Rhodes on der sheep!"

"Well, captain, take the offer or leave it. I'm not a towboat and I'm in a hurry to make my passage. If you keep me waiting here five minutes longer it'll cost you £120,000 to be plucked in anywhere."

The shipmaster on the other bridge went into a frenzy of expostulation; he appealed to all Capt. Kettle's better feelings; he dared him to do his worst, he prayed him to do his best. But Kettle gazed upon the man's gesticulating arms and listened to his frantic oratory unmoved. He lit a cheroot and leaned his elbows on the white railing of the bridge and did not reply by so much as a single word.

When the other halted through breathlessness, even then he did not speak. He waved his hand toward the fearsome heavens with their lurid lights and pointed to the bumping thunder, which made both steamers vaguely tremble and he let those argue for him. The clamor of the passengers rose again in the breathless, baking air, and the captain of the liner had to yield. He threw up his arms in token of surrender and a hush fell upon the scene like the silence of death.

"My gompany shall pay you hondred tousand pound, captain, und—you haf der satisfaction dot you make me ruined man."

"I have been ruined myself," said Kettle, "heaps of times, and my turn for the other thing seems to be come now. I'll run down closer to you, captain, or do you bid your hands heave me a line from the fo'c's'le head as I come past. You've cut it pretty fine. You've no time left to get a boat in the water. The wind may come away any moment now.

Capt. Kettle was changing into another man. All the insouciance had gone from him. He gave his orders with crispness and decision, and the mates and the Lascars jumped to obey them. The horrible danger that was to come lay as an open advertisement, and they knew that their only way to pass safely through it—and even then the chances were slim—was to obey the man who commanded them to the uttermost tittle.

The connection between the steamers had been made, the snaky steel wire hawser had been hauled in through a stern fair-lead by the Saigon's winch, and the old mate stood ready with the shackle which would link it on the manilla.

The heavens yielded up an overture like the echo of a Titian's groan. "Hurry there, you slow-footed dogs!" came Kettle's voice from the bridge.

The Lascars brought up the eye of the hawser, and Murgatroyd threaded it on the pin of the shackle. Then he cried, "All fast," and picked up a spike and screwed home the pin in its socket. Already the engines were on the move again, and the Saigon was steaming ahead on the tow line. It was a time for hurry.

The air thickened and grew for the moment if anything more hot, and the tornado raced down upon them as a black wall stretching far across the sea, with white water gleaming and churning at its foot. It hit the steamers like a solid avalanche, and the spindthrift in it cut the faces of the men who tried to withstand it, as though whips had lashed them.

The coolie quartermaster clung on to the Saigon's wheel spokes, a mere wisp of limp humanity, incapable of steering or of doing anything else that required a modicum of rational thought. The little steamer fell away before the blast like a shaving in a dry street; the tonnage of the tornado heeled her till her lee scuppers spouted green water inboard; and she might well have been overturned at the very outset. But Kettle beat the helpless Lascar from his hold and spoked the wheel hard down; and the engines, working strongly, brought her round again in a wallowing circle to face the torrent of hurricane.

She took five minutes to make that recovery, and when she was steaming on again, head to the thunderous gusts, the tale of what she had endured was written in easy lettering. On both fore and main decks the bulwarks were gone level with the covering boards; the raffle of crates, harness casks, gangplanks, and so on, that a small trader carries in view to the sky, had departed beyond the ken of man; and, indeed, those lower decks were scoured clean to the naked rusted iron. The port lifeboat hung stove from bent davits, and three of the coolie crew had been swept from life into the grip of the eternal sea.

Cortolvin fought his way up on to the upper bridge step by step against the frantic beating of the wind, and, without being bidden, relieved at the lee spokes of the wheel. Capt. Kettle nodded his thanks. The Saigon had no steam steering gear, and in some of the heavier squalls the wheel threatened to take charge and pitch the little shipmaster clean over the spokes.

Amid the bellowing roar of the tornado, speech, of course, was impossible, and vision, too, was limited. No human eye could look into the wind, and even to let it strike the face was a torture. The sea did not get up. The crest of any wave which tried to rise was cut off remorselessly by the knives of the hurricane, and spread as a stinging mist throughout the wind. It was hard, indeed to tell where ocean ceased and air began. The whole sea was spread in a blurr of white and green.

The big helpless liner astern plucked savagely at the Saigon's tail, and the pair of them were moving coastward with speed. Left to herself and steaming full speed into the gale, the little Saigon would have been able to maintain her position, neither losing ground nor gaining any. With the heavy tow in charge, she was being driven toward the roaring surf of the African beach with perilous speed.

It was possible to see dimly down the wind, and when Cortolvin turned his face away from the stinging blast of the tornado, he could understand with clearness their exact position. Close astern was the plunging German liner, with her decks stripped and deserted and only the bridge officers exposed. Beyond was cotton-white sea, and beyond again were great leaping fountains of whiteness where the tortured ocean roared agaist the yellow beach.

Thirty minutes passed, each second of them brimmed with frenzied struggle for both man and machinery. The tornado raged and boomed and roared, and the backward drift was a thing which could be measured with the eye.

Then the old mate heaved himself up the bridge ladder by laborious inches. His clothes were whipping from him in tattered ribbons, his hat was gone, and the grizzled hair stood out from the back of his head like the bristles of a broom. He clawed his way along the rail and put his great red face close to Kettle's ear.

"We can't hold her," he roared. "She's taking us ashore. We shall be there in a dozen minutes, and then it will be 'Jones' for the lot of us."

Capt. Kettle glared, but made no articulate reply. If he could have spared a hand from the wheelspokes, it is probable that a Mr. Murgatroyd would have felt the weight of it.

The old fellow bawled at him again. "The hands knew it as well as me, and they say they're not going to be drowned for anybody. They say they're going to cast off the hawser."

This time Capt. Kettle yelled back a reply. "You thing!" he cried. "You putty man, get back to your post! If you want to live, keep those niggers'

NEED ALL ROUND DUTY

TO BUILD UP PERFECTLY ROUNDED CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

KEEP ONE'S OWN VINEYARD

Must Not Be Neglected and Permitted to Fall Into Decay While Doing the Duty Required by Obligations to Others—What Is Required of a Man Described by the Preacher in a Practical Sermon.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 16.—This timely sermon, appropriate to the season of the ingathering of fruits, brings to us a breath of the vineyards. The text is Canticles i., 6, "But mine own vineyard have I not kept."

Yes, I have seen a neglected vineyard. No man can fully understand what my text means unless he has roamed through one and has seen the rabbits scurry through the weeds two feet high and has lifted up the long unpruned vines heavy laden with undeveloped grapes, immature through lack of care, and has seen how the suckers have shot out from under the crowns as vipers sapping away the strength of the vines, and yet, as a rule, bearing no fruit. Yes, I have been through such a vineyard. I have wandered through one, accompanied by an old vine grower. I have seen him pathetically lift up vine after vine, as a physician might look at the gangrened limb of a little child, which decomposition has been caused by the malpractice of an ignorant doctor, and I have heard him say: "Shame! Shame! It is a perfect shame to let this vineyard go to waste. Why, even after this neglect, there are at least sixty pounds of good grapes upon that one vine alone. Shame, shame, to destroy such a vineyard as this growing upon such rich soil."

Perhaps you would like to know how we came to see this fine vineyard going to waste. I had turned my steps homeward. My summer vacation in southern California was about ended. The duties of a busy pastorate were calling me back to the city. With a companion, I was taking a short cut through one of the very rarely traveled canyons, when suddenly, as night overtook us, we came upon a deserted farm, or ranch. It was in one of the garden spots of the world. For nearly twenty years its owner had lived there, battling against consumption. A few months before we arrived the end had come, and his pain-racked body was placed in the dust from whence it came. For some years before he died all his energies were evidently exhausted in a physical struggle for mere existence. There were the broad fields stretching away, practically uncultivated. There were the beautiful trees near to his ranch home just as nature had grown them. There were the deserted rooms of his dwelling, with one of the walls fallen in upon his empty bed. The books and weekly periodicals were still lying around. There were even some of his canceled cheques lying upon the floor. There was a farm, or ranch, of 500 acres, 300 of which were tillable, with their orchards and fields and vineyards, but with no hand to care for them. The doves, the quails, the rabbits, the bees, were everywhere holding high carnival. As we lay for a few nights under those trees we could hear the wildcat's snarling calls and the fox's barks and the coyote's yells as they were starting out to hunt their prey. It was a beautiful, but a sad, sad, sad place. For this place, like Victor Hugo's Notre Dame, had a spirit. We could see moving everywhere the frail, sick form of the late owner, who, on account of his physical ailments, had been compelled to neglect those fields and orchards and vineyards.

There might have been some excuse for the sick man who owned this neglected vineyard of which I have spoken to have neglected his vineyard, but there is no excuse for us to neglect our spiritual vineyards, as the author of Canticles declares the church of God has been doing. Now, as we all, each fall, delight to eat the rich, luscious grapes which are placed upon our dining room tables I thought this morning I would draw my sermonic illustrations from the vineyard industries of the world. My comparison will not be found in the grapevines which some of us raise in our country homes, where we build a little arbor in our back yards and there allow a few vines to grow over it, under which we flee to escape the intense heat of the midnoon sun. But I will draw my illustrations from the great grape industries of Italy or Spain or southern California, as well as that of the Holy Land, where grape growing is a business upon an enlarged scale, and where the vines, laid out in long rows 8 by 8 or 8 by 10, stretch themselves over hundreds and sometimes thousands upon thousands of acres, as the cornfields spread themselves over the prairies of Kansas or the wheatfields grow in the Dakotas.

The words which introduce my text are: "My mother's children are angry with me. They made me keeper of the vineyards, but mine own vineyard have I not kept." That is the word picture of a son who has been left the executor of his father's estate. The last sickness has come. The funeral is over. The will has been read. The will goes something thuswise: "This is my last will and testament. If I should be called suddenly away, I leave all my vineyards to my children, share and share alike. But that these properties may be made to pay their maximums, I leave my oldest son as the executor of the whole estate. He is to prune the vineyards and cultivate them and market the fruit and divide the proceeds with the other children, until they become of age and can care for their own." The eldest son is conscientious. He takes care of the vineyards of his brothers and sisters, cultivating and pruning them, and brings them to a high state of development. Each of the vineyards goes out of his hands as one brother or sister after another comes of age. The eldest son then discovers that while he was caring for those other vineyards his own vineyard has fallen into ruin. The writer is describing the folly of a one-sided policy, the neglect of one duty to perform another; as the teacher, so attentive to the progress of his own pupils that he neglects his own development and falls behind his time, or the preacher, intent on the welfare of his flock, while his own sons, who had the first claim on him, are neglected and go to ruin.

"How long do the grapevines live?" I asked an old grape grower. "Do they have a comparatively short life, like that of the peach tree, which, as a horse, dies from old age anywhere between fifteen and twenty years? Do they live on and on, as the walnut tree, bearing even after it has reached the century mark?" "Well," answered this vineyard grower, "that depends. If a vineyard is taken care of the vines seem to have no age limit. There are in southern California grape bearing vines which were planted by the Indians under the old Spanish regime." "But what if a man neglects his vineyard or waters it too much?" "If a man tries to force a vine's grapes and does not allow it to sink its roots deep enough into the soil, that vineyard will die. In other words, if a man cares for his vineyards aright they have practically no age limit. With my eyes I have seen luscious grapes growing on vines over ninety years old." This was the testimony of the grape grower. Did not your Christian, godly parents care for their gospel vineyards aright? Did they not let the roots sink deep enough into the ground to bury their fibers in the rich soil which lies deep under the Calvary cross?

When the springtime comes, the rich, green, tender shoots begin to grow, upon which the rabbits love to feast. To prevent this injury, the wise owner of the vineyards builds his wire fences clear around the vineyard to keep the four-legged pests out. When the army worms marshal their hosts by the thousands and the millions and the billions and move forward to annihilate those vineyards, the owners of the vineyards dig their deep, wide trenches about their precious fruits so that these worm destroyers cannot get in, as the cavalier of mediaeval times had his moats filled with water about his walled castle to keep the enemies out. With the rich grapes come, the vineyard owner has his armed men, as sentinels, continually moving in and out among the vines to drive away the quail that would eat up the young grapes. Thus did your Christian father and mother continually build their spiritual wire fences and dig their ditches and fight away the little foxes of evil and the quail of temptations which would come to destroy their spiritual vineyards. Did they not daily lift between themselves and the world the precious promises of God? Aye, they literally soaked their lives in the commandments of God, so that they could not be tempted by any temptations greater than they could bear.

Do not tell me that when your Christian father died he left you no inheritance. You say, "When he died the farm went to my elder brother." But your father's greatest asset was not in his farm. You say, "He had a little money—a few thousand dollars—but he left all that to my mother and invalid sister." But you father's estate had more than money. You inherited his spiritual vineyard. You have inherited his example of a Christian life well lived. You have inherited the example of the joy and peace which come to a noble Christian man who, in every word he speaks and in every deed he does, speaks and lives for God. Am I wrong in declaring that the vineyards which have come to you are inherited vineyards? Your inherited spiritual vineyards are as old as the prayers your father made on the day he first knelt at the communion of the Lord's supper. They are as old as the prayers he made on the day he dedicated you to God when you were baptized at the church altars. They are as old as the prayers he made for you at the family altar on the day you left the old homestead. They are as old as the blessing and benediction he gave when he put his trembling hand upon your head on the day he died, when he said, "My boy, I gave you to God when you were born; I give you to God now that I must leave you to stand before the judgment seat of Christ." Oh, my friends, what a spiritual blessing has been yours! Your gospel vines were not planted last week or last year. You have an inherited gospel vineyard. You have inherited those vineyards directly from your father's and mother's Christian lives and consecrated home. You cannot if you would, and you would not if you could, get away from this vital, spiritual, life-giving doctrine.

We do not inherit our gospel vines alone. We also inherit a vast acreage of rich, uncultivated soil, upon which we should plant new vineyards and enlarge our grape producing regions. In other words, no child has a right to be content with the work which his forefathers accomplished. Each new generation has greater opportunities for doing good than had the generations which preceded it. Therefore, it is your duty and mine to be continually going ahead and doing larger and grander and nobler work than did our fathers and mothers. We should profit by their mistakes as well as successes. To speak figuratively, by standing upon their broad shoulders we should lift our heads higher than they did. Therefore we should have a larger horizon for our gospel vision.

It is of infinite importance not to neglect the old gospel vines which have been carefully cultivated by our Christian ancestors. But is that any reason to neglect new fields of gospel labor? John Knox led his gospel mission to the court of Mary, Queen of Scots, and he did a great and good work, but that other mighty Scotchman, Alexander Duff, was not content with serving his own country, but proceeded to cultivate new gospel vineyards and went as a foreign missionary to India. The Bedford allegorist, John Bunyan, was willing to languish in jail because they would not let him preach as a nonconformist minister, but that other great nonconformist English preacher, William Booth, resolves to break away from his Methodist brethren in order to lead the Salvation Army in its gospel mission among the slums and to the outcasts of the world. Abraham Lincoln signed the emancipation proclamation for the American slave. Booker T. Washington resolves to take another step forward and lead his negro compatriots into the higher realms of domestic purity and mechanical and agricultural usefulness and Christian citizenship. Our Christian mothers believed as Paul commanded the ancient disciples in his Corinthian epistle, "Let your women keep silence in church, for it is not permitted unto them to speak," but their daughters will not be debarred from service, so they find work for a Frances E. Willard and a Frances Havergal and a Susan B. Anthony and a Maud Booth and for thousands upon thousands of noble women and young girls, who are pleading for Christ in our midnight prayer meetings, and who are working in our rescue missions, and who are the leaders of our social settlements, our Christian Endeavor societies and our Epworth Leagues. Oh, my dear friends, our Christian fathers and mothers did a mighty work for Christ in the times in which they lived. But what greater gospel work are you doing? What further missionary fields are you reaching? Is the social outcast problem nearer being solved than when your Christian ancestors died? Are the black man and the yellow man and the red man and the peasant and the saloon keeper nearer to Christ than they were half a century ago? What new vines of gospel usefulness have you planted for Christ which are now bringing forth their great clusters of Eshcol grapes for the heavenly wine press? Are most of your rich fields, rich in soils of gospel opportunities, lying fallow and useless?

Too often we have not only neglected to care for the vines which we have inherited from our Christian ancestors and planted only here and there a stray vine in the broad, empty fields of gospel opportunities, but our sins of omission do not end here. After we have neglected our gospel vineyards we have been too indifferent and lazy to gather the clusters of grapes which have grown upon our vines in spite of our neglect. We seem to says to our heavenly Father: "God, I care so little for thee and thy glory that I would not even lift a finger to do good to those who are by my side. Nay, I will not speak even a word to bring my children to thee or my husband to thee or my father to thee or my friends to thee. I will let my neglected vines grow their grapes and then drop them to the ground. There I will let them lie and rot and rot before I will carry even one bunch of them to the gospel wine press." How easy it is to find this sinful indifference to Christ symbolized in some of the neglected vineyards of southern California!

Is not this fact true in your life? You know your little boy wants to become a Christian. His very face shows that he has your godly mother's consecrated blood in his veins. You see her looks there more every day. About three weeks ago he came home from Sunday school and told you about his lessons. If I remember right, it was about the parable of the householder who had rich grape producing soil. He planted a vineyard therein and let it out to the husbandmen. Then he went off into a far country. But when the time of grapes had come these husbandmen stole the vineyard from its owner and killed his messengers who came to collect the rent. Then at last they killed his only begotten Son, who was Jesus Christ.

You will recollect how sweetly the boy told you the story. Then with his deep blue eyes he looked up into your face as he said, 'Papa, will you let me join the church and give my heart to Jesus?" What did you tell him? You quickly answered: "Charley, you are not old enough. Wait a few years and then you can." Then he looked up at you again. This time his face looked more to you like your sainted mother's than ever before, and he said: "But, papa, you are old enough. Why do you not join the church and pray as Harry's father prays?" Then he said to you: "Papa, do you suppose when I get to be a great big man like you are I won't want to go to church any more than you do? Then will I want to leave Sunday school and stay home from church every Sunday morning and read the newspapers as you do and let mamma go to church alone?" Was it the child alone pleading with you for Christ. Was it your sainted mother? Tell me, man, are you going to let those rich clusters of grapes ripen in your gospel vineyard and not be plucked? Will you continue to let them ripen and fall and rot upon the ground as you have done so often in the past years. O man, will you not learn today the Christ lesson of the husbandman who planted the vineyard and let it out to the husbandmen, which your little boy learned in his Sunday school class only a few weeks ago?

One other word of caution. Some men are busy in the Sunday school, and we thank God for such helpers. Some are regularly at church and at the prayer meeting, and most devoutly does the pastor rejoice over such members. But do not neglect your own vineyards. When your children grow up let them not have to say, "My father was never at home; he did not do anything for my religious training."

But, after all, the saddest fact about this bewailment of my text is this: The surest of crops which comes to the grower is the grape crop. When a man neglects his vineyards he neglects the gathering of grapes which are almost certain to be his reward each year if he only cares for the vines as they ought to be tended.

Thus, my friends, the surest of all returns, both for this life and for that which is to come, are the rich clusters of Eschol grapes which we can gather from Christ's vineyards. Oh, how sweet and luscious will they taste when the hot famines of life come on! Oh, how sweet they will be to our parched lips when, with blistered feet, we must travel the hot sands of trouble! Oh, how beautifully and tenderly those vines will grow when we spread them over the new-made grave of a dear one! And, oh, what an immortal tonic they will be when we quaff their nectar, as with feverish hand we press those gospel grapes to our lips upon our deathbed! Friend, would you not, with Christ's help, like to plant again and care for your gospel vineyards which will bring to you such joy, such peace, such comfort and such eternal results? Ah, yes, the gospel vineyards always bring forth a sure crop. This crop is to be yours forever if you ask Christ to help you replant and develop your neglected gospel vineyards.

WATCH WORK OF CRIMPS.

Operations of Men Who Abduct Able-Bodied Seamen—Will Be Subject to Surveillance on the Pacific Coast.

The Pacific coast, the last home of the shanghaier and the crimp in the new world, is determined to remove that reproach. The State of Washington has given the blood-money men of Seattle and Puget Sound notice that the stringent laws will be enforced, and now the Canadian Government has appointed Mr. Alexander Henderson, judge of the County Court of Vancouver, a special commissioner to inquire into all the transactions of the shipping office here.

The newspapers have told of late such terrible stories of men being enticed to drink, then, as often as not, doped and placed aboard windjammers, that the Marine and Fisheries Department at Ottawa has taken official cognizance of the complaints. The shanghaling of an old man of 68 named Keating and the mysterious disappearance of a fifteen-year-old boy called Chisholm who ran away to sea, have been instrumental in deciding the Government to appoint the commission.

It is impossible to say just how many men have been made drunk in waterfront hotels and shipped on board sailing vessels in an unconscious condition, but that a number of unfortunates have been treated this way in the last few years is absolutely certain. Of course, it is unlawful for the shipping office to allow men to be signed on when they are in a state of intoxication, and it will be the duty of the commissioner to find out if the local officials were aware that men whom they allowed to be placed on ships were in an irresponsible condition.

Two men shipped as sailors, one at Vancouver and the other in New Westminster, have been released recently after Police Court inquiries, both of whom claimed that they had been made intoxicated by "runners" and then shipped as able-bodied seamen. The Dominion Government is determined that this sort of thing shall be done away with. The shipping master says he courts the fullest investigation.

Behind the running away to sea of James Chisholm, aged fifteen years, his capture and his escape, is a charge that a boarding-house-keeper of Puget Sound who has received unenviable notoriety of late, shipped the boy and was instrumental in his eluding the police. The American, of course, wanted the blood-money of $35 which is paid for every man or boy shipped on a vessel by him.

The boy mysteriously disappeared from here several days ago, and it was discovered that he had been shipped through the American on the sailing vessel, The Pass of Leny. The lad was taken to Esquimalt by this man's agents and put aboard the ship in the Royal Roads. The police sent word to the captain to return him to his parents. The boarding-house master's launch was making a run from the ship and Chisholm was brought in, but the Puget Sound man alleges he slipped ashore and disappeared. The lad has not yet been recaptured, and the police look upon the story as being decidedly fishy.

It is possible a charge of abduction may be brought. The shipping act makes it clear that anyone who gets a boy to ship without the consent of his parents is guilty of this offence.

British Postmaster-General's Problem.

In the annual report for the year ending March 31, the British Postmaster-General says the question of reduction of postage charged for magazines, periodicals and newspapers sent from the United Kingdom to Canada is engaging his attention. "Although there are obvious objections to making in the case of Canada arrangements more favorable than can be granted to periodicals, etc., passing within the United Kingdom itself, or not to other colonies, I recognize that in consequence of the geographical situation of the Dominion the circumstances are exceptional, and I am endeavoring to concert some plan which will meet the end in view without unduly burdening the exchequer."

Following is an estimate of the weight of letters and postcards other than articles exchanged by the United Kingdom with Canada and Newfoundland despatched from the United Kingdom: Letters and postcards weighed 248,000 pounds; circulars, book packets, newspapers, 1,891,000 pounds. Destined for the United Kingdom, 18,700 pounds letters, 616,000 pounds books and papers; number of parcels despatched to Canada was 172,609; received, 76,492. The amount of money order transactions between the United Kingdom and British America were: Issued in the United Kingdom, £196,685; issued in British America, £545,584.

A Good Name For a Town.

We "effete Easterners" know, of course, of the spirit of 'hustle" which animates the West, and there are few people down here who have not been told strange tales of the marvelous growth of a "town" after its location. Warman, on the Canadian Northern, is an instance which comes to mind at the moment. One day it was just prairie; next day there were a dozen stores, numerous tents, and work had begun on a school and a church. But it has remained for one little colony of Michiganders, who have settled in Alberta, to give to their town a name which is characteristic of Canada's New West. They have called their town HURRY, and that they are true to their name is shown in the fact that whereas a year ago the site of the town was just rolling prairie, it now has stores, churches, schools and practically all the comforts of civilization. Hurry is located twenty-five miles south of Vegreville, Alberta. Add it to the names in your Gazetteer, for it will be heard of again.

The Cat Came Back.

Mr. Frank Lacey, of Sprague, Manitoba, found his young chickens being killed off in a wholesale manner, and jumping to conclusions, decided that "it was the cat." And so Pussy was shipped off to a friend at Rainy River, 60 miles distant. But even after Pussy's departure, the killing of the chickens continued; a careful watch was kept; the culprit was found to be a large hawk; and it was promptly killed. Then came the coincidence. The very morning her innocence had been proven in walked Miss Pussy, weary and dusty after her tramp, but "still in the ring."

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE.

The better self shall live till human Time
Shall fold its eyelids, and the human sky
Be gathered like a scroll within the tomb
Unread forever
This is life to come,
Which martyred men have made more glorious
For us who strive to follow. May I reach,
That purest haven; be to other souls
The cup of strength in some great agony,
Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love,
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty—
Be the sweet presence of a good diffused,
And in diffusion ever more intense.
So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world.

FOURPENCE A DAY MEN.

Interesting Letter From Bromley Experiments in Canada.

At the conclusion of the successful experiment at Bromley, during which four men lived sufficiently and well at a cost for food of 4d a day each, it may be remembered that two of them were sent to Canada by The London Express, in conjunction with the emigration department of the Salvation Army.

The following letter was received recently from Harding, one of the men.

To the Editor of The Express:

Sir,—I arrived safely on Sunday last, after a rather rough voyage. We were two days overdue when we arrived at Quebec. The item that caused the greatest excitement on board was the arrival of the four-penny men. There was a discussion in the saloon as to what would be the cheapest way to victual a ship, and after hearing various opinions I gave them a little menu and its cost.

They, of course, ridiculed my statement, saying that it was impossible to obtain the articles at the price, but I mentioned that I had lived on the diet for three months.

They bombarded me with questions as to how I felt, and so on; and for the remainder of the voyage I was continually sought for by lady passengers to give them recipes. At the concert we had they billed me on the program as the "Food Reformer."

We arrived in Quebec on Sunday morning. We interviewed the Salvation Immigrant department, and were sent to Shelburne to a Mr. Sheppard; left at 9.30 a. m. en route to Montreal, stayed there five hours, resumed our journey to Toronto, arriving there at 7.30 a.m. Monday morning; stayed there six hours, and arrived at our destination at 9.30 p.m. the same night.

Surprise Visit.

Enquiring at the station, I found I had four miles to walk. On arriving at the farm everybody was in bed. We were sorry, but had to knock them up. Mr. Sheppard was surprised to see us, and said that he was not wanting anybody. He, however, very kindly gave us some supper and a bed. We were awakened early next morning by Mr. Sheppard saying that there was a gentleman wanting two men waiting to see us.

We quickly dressed and interviewed the gentleman, who engaged me and sent Smith to his son's, about a mile away. Mr. Kindrew is my employer's name, and a nicer man I have never met. They treat me as one of their family. The country here is grand—lovely pastures — and there is every prospect of a good crop.

My routine of work has been fencing, cutting down timber in the bush, and looking after cattle. Mr. Kindrew is very careful to point out every detail I do not understand. I am enjoying this life immensely, and shall stick to it.

A Difficult Problem Solved.

A subscriber once wrote to an editor and asked:

"Please tell me, does a man in running around a tree go before or behind himself?"

The editor answered:

"That depends. If he is trying to catch himself, necessarily he follows himself, and consequently goes behind. If, on the contrary, he is running away from himself, the deduction leads to the very obvious conclusion that he precedes himself, and consequently goes before. If he succeeds in catching up with himself, and passes himself, at the moment of passing he neither precedes nor follows himself, but both he and himself are running even. This is the only case where he does not go before or behind himself.—Calgary Herald.

A Wrinkle For Housewives.

"I have been putting up preserves and pickles for 30 years," said a housewife of the old school, "and I discovered the other day that I am not too old to learn something new. I went to see my son's young wife. They were married last winter. She was putting up onions—a decidedly disagreeable task. But her eyes were not watery. They were as clear as the sky. She simply nodded and muttered something between closed teeth. "What in the world are you keeping that pin between your teeth for?" I asked. "To keep the onions from hurting my eyes. I'll be through in a minute." "Do you mean to say that will do it " I asked incredulously. She nodded. The pin was in its place again. She kept it there for ten minutes while I watched her work, and her eyes were as dry as a walnut."

Barnstormers For the West.

A theatrical syndicate is being formed in Winnipeg for the purpose of supplying attractions at every town between that city and Vancouver on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The idea is to play one night a week in each town and to have the same night each week, so that farmers as well as townspeople will always look forward to this one day each week for stage amusement. If this kind of thing keeps up, how long will the specie-burdened farmer of the prairies come down to Ontario at Christmas-tide to "have a good time"?

IN TORONTO'S GHETTO.

Queen City Has the Only Jewish Bank in the Dominion—Forms Printed in Yiddish.

There is one Jewish bank in Canada and Toronto is the proud possessor, says a writer in The Montreal Standard.

Its home is at the corner of Chestnut and Agnes streets. Situated in the heart of the Ghetto it is typically Jewish, and is greatly appreciated by the thrifty Russian, Polish and other Jews who have made Toronto their home.

In order that its customers may experience no difficulty in the depositing or withdrawing of money, the deposit book, slips and draft forms are all printed in Yiddish. The manager, Mr. Joseph William Gurofsky, is himself a well-known Hebrew, who previous to his accepting the management of the first and only Jewish bank in the Dominion, held a responsible position for several years in the assessment department in Toronto's civic palace, and is very popular with his clients, who relish nothing better than having a chat with the Yiddish-speaking manager, who is at all times ready to make out their deposit slips and help them in divers other ways.

Bank Open Some Evenings.

For the convenience of the Jewish workingmen who are employed during the day, the bank is open Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, and it is a curious and interesting sight to watch these former subjects of the Russian Czar hand in their books and money to the teller, who, though unable to speak Yiddish, understands the international Jewish language. Russian, Polish and German are languages with which the officials of this institution are also familiar, and they have no difficulty in spelling the jaw-breaking names that are borne by the majority of their patrons. One of the most important features of the bank, and which appeals very strongly to the foreign population of the city is the ease and cheapness of sending money to friends and relatives in Russia through its agency.

Money Sent to Russia.

Manager Gurofsky said that since the opening of the bank, which took place on Dec. 11 of last year, the sum of $30,000 was sent to cities and towns in Russia. Most of this money was to enable the survivors of the Russian massacres to come to Canada. Another result of the opening of the bank, which all the Hebrews point to with pride, is that it has stimulated the buying and selling of real estate in the Jewish quarter, many of the bank's best customers being large holders of real estate.

What surprises the Hebrew visitor from other Canadian cities is that in spite of the metropolitan city in Canada having a Jewish population of three times as great and influential as that of Toronto, it cannot yet boast of having a similar institution.

Depositors Are Increasing.

The number of the bank's depositors notwithstanding its brief existence, runs into four figures, and already the chief officials are talking of increasing the already large staff and enlarging the building. That it is filling a want which no other bank can fill has been admitted by its competitors, many of whom are mourning the loss of some of their best accounts.

Next to the bank there is a sub-post-office, the postmaster of which is also another well-known Hebrew, in the person of Mr. Louis Gurofsky, who has the honor of being the only Jewish postmaster in Canada.

MOURNING GARB.

Menace to Health, Through Retaining Heat, Says Montreal Doctor.

The danger to health of mourning garb is pointed out by Dr. Stenson Hooker, says The Montreal Standard. Sunshine and fresh air are essential to health, and any clothes which prevent a due supply of fresh air from reaching our bodies, and absorb the sun's rays, thus preventing these from reaching our bodies also, exert a pernicious effect upon the general health.

Black intercepts the sun's rays. In other words, it "retains the heat"; so that by covering ourselves in black we not only absolutely keep out the sunlight—that is all there may chance to be in this uncertain climate—but also give ourselves unnecessary discomfort by the retention of the heat — which heat, when excessive, is particularly exhausting.

Then we have also the depressing effect upon the system generally caused by seeing ourselves or others all in black. The system is very responsive to such influences, and is very considerably lower in tone, thus making us an easy prey to cold-catching, with its sometimes fatal results. Depressing clothing also causes depressing thoughts all around us, for "thoughts are things," and fly from one to another just as easily as the messages fly from point to point in the case of wireless telegraph, and nothing lowers the standard of health so much as depression.

A well-known implement agent, while on a visit to Dundalk the other day, went out for a drive with a local man and in the course of the jaunt got out at a creek for a drink. In the water he noticed a number of small lizards and succeeded in catching two or three. On returning to town he called for refreshments in the form of lager, and when the white aproned servitor turned his back dropped a lizard into one of the glasses. Just as his friend raised the glass, says The Dundalk Herald, the joker thought he saw something move in it, and asked him if there was anything in his lager. Sure enough a lizard was there and the glasses were emptied in the spittoons. The barkeeper filled them up again and another lizard was slyly slipped into another glass. Consternation reigned supreme when this one was pointed out, and the man behind the bar was in doubts as to whether he saw snakes or thought he saw them. He tore around for awhile vowing vengeance on the brewer and various other things, but after the jokers considered that enough hot air had escaped to effect the thermometer they put him wise.

THE DINING ROOM.

Its Management In Homes Where No Maids Are Kept.

In the many homes where no maids are kept the daily care of the dining room may be said to begin on the previous evening, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. Following the evening meal and dish washing, the table should be set for breakfast, then covered with a light cloth made of two breadths of fine cheesecloth. This keeps off the dust from fires or windows and is especially necessary during the months in which fires abound.

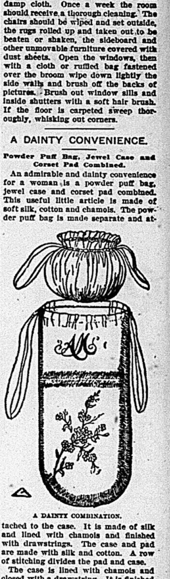
After straightening chairs and drawing curtains the house mother need not think of the room until a few moments before the morning meal. Then it is aired, the protecting cover removed, and all is ready. Following breakfast the crumbs are brushed up, the table covered with a colored cloth, the floor if bare wiped with a dry cloth, the room dusted and the shades partly drawn.

Where there are children in the family it is well to have a daily inspection of chairs and door knobs. With the best of intentions on their part, little hands may leave grease or stick on one or the other, and such spots should be wiped off while fresh with a clean damp cloth. Once a week the room should receive a thorough cleaning. The chairs should be wiped and set outside, the rugs rolled up and taken out to be beaten or shaken, the sideboard and other unmovable furniture covered with dust sheets. Open the windows, then with a cloth or ruffled bag fastened over the broom wipe down lightly the side walls and brush off the backs of pictures. Brush out window sills and inside shutters with a soft hair brush. If the floor is carpeted sweep thoroughly, whisking out corners.

A DAINTY CONVENIENCE.

Powder Puff Bag, Jewel Case and Corset Pad Combined.

An admirable and dainty convenience for a woman is a powder puff bag, jewel case and corset pad combined. This useful little article is made of soft silk, cotton and chamois. The powder puff bag is made separate and attached to the case. It is made of silk and lined with chamois and finished with drawstrings. The case and pad are made with silk and cotton. A row of stitching divides the pad and case.



A DAINTY COMBINATION.

The case is lined with chamois and closed with a drawstring. It is finished around the edges with the buttonhole stitch and the monogram and a floral design, either hand painted or embroidered. This makes also a charming gift. —St. Louis Republic.

Speak Distinctly.

Why in the world more women don't study the art of articulation and learn to speak so that the average mortal can hear without being screamed at is a question which is agitating one woman's club just now to a great extent. It is a subject which most women would do well to consider, both as applied to their own tricks of speech and to the training of children. As frequent a fault as a shrill voice or one that lacks the soft modulations which, like the "low voice," are "excellent things in women" is the habit of saying all your words apparently in your throat, of mumbling or of talking so rapidly—a sign of "nerves"—that it is difficult for any one to understand without asking for a repetition—a thing every one dislikes to do. If mothers and teachers alike insisted upon careful enunciation of words and sentences by children the habit of speaking distinctly would be as easily established as its reverse is hard to break.

Practical Wives.

It is not always the girl who has been sheltered at home and knows none of the worries that beset a man in business who makes the best wife. Rather is it the one who has had some experience of the business world which surrounds the husband day after day. She understands the value of money better, having had to work for it herself, and is less likely to be extravagant in the matter of dress after cultivating a habit of neatness and care during her business career. Then again she understands that he cannot always shut up his books exactly at a certain minute, and the five minutes that he is delayed loses him his regular train, and that means a wait of perhaps half an hour, dinner waiting in the meantime. Much may be said against the business girl, but she probably is the best to help a husband.

Three Linkers In The Queen City.

OFFICIAL PROGRAMME FOR THIS WEEK — GRAND PARADE ON WEDNESDAY—LOCAL NOTES.

The chances are that many Oddfellows from this city will visit Toronto this week. In fact the Queen City will be the Mecca of all wearers of the Three Links in America. The local Canton, we are told, will not go up in a body, neither will the I.O.O.F. band, which latter organization, however, is supposed to go up on Wednesday morning, and must report at the Queen's hotel at noon on that day. They will head the State of Massachusetts in the big parade. Following is the official programme for this week;

Monday, September 17th.

9.30 a.m.—Public welcome to Sovereign Grand Lodge in the Legislative Chamber of the Parliament Buildings, Joseph Oliver, P.G.R., presiding. Addresses by Hon. J. P. Whitney, Premier, his Worship Emerson Coatsworth, Mayor; W. S. Johnston, Grand Master of Ontario; Jos. Powley, Grand Patriarch of Ontario, and Miss Ida J. Robins, President of the Rebekah Assembly of Ontario. Response by Hon. Robert E. Wright, Grand Sire.

2.30 p.m. — Subordinate Lodge Degree competitions in the Assembly Hall, Temple Building.

2.30 p.m. — Encampment Degree competitions in Victoria Hall.

2 to 5.30 p.m. — Reception by Rebekahs of Ontario to sisters and lady visitors of the I.O.O.F. Hall, corner of Yonge and College streets.

FORMER POPULAR RESIDENT IS DEAD

MR. MALCOLM MOON, LATE OF PORT ARTHUR, PASSED AWAY SUDDENLY IN THAT TOWN.

On Saturday afternoon a telegram was received in this city announcing the death of Mr. Malcolm Moon, which occurred at Port Arthur on Saturday morning. The cause of death was not given, but it is surmised that it was sudden, as no notice of his illness had been given.

The deceased was well known in this city, where he resided the greater portion of his life, being by profession a master painter. Some two years ago he removed from this city to Port Arthur.

The late Mr. Moon was 45 years of age and was a son of the late Mr. John Moon, of this city. He was born in this vicinity.

In the year 1894 Mr. Moon was a member of the City Council, having been elected as one of the representatives from Murney Ward. He was also connected with two prominent secret societies, being a member of Eureka Lodge, A. F. and A. M., and Belleville Lodge, I.O.O.F., No. 81. He retained his membership in these lodges up to the time of his demise. At the time of writing it was not known whether or not the body would be brought here for interment.

Some 20 years ago Mr. Moon married Miss Fitzgerald, of this city, who, with one son, Percy, and one daughter, Miss Pearl, survives. The other members of the family are two brothers, Charles, of Bayside, Front of Sidney, and Lewis, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and three sisters, Mrs. F. Orr, of this city; Mrs. D. Clapp and Mrs. F. Wallace, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Mr. Moon was a man who was esteemed by all who knew him, and the news of his demise came as a shock to his many friends in this city. He was an adherent of the Methodist church and in politics was a Liberal.

Since the above was in type we learn that the remains will be interred at Port Arthur to-morrow afternoon.

DIED IN SIDNEY

WELL-KNOWN YEOMAN PASSED AWAY AS RESULT OF PARALYTIC STROKE.

A few weeks ago Mr. Marshall B. Vanderwaters, a yeoman who resided in the second concession of Sidney, was overcome by the intense heat, and subsequently had a paralytic stroke. As the result of these afflictions he passed away at 11.30 Sunday night, at his home. Deceased, who was in his 60th year, was the eldest son of the late Mr. Henry Vanderwaters, who died in the city recently. Marshall Vanderwaters was born in Sidney, where he resided all his life. He was well and favorably known in the township where he lived. Deceased was a member of Eureka Lodge A.F. and A.M., of this city. In religion he was a Methodist, and in politics a Liberal. A widow and one daughter, Mrs. David Lawrence, of Canifton, survives.

Stole Ticker From A Boarding House.

Mr. W. Reid, who keeps a boarding-house on Front street, reports to the police that a man's gold-filled open-faced watch and a razor were stolen from one of the boarders' rooms. There is at present no clue as to who purloined the articles.

Rubbish on Fire

At 11.30 this morning the fire brigade was called out. The burning of a pile of rubbish in rear of a dwelling on the lower part of Front St. was the cause of alarm. No damage was done and the brigade's services was not required.

The Last Rites.

The last sad rites in connection with the late Mrs. R. McCrudden were held on Saturday afternoon, when the remains were consigned to the tomb. A large number of citizens were present at the obsequies. Services were conducted at the family residence, Catherine street, by the Rev. R. H. Leitch, Pastor of Holloway Street Church, who in his remarks spoke in an eulogistic manner of the deceased and extolled her Christian character. The floral tributes were both numerous and beautiful in design and were contributed by relatives and friends in Buffalo, Montreal, Toronto and this city. The bearers were four sons: Richard, of this city; Robert and William, of Toronto; James, of Buffalo; and two grandsons, Frank and Stanley McCrudden, of Toronto. The remains were interred in the Belleville cemetery.

As to Tax Sales.

CITY SOLICITOR MIKEL ANSWERS SOME QUESTIONS ASKED BY A CORRESPONDENT ON SATURDAY — A SLEDGEHAMMER ARGUMENT FOR THE PROMPT RETURN OF ALL TAX ROLLS.

"I see," said City Solicitor Mikel this morning, "that one of your correspondents is looking for information."

"Yes," said The Intelligencer, "will you be good enough to enlighten him?"

"The facts are," said Mr. Mikel, "that anyone buying a lot or lots at the next tax sale will not be able to get a clear title except by payment of the taxes of 1904, 1905 and 1906, providing the taxes of those years are outstanding against the lot or lots in question. He may buy a lot for a certain sum, but the fact remains that, while those taxes are standing against that lot it is liable to be seized and sold whenever the next tax sale takes place."

"Rather!" said Mr. Mikel.

"And what brought about this peculiar state of affairs?" he was asked.

"The fact that the tax rolls have not been returned as they should have been," said the City Solicitor. "There should be a sale of lands for taxes each year, if all taxes are not paid and the rolls are properly returned. In that case, of course, there would only be one year's taxes outstanding against the lands, instead of three, as is probably the case at present. But the City Treasurer cannot prepare for a tax sale until the rolls are returned; then he MUST do so; the Statute directs him to, without additional authority from anybody. There has not been a tax sale in Belleville since 1902," he added, as an after-thought.

"Suppose," said the newspaper man, as a thought struck him, "that a party bought a lot at a tax sale, say, twelve years ago, and built a house on it without bothering about the title. Could he be called on now to pay the outstanding taxes upon it, if there happened to be any when he bought the lot?"

So this is how the case now stands, as our correspondent of Saturday can figure out for himself: If he wants to buy a lot from the city at the tax sale, he must pay the taxes of 1904, 1905 and 1906 (providing they are outstanding), if he wants a title; or he may take his chances of being in undisputed possession for ten years, but must bear in mind that no man or set of men have the legal right to remit those taxes, and it is the sworn duty of the City Treasurer to include all lands in his annual tax sales so long as unpaid taxes are standing against them, no matter who the owner is supposed to be.

An Old-Time Evangelist

Every seat was occupied last night by those desirous of hearing the old-time evangelist, Alexander Marshall, who also addressed a good company in the afternoon. Mr. Marshall has lost none of his former zeal, and gave, in his own impressive manner, an earnest address from 2nd Kings, 5th chapter,—Naaman the leper, showing him as a picture of every one to-day who has not been born again and like many who, although they admit they can do something in the way of paying for salvation. Naaman was willing to pay; he was, in fact, no common leper, but, as it were, a gentleman leper who would pay his way, but he had to accept a cure as a gift, as the sinner to-day must take the place of a lost, guilty one and accept, as a free gift, eternal life, believing in the Lord Jesus Christ Mr. Marshall announced one more meeting to-night at 8, and all are invited. It may be the last opportunity of hearing him.

SEVEN PERISH IN FIRE

Gilmour Hotel, Ottawa, Proves to Be a Holocaust.

Seven Persons, Inmates of the Hotel Destroyed by Fire Friday Night, Are Unaccounted For, and It Is Feared That All of Them Fell Victims—No Human Remains Yet Found—Injured Are Doing Well.

Ottawa, Sept. 17.—Seven persons who were supposed to be in the Gilmour Hotel, destroyed by fire on Friday night, are unaccounted for, and it is feared that all of them fell victims. They are:

William Wilson, Montreal.
Miss Loveday, Toronto.
—— Shillington, address unknown.
—— Quinn, address unknown.
Mrs. A. Beckett, Ottawa.
Miss E. O'Neill, Ottawa.
Miss Renaud, address unknown.

Miss Loveday, factory inspector of Toronto, arrived at the hotel on Friday night about 8 o'clock and registered. It appeared that she had come direct from Toronto. She was given a room and proceeded to it. Shortly afterwards she came down stairs and asked one of the clerks the way to McLaren street. From McLaren street she went to Hintonburg, a suburb of Ottawa. It is supposed that she returned to the hotel shortly before 11 o'clock and retired. The fire broke out at 11.15 o'clock.

It is known definitely that Miss O'Neill, the head waitress of the hotel, is lost. Prayers for the repose of her soul were offered in St. Patrick's Church yesterday morning.

Mrs. A. Beckett was a well-known milliner on Sparks street, Ottawa. She had been in business for a number of years and roomed at the Gilmour Hotel. Her bedroom was quite near that of the late Miss O'Neill. She was not at her place of business on Saturday and it is believed that she is dead.

Three of the guests of the hotel who are unaccounted for are Messrs. Shillington and Quinn, and Miss Renaud. The clerk of the hotel cannot remember their addresses.

Fire Chief Provost said last night that so far no human remains had been found. He does not anticipate, however, that any will be discovered, from the fact that the fire worked its way downwards from the top. As each storey fell the contents of the bedrooms would be more and more consumed. Some rings have been found. A careful search cannot be undertaken until the walls are taken down, which work will be begun to-morrow.

The injured survivors are all reported doing well.

Three Blown to Pieces.

Kenora, Sept. 17.—Three Scandinavian laborers named L. Peterson, Nels Loughill and Charles Hansman, were blown to atoms in a construction camp near Winnipeg River by the premature explosion of a blasting shot Saturday.

Indain Guide Drowned.

Fredericton, N. B., Sept. 17.—Joe Gabriel, an Indian, known to almost every sportsman who has ever visited New Brunswick, and his wife, were drowned in the river a few miles below here Saturday evening. Their canoe struck a sunken object and upset. Both were somewhat under the influence of liquor and neither came up.

Struck by a Trolley Car.

Toronto, Sept. 17.—About 4 p. m. yesterday, Hector Strathy Miller, aged 16, living at 415 Dovercourt road, stepped off a west-bound Dovercourt car on College street, near Delaware avenue. He started to cross to the south side of the street and was knocked down by an east-bound car. Both wrists were broken and his head badly hurt. His injuries are serious.

Ex-Deputy Chief Stuart Hurt.

Toronto, Sept. 17.—Deputy Chief of Police Stuart is laid up at his residence, 180 Wilton avenue, from the result of an accident which may prove fatal. On Saturday night when he attempted to step off a street car he fell, his head striking the pavement. His head was badly cut. He was taken home in an auto and walked upstairs, but then fell unconscious, and at an early hour this morning he was in the same condition. He is suffering from concussion of the brain. He retired a year or so ago. He is 76 years of age.

A Sleepwalker's Death.

Dundas, Sept. 17.—Yesterday morning, in her sleep, Mrs. Patterson, an aged resident of this place, walked out of a second-storey window and was killed. Her body lay on the walk some hours before it was discovered.

An Indian Injured.

Hamilton, Sept. 17.—Joseph Salts, an Indian from Hagersville, either jumped or was thrown off the train from the south on Ferguson avenue, between Maine and Jackson street, Saturday night. He fell under the train and his left arm was badly mangled. It was found necessary to amputate his arm at the shoulder.

Hotel Collapses.

Chihuahua, Mexico, Sept. 17.—In the collapse Saturday of the walls of the Hotel Gomez Farlasq, in this city, four persons were killed and many others were injured. Some of the wounded may die.

Seven Die In Explosion.

Montfaucon, France, Sept. 17—Lightning yesterday exploded the powder magazine at the forts here. Seven persons were killed and many injured.

BRIEFS BY TELEGRAPH.

Six anarchists were arrested at Marseilles on Saturday before the arrival of President Fallieres to attend the Colonial Exposition there.

John Ernst, a Detroit promoter of the Detroit-Cobalt Silver Mining Co., committed suicide at Haileybury by shooting, owing to financial reverses.

Mgr. Sbarretti, before sailing from New York for Rome, said the school question in Canada had been settled to the satisfaction of the church, and for all time.

The Canadian Policyholders' Association will take civil action in the courts to reduce the amount collectable, under agreement between the Home Life Co. and J. K. McCutcheon.

The railways forming the Central Passenger Association have received permission from the interstate commerce commission to put into effect a two-cent-a-mile passenger rate on lines west of Pittsburg and Buffalo and east of Chicago.

Cloudburst Damages $100,000.

Jackson, Neb., Sept. 17.—Water from a cloudburst yesterday rushed down the Valley of Elk Creek, sweeping away hundreds of tons of hay, drowning hogs, flooding cellars, washing away railroad tracks and doing other damage aggregating $100,000. The wave of water in the creek when it struck Jackson, was seven feet high.

Takes Dose of Poison.

Detroit, Sept. 17.—Despondency over the illness of his wife and financial matters led William J. Southall, aged 26 years, a capsule maker in Stearns laboratory, to commit suicide by taking a large dose of creosote. His body was found in a pit in the laboratory yard. Southall's family live near London, Ont.

Big Strike In Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Man., Sept. 17—Over three thousand men belonging to the building trades unions of Winnipeg go on strike to-day. Owing to the action of the master plumbers in refusing to arbitrate with the journeymen plumbers, the strike has been declared, and all building operations will be tied up.

Perth, Sept. 17.—The valuable books comprising the library of H. W. Brick, formerly manager of H. K. Wampole Co., of this place, was sold at sheriff's sale Saturday to Albert Britnell of Toronto, the price being $900.

MR. CARSCALLEN DEAD.

Representative of East Hamilton In Ontario Legislature Passes Away Peacefully on Sunday.

Hamilton, Sept. 17.—Henry Carscallen, K. C., the gifted representative of East Hamilton, and chairman of the private bills committee in the Ontario Legislature, died about 5.30 last evening.

His end was very peaceful. He had been unconscious since Thursday, and just slept away. Bright's Disease was the cause of his death.

The funeral will be held from his late residence, 99 Duke street, Wednesday afternoon at 3.30.

Sketch of His Life.

Mr. Carscallen was a native of Barton Township, where he was born, Aug. 14, 1845, his parents, of U. E. Loyalist descent, having come from Napanee to Wentworth County. Educated in Barton Township and Hamilton, he as a youth decided that he would take to the profession of law. At 23 he had passed his examination for solicitor, but was not called to the bar until 1875, when he became a member of the firm of Martin & Ferguson. On the retirement, shortly after, of Mr. Ferguson, he became a partner, associated, among others, with the present Judge Monck. The firm dissolved in 1881, and in 1882 Mr. Carscallen entered into association with E. D. Cahill. In 1890 he was made Q. C., and during his career, he was connected with many of the leading trials in city and county.

In public life Mr. Carscallen was also prominent. His terms in the city council were from 1879-80, 1884-5, 1890-1-2, 1897-8.

In 1898 he was elected as Conservative member of East Hamilton in the Legislature, when his majority over J. T. Middelton was 880. In 1892 he was re-elected over Dr. Griffin by 150, and in the last election in 1896, again defeated Dr. Griffin by 550.

In the Legislature he was regarded as one of the ablest debaters, and was chairman of the private bills committee.

Mr. Carscallen is survived by a widow and six sons. He was twice married—in 1886 to Emily Gurney, a daughter of the late Charles Gurney, of which marriage three sons survive, Oswald, Henry and George; and his second wife, a daughter of John Rodgers, with three sons, Hubert, Stanley and Arthur, are also left to mourn his demise.

Premier Say Public Loss.

Toronto, Sept. 17.—Premier Whitney was greatly shocked when apprised of the death of Mr. Carscallen, to whom he referred in high terms.

"I have noticed for a number of years, since he was in the Legislature, that Mr. Carscallen was a very capable member of the House, a man of great ability in his profession, who took an active part in the business of the House. Since the present Government came into power Mr. Carscallen was chairman of the private bills committee, and as such rendered great public service.

"I am sure that all members of the Legislature, without respect of party affiliation, will regret very much to hear of his death, which, I think, is a public loss, and that the members of the Legislature will so consider it. The sympathy of all will go to his widow and family."

John S. Dewar Is Dead.

London, Sept. 17.—John S. Dewar, for 45 years connected with the editorial staff of The London Free Press, died yesterday morning at his residence, aged 62 years. Mr. Dewar was one of the most prominent members of the Masonic order in Ontario, and was for 25 years on its grand lodge benevolent board.

INTERESTING FACTS

FOR NEARLY EVERY MAN, WOMAN OR CHILD.

A short time ago we published an article recommending to our readers the new discovery for the cure of Dyspepsia, called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and the claim then made regarding the wonderful curative properties of the remedy have been abundantly sustained by the facts. People who were cautious about trying new remedies advertised in the newspapers and were finally induced to give Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets a trial were surprised and delighted at the results. In many cases a single package costing but 50 cents at any drug store made a complete cure and in every instance the most beneficial results were reported. From a hundred or more received we have space to publish only a few of the latest, but assure our readers we receive so many commendatory letters that we shall publish each week a fresh list of genuine, unsolicited testimonials and never publish the same one twice.

From James Yemmeisler, LaCrosse, Wis.: Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are doing me more good than anything I ever tried and I was so pleased at results that I gave away several boxes to my friends who have also had the same benefits.

From Jacob Anthony, Portmurray, New Jersey: I have taken Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets with the best results. I had Dyspepsia for 6 years, and had taken a great deal of medicine, but the Tablets seem to take right a hold and I feel good. I am a farmer and lime burner and I heartily recommend to everyone who has any trouble with his stomach to use these Tablets.

From Mrs. M. K. West, Preston, Minn.: I have received surprisingly good effects from using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I gave one-half of my last box to a friend, who also suffered from indigestion, and she had the same good results.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a certain cure for all forms of indigestion. They are not claimed to be a cure-all, but are prepared for stomach troubles only, and physicians and druggists everywhere recommend them to all persons suffering from nervous dyspepsia, sour or acid stomach, heartburn, bloating or wind on stomach and similar disorders.

PALMA CALLS OFF ARMY

Will Treat For Peace to Avert U. S. Intervention.

Issues a Decree Suspending Campaign Operations, and Emissaries Are Sent to Provinces to Confer With Insurgents—30 Political Prisoners, Recently Captured and Indicted, Were Released—Rebels Defeated.

Havana, Sept. 17.—The Government last evening was making strenuous efforts to restore peace in Cuba, and thus avert any kind of American intervention.

The object of these endeavors, it is stated, is that it may be able to say by the time Secretary of War Taft and Acting Secretary of State Bacon arrive that peace already has been secured, and therefore there is no need for the American Government's intervention either to restore peace or insure permanent tranquility.

Palma's Latest Decree.

Yesterday afternoon, when an extraordinary Gazette was issued containing a decree signed by President Palma, on the recommendation of the Secretary of Public Works Montalvo. The decree follows:

"All campaign operations are suspended, and in consequence the Government forces will only act on the defensive throughout the republic. The Secretary of the Interior will issue all the necessary orders for the execution of this decree."

The decree caused great surprise, as it was believed to signify a change of heart by the Government officials who for the past two days have been strongly against taking up peace overtures with the emissaries of the revolutionists.

Confer With Rebels.

After the decree was issued Government emissaries were despatched in automobiles to confer with the revolutionists. Gen. Menocal, accompanied by Congressman Gobin and Garcia Vieta, the youngest son of Calixto Garcia, drove in the direction where Alfredo Zayas was encamped, with Sastillo's forces, not far from Santiago de las Vegas, and others went to Guanajay, which place yesterday afternoon was occupied by a big band of revolutionists under Congressman Campos Marquetti. The latter had Mayor Gallez and the 200 volunteers defending the town cooped up in a carcel and surrounded by a swarm of insurgents when the peace emissaries arrived. Meanwhile Campos Marquetti was threatening to blow up the carcel with dynamite.

Elections Stand.

Gen. Freyre Andrade, when asked about the terms discussed at the conference with the revolutionists, said that the conferees only touched peace terms informally, but that one thing was certain, the Government would never agree to annul the constitutional elections, and that contention must be eliminated from the claims of the revolutionists.

Simultaneously with the issuance of the decree declaring a cessation of hostilities, the special judge in charge of the cases against the alleged conspirators in prison and prisoners recently captured, liberated 30 of the latter, against whom indictments had been issued.

Rebels Defeated.

Havana, Sept. 17—Government forces have won a victory over the rebels at a point close to Havana.

Gen. Rodriguez, with 400 rural guards, attacked the rebels under Gen. Del Castillo and Cols. Asbert and Acosta, 1,000 strong, at Wajay, 12 miles south of Havana. After a stubborn fight the rebels were dispersed. Eight of their number were killed and 23 wounded. Of the rural guards one was killed and 13 were wounded. Gen. Rodriguez returned to Havana Saturday morning. There is considerable speculation as to why the enemy was not pursued.

The revolutionists attacked the Town of San Domingo, in Santa Clara Province, at 5 o'clock Saturday morning, but were repulsed by the garrison of militiamen and rural guards. One guard, two militiamen and three of the revolutionists were killed. Five guards and one militiaman were wounded. One of the insurgents who was killed was Col. Notejo. The Government troops captured two prisoners and 60 horses and are now in pursuit of the retreating insurgents.

THE THREE LINKS.

Ten Thousand Oddfellows Are Already In Toronto For Convention.

Toronto, Sept. 17.—All yesterday train loads of Oddfellows and their wives and families came from many points of the United States and Canada. It is estimated that ten thousand delegates and friends are here, besides two thousand uniformed men.

Fully a thousand men and between two and three hundred women were encamped at the exhibition grounds last night. Several cantons will go out this morning, which will bring the number in camp for the week up to fifteen hundred.

The city is beginning to take on a gala appearance.

In room G, at the King Edward, the general military council held two meetings yesterday, one at 9 a. m., and another at 3 p. m. Gen. Raney presided. Fifty departments commanders were present.

The grand lodge proper opens this morning, at 9.30, with the public welcome in the Legislative Assembly at the Pallament Buildings, which promises to be a brilliant function. The Premier of Ontario, the Mayor of Toronto, and W. S. Johnson, grand master of the I. O. O. F. for Ontario, will deliver addresses of welcome.

Three hundred and fifty delegates to the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Oddfellows, with friends, crossed from Toronto to St. Catharines by boat on Saturday, but so rough was the lake that the return trip was made by special train. The City of St. Catharines, through Mayor Roddell, tendered a reception.

BRAKES BEFORE SIGNAL

Engineer Put Them on Before Conductor Called Him.

Inquest on Azilda Train Disaster Resumed at Sudbury—Train Moving 40 Miles an Hour Could Have Been Stopped Twice in the Distance Between Station and Place of Accident, Swears Engineer Thurlow.

Sudbury, Sept. 18.—The inquest on the Azilda train disaster was resumed yesterday morning with Engineer Thurlow in the box.

He said he applied the brakes before the signal had been given by the conductor. He knew the service affected only a few cars. At the same time he got the conductor's signal the conductor applying the emergency brake in his own car.

Thurlow supposed the conductor feared the train might not be brought up in time.

A juror asked: "What do you say as to stopping the train in the distance between the station and the place of accident had the brakes been in shape?"

"A train moving forty miles an hour could be stopped twice in the distance," he said.

Conductor Thomas Kehoe said after he applied the emergency brake he noticed no slackening of speed. The air whistle was given on approaching the west switch.

Always on the Alert.

Kehoe said his duties were to collect tickets, look after his train, and be always on the alert. He would give secondary consideration to the collection of tickets if it was necessary to look after his train. "If we don't get a call for hand brakes a long distance from the station or stop for a failure of the air brakes, we depend on the air brakes; but we are on the alert."

Kehoe described the taking of the test of the air brake in the Sudbury yard before the road officials. He was called upon to make the test at the vice-president's request. "Do it with all your might," said Mr. McNicoll to me. "The angle-cock was open and by continual knocking with the chain the handle was closed. It took two or three minutes to succeed in the effort. I would not say that I gave greater force than a swinging chain would ordinarily give. I believe that when traffic is heavy an assistant conductor would make travel safer."

Government to Investigate.

Montreal, Sept. 18.—E. C. Lalonde, railroad wreck inspector of the Government Commission, has gone to Sudbury to investigate the recent wreck on the C. P. R. Several C. P. R. officials will be called at witnesses.

In Dresden 300 years ago "epicures" used to eat Venetian oysters that had been on the way three weeks.

Rebel Voice Is For War.

Leaders at Bejucal Reject Palma's Peace Proposals.

Pino Guerra Elected By the Leaders of the Rebel Forces to be Major-General of the First Division and Castillo of Second—Rodriguez Wounds 115 Rebels and Sends Them to Hospital—Palma Arraigned.

Havana, Sept. 18.—At a meeting of rebel leaders, held in the town hall of Bejucal yesterday, it was decided, after a number of violent speeches had been delivered, not to accept the peace propositions of the Government.

The leaders of the rebel forces in the western part of Cuba held a general meeting Sunday near Elcano and elected Pino Guerra to be major-general of the first division, and Toynaz Del Castillo to be major-general of the second division of the insurgent army. Asbert, Mira, Aronciba and Guas were chosen brigadier generals.

Wounds 115 Rebels.

Gen. Rodriguez, the commander of the Government forces, reports that as a result of his fight with the rebels at Wajay, Sept. 14, 115 rebels were wounded and sent to hospitals. The Government in this engagement had seven men killed and 14 wounded.

A small force of insurgents attacked 30 Government soldiers in Sanfelice, near Batabano, Sunday, but were repulsed.

Word has reached here of the first fighting in Santo Province. Four hundred rebels, under Col. Dubois met the rural guardsmen at Lamaya. The result of the engagement is not known.

Explosion In Havana.

A violent explosion occurred here yesterday morning and wrecked two brick buildings. Six persons were killed and many wounded. No details of the cause are yet at hand. The explosion is thought to be the work of incendiaries. The buildings at once caught fire. Dead and wounded are still being taken from the wreckage. The buildings were insured.

All Is Quiet.

Washington, Sept. 18.—Commander Colwell of the cruiser Denver, at Havana, telegraphed the Navy Department yesterday that all was quiet there. Hostilities formally ceased Sunday and a definite settlement of the trouble seemed possible yesterday.

British Moved Roosevelt.

New York, Sept. 18.—The Times prints a story to the effect that the real cause of the action of President Roosevelt in regard to Cuba was not the appeals of American sugar planters near Cienfuegos, but a complaint made through the British embassy at Washington regarding the damage done to the property of the Western Railroad, which is owned by British capitalists, and the heads of which are in London.

CHARGES AGAINST PALMA.

Revolutionary Junta In New York Issues Proclamation Telling Why Liberals No Longer Recognize Him.

New York, Sept. 18.—The revolutionary Junta of New York has issued a proclamation which says:

"We have been careful not to overdraw the seriousness of the political situation in Cuba, and have made no charges that cannot be fully substantiated.

"We charge that President Palma obtained his election to office through fraud and intimidation, and by the denial to the Liberals to their right of suffrage.

"We charge that the Government of President Palma was directly responsible for the killing of Col. Enrique Villuendas, a member of the House of Representatives at Cienfuegos on Sept. 22, 1905.

"We charge that President Palma has usurped the powers and functions of the governing bodies of the municipalities, and has annulled, arbitrarily and without warrant of law, the elections of Liberal officials, displacing them with members of his own political party, the Moderates.

"We charge that he has in like manner removed from the bench, judges who refused to act in their judicial capacity according to his dictation. President Palma also has imprisoned, without judicial proceedings, members of the Liberal party because they protested against his dictatorial conduct.

"The Liberals have made continued peaceful appeals that this injustice be righted, but to all these, the Government turned a deaf ear, denied the constitutional rights for which the Cubans fought, bled and died for nearly half a century, we decided that our one recourse was again to take up arms.

"We now ask only one thing, and that is that the illegal and fraudulent election of last December be annulled and a new election held, at which every Cuban citizen will be given a fair chance to vote."

In concluding the proclamation says: "That Palma is to-day the dictator of Cuba instead of Weyler," and declares that the men who surround him are the same who supported the Spanish regime while patriotic Cubans were in the field fighting.

Strike on the Wabash.

St. Louis, Sept. 18.—General Manager Henry Miller of the Wabash road stated yesterday:

"Boilermakers, blacksmith and machinists, to the total number of about 300, went on strike at Moberly, Md., Fort Wayne, Ind., and Springfield, Ill., yesterday, without notice, after having refused an offer of arbitration.

"These men leaving will not affect the handling of business."

46 Bushels to the Acre.

Winnipeg, Sept. 18.—The biggest yield of wheat per acre for the province for this year, was threshed on William Wilson's form, north of Boissevain, off 16 acres of back setting. Wilson got 691 bushels of wheat, a fraction over 46 bushels per acre. The wheat was grown from red fife seed, costing $1 per bushel.

Saved by a Miracle.

Port Arthur, Sept. 18.—Engineer Dohm, Fireman W. Muir and Brakeman Groves of the Canadian Northern, were on a wheat train coming from the west. Whilst crossing a bridge west of here the structure suddenly gave way and the train went into a ravine 50 feet deep. On top of the engine were 16 cars of loaded grain and there was nothing but a great pile of debris to indicate where the accident had taken place. The men in the engine escaped almost without injury.

Would Betray If It Dared.

London, Sept. 18.—(C. A. P.)—The Churchill letter to Hamar Greenwood appears in the London and provincial newspapers. The Globe says that not all the piteous appeals of newly-converted under secretaries to Hamar Greenwood will alter the "colonial conviction that radicalism would betray them if it dared."

The Coming Election in East Elgin.

The East Elgin bye-election to take place on October 4, will from this on to the day of polling attract deep attention.

The journals friendly to the Government candidate assure us that the contest will be "exceptionally warm," and also close.

It is given out that "Mr. Hyman will take the stump." Therefore look out for a rousing time!

The hon. Minister of Works, as the London Free Press remarks, has taken the stump before. There is record of his stumping in Lambton and the Hurons, but not such as gives Laurier much jubilation. Mr. Hyman was in the east riding of Elgin a few days or weeks ago. Since the campaign was on, he has offered it "generous treatment" from the great "spending department" under his control. The voters are led to hope for a share of the "good things" which are placed where they will do most good.

This was only an instalment, however. When Mr. Hyman "takes the stump" the electors will doubtless hear of more benefits from the high source of political graft and rake-offs.

But the Hon. Minister of Public Works will have help in the good missionary work. The machine will not be this time in operation, as its chief is provided for out of the country. Mr. W. T. R. Preston, who did so well for MacNish in the west riding, is en route to the Flowery Kingdom with the emoluments of a Cabinet Minister. But the Hon. Mr. Aykasworth, who defended the machine's work, is to "take the stump" with Mr. Hyman on this occasion. He might defend the North Atlantic Trading Company, organized by Preston in England, and justify that official in refusing to tell the names of the persons who received hundreds of thousands of dollars from the immigration department.

There is a fine field for his eloquence also in excusing the blunder in fitting out the SS. Arctic, and in explaining why two prices were paid for machines in order to give a rake-off to political henchmen.

These and other subjects of public interest, however, are carefully avoided in the present East Elgin campaign. Instead the Conservative candidate is being attacked as being a member of the Canners' Association. Mr. Marshall is admitted in the local Grit organs as "a gentleman respected by all personally," yet "a member of the Canners organization" is not to have "a seat in the Commons" without the strongest protest.

But, as the Mail and Empire very pointedly remarks: "If anybody in East Elgin was ever deluded by this combine cry, which is raised to cover up the great issues, the presence of Mr. Chas. Hyman in the constituency as the chief representative of the Government, should put an end to that misconception. Mr. Hyman is at the head of the leather combine in Canada, and if the people of East Elgin want to get at combines their best course is to strike, not at one of their own industries, but at the Government which fosters these things, and has the principal combinster, a king among the monopolists, in its inner councils."

That is very well put in. The leather combine is known as a fast-bound and copper-riveted Trust. It can do what it likes in the leather trade. Because of its exactions the price of boots and shoes has been raised 20 per cent. within the last month or so. No class of business men have a tighter cinch on the leather trade of Canada than those in the Leather Trust, of which Mr. Hyman is chief.

There is a Danish proverb which runs, "No man is so tall that he need ever stretch; and none so small that he need never stoop." It might be added that no one is so rich that he need not read the advertisements,

TIMELY TOPICS.

The man on the next block says it's getting to be a serious matter with his milkman to find enough water these days. He always feels sorry for a milkman who can't get enough water.

Have you begun your Christmas shopping yet? Only fourteen weeks from to-day, you know.

• • •

Have you picked out the site for the C. P. R. depot yet? Nearly everybody else has had a guess at it.

• • •

Some say it will be in West Belleville, near Holton's mill, and others that it will be near the new skating rink. Just at present, however, it is very much in the air.

That the C. P. R. is going to come here, however, there seems very good reason to believe. That it will be a good thing for the city and, incidentally, for the C. P. R. itself, is sure.

Belleville seems to be on the up grade now, sure enough. After passing through her time of trial, she seems now to be able to discern the silver lining to the cloud. As a property-owner, talking recently, said; "If a man had known, four years ago, that real estate in Belleville was going to advance the way it has recently, what a lot of money he could have made! Which reminds us that most of us would be rich and clever if our foresight was only half as good as our hindsight.

It seems to be settled that the terminus of the Trent Valley Canal will be at Trenton. That is where sensible people expected it to be.

Peterboro has the roller skating craze bad. There are quite a few "wheely" people in Strattonville anyhow.

• • •

What's the matter with Belleville's flower show this year? Has the dry weather queered it?

• • •

They are making some wonderful finds at the ancient city of Gezer, Palestine. Perhaps one of the original "old geezers" may be dug up.

Perhaps it is not surprising that some Chicago packers have been charged with selling short-weight lard. Lard is a shortening, anyway

A woman was caught by a guy rope and dragged aloft by a balloon at Middletown, N. Y. The balloonist saved her life by seizing her by the hair. The moral of this story appears to be "Don't wear a wig when you're around where a balloon goes up."

The latest slang expression is to "Hand him a lemon," which means to pay one a left-handed compliment. Out in the outlying districts of the city people are handing the sidewalk repairers whole crates of lemons.

A Chicago automobile struck a man on the sidewalk. Where can pedestrians go to be safe?

A Pennsylvania man shot a dog five times and it bit him. A worm would have turned before the fifth shot.

A Schenectady man swam 3 miles in 40 minutes. If he had waited until the water froze, he could have skated the distance in even less time.

A New York woman fell dead on receipt of news that she had inherited $1,000,000. This was too bad, but then if she hadn't died she might have waked up.

• • •

A New York woman landed a muscallonge after a struggle that lasted two hours and 40 minutes. If it took her that long to land a fish, how long would she be landing a man?

It is said that some of Toronto's boarding house keepers, this week, are endeavoring to get even with the thousands of visiting Oddfellows by charging exorbitant prices.

• • •

Under the heading of "This Date Thirty Years Ago," the Montreal Star of yesterday had the following interesting item. It is gratifying to note that the first announcement of the National Policy—which has done so much for Canada—was made in this city. The Star's item follows:

September 17, 1876.

Sir John A. Macdonald, Hon. William Macdougall and a large number of followers are holding a Liberal-Conservative picnic to-day at Belleville, Ont. Five special trains filled to their full capacity left Toronto at an early hour this morning. It is expected that Sir John A. will announce his fighting policy for the next general elections.

The Dominion's greatest statesman on the above occasion did make a most important announcement. He stood out strong for a National Policy, seeing that the United States had refused reciprocity in trade. He desired reciprocity in the tariffs, for the protection of the industries of Canada, and to prevent the Americans making a slaughter market of the Dominion. He counselled the whole electorate to sink party differences, and take up a stand for their country, demanding a National Policy at the polls. As is well known, Sir John A.'s advice was heeded at the general elections in 1878, when he was returned to power by a large majority. The late Senator George Brown was months in Washington trying to negotiate a fair and equitable trade treaty, but failed, the Americans desiring a one-sided affair.

A Detroit widow has asked the police to find a man who promised to marry her, but who ducked as soon as she had given him $1. It was too great a temptation.

Great Britain's monster battleship has been found to have serious faults, but envious powers will do well not to try to take advantage of the discovery, Maybe their own ships have faults.

Oh! horrors! Just listen to this, from a Toronto paper's report of the doings at the Methodist Conference, Montreal; "The younger element candidly objected to the class of men proposed, and opened the whole question of the educational policy of the church. The tactics of Rev. Dr. John Potts, educational secretary, in pulling the legs of millionaires for contributions had so embarrassed the church that pulpits were silent on matters that demanded outspoken denunciation."

The Methodist General Conference has refused to admit women to the courts of the church, but the ladies will still be allowed to do about nine-tenths of the work in connection with Methodist churches and Sunday schools. And the Methodist church is not singular in this respect. Hardly a church in Canada — or America, for that matter — to-day but would be limping along on crutches if it were not for the ladies' aid. But they must not have a voice in the disposal of the money which they work so hard to help raise.

There is a strike on in Winnipeg, and a million dollars in building operations is tied up. The day of compulsory arbitration can hardly come too soon.

HE MEANT WELL.

(Toronto Globe.)

The atmosphere of the Sovereign Grand Lodge gathering is so all-pervading that the average citizen forgets that there are other conventions.

"Ah, my friend, your motto stands for a great deal—Friendship, Love and Love," said a short-sighted but companionable Torontonian to a badge-bedecked neighbor in a King street car last night. "You belong to a noble organization and you are rightly welcome wherever you go."

"Excuse me, friend," returned the man behind the badges, somewhat tartly. "Excuse me, and don't try to hand it to me. I ain't no Oddfellow. I'm a plumber."

Whereupon the short-sighted and well-meaning citizen invited all hands to get off at the next stop, and do something for the good of the order.

Eye Strain

(Brain Strain)

By far the commonest cause of NERVOUSNESS.

The actual underlying cause of many ills, which the thousands of sufferers are vainly trying to relieve by drugs. Really the most dangerous evil that now exists, because it gives rise to brain irritation of so many different degrees. The most unsuspected, and therefore, neglected menace to the general health, because the very brain-strain enables the person to "see alright."

Very often completely changes the person's disposition, by the intense irritation of nerve-centers in the brain.

Some very remarkable CURES have followed the correction of hidden eye defects by our expert Optician.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S HAIR.

Its Great Profusion Was Always a Cause of Wonder.

Even at the age of 80 years, Queen Victoria's hair was a marvel of luxuriance. The court physician, following Prof. Unna's discovery, undoubtedly, treated her Majesty's scalp with a germ destroying preparation, that was not made public. It is now known, however, that the remedy for dandruff, the germ-destroying element, is embodied in Newbro's Herpicide, the only hair preparation on the market that does destroy the dandruff germ. Without dandruff, hair will grow profusely, and falling hair will be stopped. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Mistook Him For Her Husband.

(Cleveland Plain Dealer.)

An unfortunate burglar had a painful experience in Bridgeport, Ct., the other night. He entered a house where a woman was lying in wait for her husband. The woman was not expecting the burglar. Consequently she mistook him for her husband.

What she is reported to have done to the night prowler is better fitted for the columns of the sporting page that describe the appearance of the losing lightweight at the end of the forty-first round. When the burglar finally crept away from the scene of the encounter he was a broken man. Had he met a reformer of persuasive appearance at that moment there is no doubt he might have been coaxed into leading a better life. As it is he crawled away into the shadows of the protecting night and was seen no more.

And the husband?

No doubt he was discreet enough to refrain from expressing any joy over the fate of the other man. But he must have felt it was an undeservedly narrow escape.

Queen Alice of U. S. A.

Shoved, jammed, pushed, startled, pulled and stared at, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, the fair Alice, daughter of the strenuous president, had the most strenuous time in her young life Friday afternoon in Columbus, Ohio It was terrific. But Mrs. Longworth, slight in figure and winsome of manner, bore it all with a smile.

Conservative estimates say that at least 50,000 people were crowded into the statehouse grounds and High-street when she unveiled the McKinley memorial and when the speaking exercises planned to be held in connection with the unveiling were abandoned because the throngs had become uncontrollable in their desire to see and get near Mrs. Longworth when she and her husband sought to board an automobile for their hotel, they were surrounded by crowds of curious people, who pushed and fought to get them. Many in the crowd grabbed at Mrs. Longworth's gown and tried to touch her. The couple hurried to get away, but they sought refuge in the Outlook building in East Broad street. They remained there for half an hour before they could make their escape through a ruse.

Still Mrs. Longworth smiled and was calm.

"I have been all over the world and have seen crowds and 'crowds,' but that is the worst," she said.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Veneer Stock.

Probably no branch of forest utilization, with the possible exception of the manufacture of pulp wood, shows such rapid development in this country as the veneer industry. Until very recently the opinion has prevailed that the kinds of timber which could be made into veneer were very limited in number, but the reports furnished by the veneer producers to the forest service include twenty-four species. Many of these, to be sure, are now cut in unimportant quantities, but the tendency to experiment with new woods is clearly shown.

How to Kill House Flies.

The U. S. department of agriculture states that in France a prize of $2,000 was offered for the best method of killing house flies. It was won for a suggestion to use oil stirred in water in vaults and cesspools. For manure the oil is mixed with sand or phosphate scattered over the piles. This prevents egg laying or hatching, as most of this is done in manure piles.

Profitable Colts.

A colt, if he is worth keeping at all, ought to sell for enough as a three-year-old to pay for his keep, and if he should happen to turn out a crackerjack the price he would sell for would be a small fortune to an ordinary farmer, and more than one mortgage has been lifted by such a sale.—Horse Breeder.

Windgalls On Horses.

Windgalls are caused by strains, and they can be removed by using the following: Mix two drams biniodide of mercury with three ounces lard. Rub on a little once a week and continue it for several weeks.—D. McIntosh, V. S., in American Agriculturist.

You are wasting time if you are waiting for nature to do all the work Everybody needs a little help, so does nature; assist her by taking a course of Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. Tea or Tablets, 35 cents.—D. M. Waters.

DIZZINESS.

Various Causes That Bring About an Attack of Vertigo.

Dizziness, or vertigo—scientific writers sometimes try to distinguish in sense between these two words, but practically, in popular usage, they mean the same thing—is a disturbance of relation to the outside world, a loss of the sense of equilibrium. The sensation persists even when the eyes are closed. There is more or less inability to walk straight or even to stand still, and often there is nausea, followed by vomiting.

Vertigo is due to a disturbance, either actual or reflex, of the nervous "center of equilibrium" in the back part of the brain or in the semicircular canals in the ear, in which the terminations of the nerves coming from the center of equilibrium are distributed. For the most part, vertigo is a reflex trouble due to some impression which gets shunted off its own route, as it were, through nerve fibers connecting with the equilibrium center and acts upon the semicircular canals of the ear. Thus it is that dizziness is a comparatively trivial affection, as a rule—disagreeable enough, but brief and of no great significance except as a symptom of trouble elsewhere in the body.

Persistently recurring, transient dizziness is often due to eye strain—that is to say, to errors in the formation of the eye not corrected by proper glasses. Wearers of spectacles can frequently tell when a change in the eyes has occurred, necessitating a corresponding change in the glasses, by the coming back of these attacks of giddiness, especially when the gaze is suddenly moved from a near object to a remote one or the reverse.

Vertigo is a common symptom of disorders of digestion seated either in the stomach or the intestine. The treatment for this form is, of course, to treat the indigestion or constipation.

Another more serious variety of dizziness depends upon disease of the heart or of the blood vessels, especially those of the brain.

Any disease of the ear is apt to be associated with more or less vertigo. The same is true of tumor or other disease of the brain, especially of the cerebellum, that part of the brain in which the center of equilibrium is situated.

The dizziness of seasickness, as well as that of swinging or of rapidly turning about, is thought to be caused by an irritation of the nerves in the semicircular canals by the striking against them of the fluid in these canals.—Youth's Companion.

SOME FIRST OCCASIONS.

The first canal was made in England when Henry I. joined the Trent to the Witham, in 1134.

Quill pens came into use in 553; the first steel ones in 1820, when the first gross of them sold for $36.

The first pocket handkerchiefs, utilized in the manner they are today, were manufactured at Paisley in 1743.

From the press of the celebrated Wynken de Worde the first book containing musical characters was issued in 1495.

The first coins were struck in brass about 1184 B. C. and in gold and silver by Pheidon, tyrant of Argos, about 862 B. C.

About 70 A. D. the first glass bottle was made by the Romans, although the manufacture was not taken up in England until 1558.

Movable scenery was first used in theaters in 1508. It was invented by Baldassare Peruzzi and displayed in Rome before Leo X.

Pliny's "Natural History" may be regarded as the first encyclopedia, since it contained 30,000 facts compiled from 2,000 books by 100 authors.

Declined Her Own Medicine.

There is always more or less talk current about abolishing position and dispersing pelf. The trouble is to know just where to begin the destructive reconstruction and to find reformers who are willing themselves to be reformed. An English great lady was once entertaining the labor member of parliament, Henry Broadhurst, the Duke of Argyll and others at her country seat. She was a strong Liberal, and one evening inveighed against the house of lords. It would be swept away if it did not reform, she said with fervor.

"Yes," agreed Broadhurst, "and how will you like that, Mrs. P.?"

"Lady P., if you please, sir," instantly corrected Broadhurst's hostess, drawing herself up haughtily.

A River of Death.

Before the English occupation of India it was estimated that the Ganges carried to the sea every year 1,000,000 dead bodies. It was then considered by the Hindoos that the happiest death was one found in its waves, and all pious Hindoos who could do so were carried to its banks and placed in its waters to die. The decaying carcasses along its banks were probably responsible in no small degree for the pestilences which formerly desolated the peninsula.

Hard Work.

Mrs. A.—I'm surprised that your husband earns so little if he works as hard as you say. What does he do?

Mrs. B.—The last thing he did was to calculate how many times a clock ticked in the course of 2,000 years.—London Tit-Bits.

The Hero.

"It must be nice to be a hero," remarked the quiet man.

"It is for a minute," replied Senator Badger. "After that the hero wonders at the world's bad memory."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

ON THE SPIRE.

When James Freeman Clarke was a young man he visited Salisbury, England. Here the beautiful cathedral lifts its spire 404 feet into the air. The spire is topped by a ball, and on the ball stands a cross. From the ground the ball looks like an orange, but its diameter is really greater than a man's height.

Workmen were repairing the spire. Mr. Clarke saw them crawling round the slim steeple in the golden afternoon like bugs on a bean stalk. The impulse came to him to climb the spire and stand on the horizontal beam of the cross. Accordingly at dusk, when the workmen had left, the young American slipped in and made his way up the stairs to the little window which opened to the workmen's staging. To run up the scaffolding to the ball was easy. Then came the slightly more bulging curve of the ball. A short platform gave him foothold. He reached up, put his hands on the base of the cross and pulled himself up. To gain the cross arm was merely "shinning" up a good sized tree, and soon he stood on the horizontal timber and, reaching up, touched the top of the cross.

After enjoying his moment of exaltation he slid to the foot of the cross, and, with his arms round the post, slipped down over the great abdomen of the ball. His feet touched nothing. The little plank from which he had reached up was not there!

Here was a peril and one for a cool head and sure eye. Of course he could not look down. The hugging hold that he had to keep on the bottom of the cross shortened the reach of his body and made it less than when he had stood on the plank and reached up to the cross with his hands. He must drop so that his feet should meet the plank, for he would never be able to pull himself back if he should let himself down at arms' length, and his feet hung over empty air.

Now his good head began to work. He looked up at the cross and tried to recall exactly the angle at which he had reached for it, to make his memory tell him just how the edge of that square post had appeared. A few inches to the right or to the left would mean dropping into vacancy.

Bending his head away back, he strained his eye up the cross and figured his angle of approach. He cautiously wormed himself to the right and made up his mind that here directly under his feet must be the plank. Then he dropped. The world knows that he lived to tell the tale.

PICTURESQUE ALGIERS.

All Its Streets Are Staircases, and All Are Safe.

Here is a pretty pictue of Algiers by Frances E. Nesbitt: "Now it is possible to go safely into even the darkest and remotest corners, and they are dark indeed. A first visit leaves one breathless, but delighted—breathless, because all the streets are staircases on a more or less imposing scale—the longest is said to have at least 500 steps; delightful, because at every turn there is sure to be something unusual to a stranger's eye. The newer stairs are wide and straight and very uninteresting, but only turn into any old street and follow its windings in and out between white walls, under arches, through gloomy passages, here a few stairs, there a gentle incline, always up and always the cool deep shade leading to the bright blue of the sky above.

"Being so narrow and so steep, there are, of course, no camels and no carts. Donkeys do all the work and trot up and down with the strangest loads, though porters carry furniture and most of the biggest things. Up and down these streets comes an endless variety of figures—town and country Arabs, spahis in their gay uniforms, French soldiers, Italian workmen, children in vivid colors, Jewesses with heads and chins swathed in dark wrappings.

"Interesting beyond all these are the Arab women flitting like ghosts from one shadowy corner to another, the folds of their haicks concealing all the glories of their indoor dress, so that in the street the only sign of riches lies in the daintiness of the French shoes and the fact that the haick is pure silk and the little veil over the face of a finer material."

After Long Years.

After long years work is visible. In agriculture you cannot see the growth. Pass that country two months after, and there is a difference. We acquire firmness and experience incessantly. Every action, every word, every meal, is part of our trial and our discipline. We are assuredly ripening or else blighting. We are not conscious of those changes which go on quietly and gradually in the soul. We only count the shocks in our journey. Ambitions die; grace grows as life goes on.—Frederick W. Robertson.

Good Ladies' Horse.

"You told me he was a good ladies' horse," angrily said the man who had made the purchase.

"He was," replied the deacon. "My wife owned him, and she's one of the best women I ever knew."

Winners.

"Did your husband ever bet on a winning horse?"

"Oh, yes," answered young Mrs. Torkins. "All the horses Charley bets on win at some time or another."

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, Sept. 17.—(Special.)—Cables from Liverpool on cattle were weaker and ½c lower, at 10c to 10½c, and ranchers, at 8½c to 9½c. London cables were steady at 11c for Canadian. Glasgow quoted Canadians at 5¼c to 5¾c, with sales at £16 to £17 10s per head; exports for last week were 4650 cattle, 158 sheep; receipts to-day were 1200 cattle, 50 milch cows, 800 sheep and lambs, 150 calves and 1000 hogs. Prime beeves were rather scarce and brought higher prices, but the other kinds sold at about last week's rates. Mr. Joseph Richard paid 4¾c per lb, for seven of the best cattle on the market; pretty good sold at 3¾c to 4¼c, and common stock at 2½c to 3c. Milch cows sold at $25 to $45 each, but there were no choice milkers among them. The calves were mostly grassers, which sold at 2½c to 3½c per lb.; good veals sold at 5c to 5¼c per lb.; four very fine calves were sold for $62. Sheep sold at 3½c to 4c per lb.; lambs sold at 5c to 5¾c per lb. Good lots of fat hogs sold at 7c per lb.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE WORLD AT ITS BEST.

(Chicago Record-Herald.)

It's a good old world when the days are fair
And a good old world when it rains;
There are woes sometimes that are hard to bear,
There are efforts that bring few gains.
But the joys that come with each glad new day,
And the troubles we leave behind,
Are so good to claim and so sweet to leave
That the foolish only sit down and grieve
For the pleasures they may not find:

It's a good old world when the wild winds blow,
And the rivers are frozen o'er.
It's a good old world when the hot streets glow
And the brooks through the canyons roar.
It's a good old world when the god of war
Has folded his brawny arms,
And the roses bloom and the robin sings,
And the beautiful maiden fondly clings
To the gladdened one she charms.

It's a good old world when the heart beats young
And vigor and health remain;
It's a good old world when the flags are flying,
Where rises the martial strain;
But good as it is when the sky is blue,
And blossoms float gently down,
The world is best when a man's done well
And goes back home as a howling swell
To his little old native town.

About 6,000,000 messages are conveyed by the world's cables throughout the year, or 15,000 a day, the working speed of any one cable being up to 100 words a minute under present conditions. About 90 per cent. of these are sent in code or cipher.

Many stories are told about the late Mr. Seddon, Premier of New Zealand. On one occasion an admiral of the fleet visiting New Zealand waters was being entertained by the late Mr. Ballance, an Ulster man, who was Premier at the time and in whose government Mr. Seddon had a portfolio. After dinner the late Sir Patrick Buskley, who sat on the left of the admiral, asked Mr. Seddon to sing a song, whereupon the response came in a fine rendering of the "Wearing of the Green." The admiral became alarmed and asked his neighbor, Sir Patrick, if the song was not treason. "I scarcely think so," replied the Celtic knight, "because Mr. Seddon is a Minister of Her Majesty's Government and the leading Orangeman of this assembly." "Oh, then, it is all right, I suppose," added the relieved admiral.

We learn from the great chemists of the German Agricultural Department that it is quite safe, at this writing, to eat "new potatoes," that is, grown in 1906. "Solamin," the poisonous substance in the potato, is weakest in August, and evaporates almost entirely in September. Investigation by the Department was prompted by the fact that repeatedly bodies of troops became ill after eating new potatoes in the late spring or early summer. The sickness commenced with vomiting, and in some instances seemed to be akin to cholera. Several soldiers who ate unripe potatoes died after the feast. The Agricultural Department warns people who eat bruised potatoes. The bruised parts should be cut off "thick," for in the bruises the poison gathers, being very strong.

AN ALUMINIUM FAMINE.

The world is suffering at present from an aluminium famine, according to a report to the department of commerce and labor. There are at present but three sources of supply—an American company operating at Niagara Falls, a British company at the Falls of Foyer and the Neuhausen works in Switzerland. There has been a rapid increase in the use of the metal with the sudden expansion of the automobile trade, and the market price of ingots is nominally $850 a ton, or $200 more than last July. But this quotation is purely nominal, because there is none of the metal to be had. The conditions in the United States were aggravated by a strike, and when the American contractors tried to cover in the English and European markets they found there was none of the metal to be had.

Aluminium has come into very general use in automobile construction as well as in many part of engine work. It is used by large factories for cooking pots and pans of all sorts and is capable of use in almost any place where brass has been used, having, in addition to other desirable qualities, about one-third the weight of brass. The wire is used in this country now for the transmission of electricity for power and light, the cables from New York to Niagara being of this metal. But this development has not yet been taken up abroad.

He Used His Brains.

The manager of a manufacturing firm was watching a carman tugging at a heavy case one day. The man's face was red, and the muscles of his neck were standing out. The manager thought it was the right moment to offer practical assistance. "Wait a minute there," he said. "Let me show you how easy things become when you use a little brain with your muscle." He took up a hook, stuck it into the case, gave a pull, and went sprawling into the gutter. He got up, looked at the hook, and said, "Confound it—the handle comes off." "Yes, sir," said the carman. "My brain told me that, and I didn't use it."—Glasgow News.

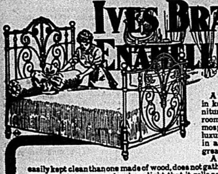
IVES BRASS AND ENAMELLED BEDS



A brass bed is always in keeping with any furniture for a cozy bedroom. It imparts an atmosphere of richness and luxury that can be equalled in a wooden bed only at great expense.

A brass bed is more easily kept clean than one made of wood, does not gather the dust, and, when necessary to sweep under, is so light that it rolls aside at almost a touch. Rigidity, finish and the harmony of the lines in construction, have combined to make Ives Brass Beds famous.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

fingers on the shackle. By James, if that tow is cast off, I'll turn the Saigon for the beach and drown the whole crew of you inside three minutes. By James! yes, and you know me, and you know I'll do it, too. You ham-faced jelly-fish, away aft with you, and save your blooming life!"

The man winced under the little captain's tongue, and went away, and Capt. Kettle looked across the wheel at his assistant.

Cortolvin shrugged his shoulders and glanced backward at the beach and nodded. Kettle leant across and shouted:

"I know it, sir, as well as you do. I know it as well as you do. But I've got a fortune in tow yonder, and I'd rather die than set it adrift. It isn't one fortune, either; it's a dozen fortunes, and I have just got to grab one of them. I'm a married man, sir, with a family, and I've known what it was to watch and see 'em hungry. You'll stand by me, Cortolvin?"

"It seems I promised. You know I've been long enough with Mahometans, skipper, to be somewhat a fatalist. So I say, 'God is great! and our fates are written on our foreheads, and no man can change by an inch the path which is foreordained he should tread.' But they are queer fates, some of them. I went away from England because of my wife; I step out of the middle of Arabia and stumble across you, and hear that she is dead; I look forward to going home and living a peaceful country life; and now it appears I'm to be drowned obscurely, out of the touch of newspapers. However, I'll be consistent. I won't grumble, and you may hear me say it aloud: 'La Allah illah Allah!'"

Capt. Kettle made no reply. Through the infernal uproar of the tornado he did not hear much of what was said, and part of what did reach his ears was beyond his comprehension. Beside, his mind was, not unnaturally, occupied with more selfish considerations.

Astern of him, in the German liner, were some thousand passengers, who were all assets for salvage. The detail of human life did not enter much into his calculations. He had been brought up in a school where life is cheap, and not so pleasant and savory a thing that it is set much store on. The passengers were part of the ship, just as much as were her engines, and the bullion which he hoped she carried.

The company which owned her was responsible for all, their credit would be damaged if all or a part of her was lost; and he, Owen Kettle, would reap a proportionate reward if he could drag her into any civilized port. And when he thought of the roaring beach so terribly close astern, he bit his beard in an agony of apprehension lest the fates should steal this fortune from him.

And, meanwhile, the line of surf was growing ever nearer. So close indeed, were they to the hateful shore that, when for a moment the fountains of white water subsided where the breakers raged upon the beach, they could see dimly beyond through the sea smoke. Palm trees, and ceibas and great silk cotton-woods, whipping and crashing before the insane blast of the tornado.

All hands on the Saigon's deck had many minutes before given themselves up for as good as dead. Their only chance of salvation lay in casting off the tow-rope, and no one dared touch the linking shackle. They quite knew that their savage little skipper would fulfill his threat if they disobeyed his orders. Indeed, old purple-faced Murgatroyd himself sat on the hatch-coaming with an opened clasp knife, and vowed death on any one who tampered with either shackle or manila. The clumsy mate had swallowed rough words once, but he preferred drowning to living on and hearing Capt. Kettle address him as coward.

The shore lay steep-to, but the backwash creamed far out into the sea. Already the stern of the German liner was plunging in the whitened water, and destruction seemed a question of seconds.

Then a strange thing happened. It seemed as though the finger of God had touched the wind; it abated by visible graduations, and the drift of the steamer grew more slow; it eased to a mere gale, and they held their place on the lip of the boiling surf; and then with a gasp it sank into quietude, and a great oily swell rose up as if by magic from the bowels of the deep, and the little Saigon forged ahead and drew the helpless passenger liner away from the perilous beach. Those tropical hurricanes of the eastern seas progress in circles, and this one had spurned them from its clutch, and let them float on a charmed ring of calm.

Cortolvin bowed over the wheel in silent thankfulness, but the shipmaster said:

"How's that, umpire?" said he. "By James, wasn't it worth hanging on for? I've got a wife, sir, and kids, and I'm remembering this moment that they'll always have full bellies from now onwards, and good clothes and no more cheap lodgings, but a decent house semi-detached, and money to plank down in the plate when they go to chapel on Sundays. The skipper of that Dutchman will be ruined over this last half-hour's job, but I can't help that. It's myself I have to think of first; one has to in this world, or no one else will; and Mr. Cortolvin, I'm a made man. Thanks to McTodd—"

From below there came a sudden whirr of machinery, as though the engines had momentarily gone mad, and then a bumping and a banging which jarred every plate of the Saigon's fabric, and then a silence, broken only by the thin distant scream of a hurt man. Presently the boom of steam broke out from the escape pipe beside the funnel, and a minute later the chief engineer made his way leisurely up onto the bridge.

He was bleeding from a cut on the forehead, and another gash showed red amongst the grime on his stubby cheek. He was shredding tobacco with a clasp-knife as he walked, and seemed from his manner to be a man quite divorced from all responsible occupations. He halted a minute at the head of the bridge ladder, replaced the tobacco cake in the pocket of his pajama coat, and rolled up the shreddings in the palms of his crackled hands. Then he filled a short brier pipe, lit it, and surveyed the available universe.

"You'll be the tornado, 'way ahead there, I'm thinking?" said he.

"Are those blame' engines broke down again?" asked Kettle sharply.

"Aye, ye may put it they're broke down."

"Then away with you below again, Mr. McTodd, and get them running again. You may smoke when we bring up in Aden."

"By James!" said Kettle, "do you hear me?"

"My lugs are a bit muzzy, but I can hear ye for a' that, captain. Only thing is, I can't do as you'd like."

Captain Kettle stiffened ominously. "Mr. McTodd," he said, "if you force me to take you in hand, and show you how to set about your work, you'll regret it."

"Man," said the engineer, "I can do some kind of impossibeelities. Ye've seen me do them. Ye've seen me keep them palsied rattle-traps running all through that blow. But if ye ask me to make a new propeller out of rod iron and packing cases, I'll have to tell you that yon kind of meeracle's beyond me."

"My great James!" said Kettle, "you don't mean to tell me the propeller's gone?"

"Either that, or else all the blades have stipped off the boss. If ye'd been below on my foot-plates, ye'd have keened it fine. When it went, those puir engines raced like an auld cab-horse tryin' to gallop, and they just got tied in knots, and tumbled down, and sprawled 15 ways at once. I was on the platform, oiling, when they jumped, and the nigger second of mine tried to get at the throttle to close her down."

"Well, get on man, get."

"Weel, he didn't, that's all; he's lying in the low-pressure crank pit this minute, and the top of his skull'll be to seek somewhere by the ash lift. Mon, I tell ye, yon second o' mine's an uncanny sight. So I had to do his work for him, and then I blew off my boilers and came up here.

"It would have been verra comforting to my professional conscience if I could have steamed her into Aden. But I'm no as sorry as I might be, for what's happened. I have it in mind that yon Parsee owner of ours in Bombay'll lose siller over this breakdown, and I want that beggar punished for all the work he's given me to do on a small wage. Mr. Cortolvin, ha' ye a match?"

A hail come from the liner astern.

"Saigon ahoy! Keep our hawser taut."

"You're all right for the present," Kettle shouted back.

"Then if it does," retorted Kettle, "you'd better tell your passengers to say their prayers. You'll get no further help from me. I'm broken down myself. Lost my propeller, if you want to know."

"Herr lieber Gott!"

"I shouldn't swear if I were you," said Kettle. "If the breeze comes this way again, you'll be toeing the mark in the other place inside five minutes." He turned and gave an order: "After-deck, there. Mr. Murgatroyd, you may cast off their rope; we've done towing."

Now, after this, a variety of things might have happened. Among them it was quite possible that both steamers, and all in them, might have been spewed up as battered refuse high upon the African beach. But as Providence ordered it, the tornado circled down on them no more; a light air came off the shore which filled the scanty canvas and gave them just steerage way; and they rode over the swells in company, as dry as a pair of bridge pontoons, and about as helpless. All immediate danger was swept away; nothing but another steamer could relieve them; and in the meantime it was a time for philosophy.

Capt. Kettle did not grumble; his fortune was once more adrift and beyond his grasp; the Parsee in Bombay would for a certainty dismiss him from employment, and Mrs. Kettle and her family must continue to drag along on such scanty doles as he could contrive to send them. All these were distressing thoughts, but they were things not to be remedied, and he took down the accordion and made sweet music, which spread far over the moving plains of ocean.

But Mr. McTodd had visions of more immediate profit. He washed with soap until his face was brilliant, put on a full suit of slop-chest serge, took boat and rowed over to the rolling German liner. It was midnight when he returned affluent in pocket and rather deep in liquor. He went into the chart-house, without invitation, smiled benignly and took a camp stool.

"They thought they would get me down into the messroom over yonder," said he, "and I'll no' deny it was a temptation. I could ha' telled those Dutch engineers a thing or two. But I'm a' for business first when there is siller ahead. So I went aft to the saloon. They were at dinner, and there were puir appetites among them. But some one spied me standing by the door and lugged me into a seat, and gave me meat and drink—champagne, no less!—and set me on to talk. Lord! once I got my tongue wagging, you should have seen them. There was no more eating done. They wanted to know how near death they'd been, and I telled 'em; and there was the old man and all the brass-edged officers at the ends of the tables fit to eat me for giving the yarn away. But a (hic) fat lot I cared. I set on the music, and they sent round the hat. Losh! There was £24 English when they handed it over to me. Skipper, ye should go and try it for yourself."

"Mr. McTodd," said the little sailor, "I am not a dashed mendicant!"

The engineer started with a boiled eye, and swayed on his campstool. He had not quite grasped the remark.

"I'm Scotch mysel'!" exclaimed he, at length.

"Same thing," said Kettle; "I'm neither. I'm a common, low-down Englishman, with the pride of the Prince of Wales, and a darned ugly tongue; and don't you forget it either."

McTodd pulled a charred cigar stump from his waistcoat pocket and lit it with care. He nodded to the accordion.

"Go on with your noise," said he.

Capt. Kettle's fingers began to twitch suggestively; and Cortolvin, in order to keep the peace, offered to escort McTodd to his room.

"I thank ye," said the engineer; "it's the climate. I have maleria in the system, and it stays there in spite of all that drugs can do, and affects the perambulatory muscles of the lower extremities. Speakin' of which, ye'll na doot have seen for yoursel'—"

"O, you'd better come along to bed," said Cortolvin.

"Bide a wee, sonny," said the man in the blue serge, solemnly. "There's a thought come to me that I've a message to give. Do ye ken anybody called Calvert?"

"Archie Calvert, by any chance?"

"'Erchie' was the name he gave. He said he kenned ye weel."

"We were at Cambridge together."

"Cambridge, were ye? Weel, I should have been a D.D. of A-berdeen mysel' if I'd done as my father wished. He was Free Kirk meenister of Ballindrochater—"

"Yes, but about Calvert?"

"Ou, ay, Calvert! Erchie Calvert, as ye say. Weel, I said we'd you aboard and this Calvert—Erchie Calvert—said he'd news for you about your wife."

"All right, never mind that now. She's dead, I know, poor woman. Let me help you down to your bunk."

"Dinna be so offensive, man, and bide a wee to hear me naws. Ye're no a widow after all—widowman that is. Your guid wife didna dee as ye think. She'd a fall from a horse, which'll probably teach her to leave horseriding alone to men in the future; and it got in the papers she was killed; but it seems a shaking was all she earned. And, talking of horses now, when I was a bairn in Ballindrochater—"

Cortolvin shook him savagely by the arm.

"My God!" he cried; "do you mean to say she's not dead?"

"Aren't I telling you?"

Cortolvin passed a hand wearily over his eyes. "And a minute ago," he whispered, "I thought I was going home." His hand dropped limply to his side, and his head slid to the chart-house deck in a dead faint.

McTodd swayed on the campstool and regarded him with a puzzled eye. "Losh!" he said, "here's him drunk as well as me. Two of us, and I never kenned it. It's a sad, immoral world, skipper. Verra sad, skipper, I say. Here's Mr. Cortolvin been—O' Lord, and he isn't listening either."

Capt. Kettle had gone out of the chart-house. The thud of a propeller had fallen upon his ear, and he leaned over the Saigon's rail and sadly watched a triangle of lights draw up through the cool, purple night. A cargo steamer freighted with rails for the Beira railway was coming gleefully toward them from out of the north, to pick up the rich gleanings which the ocean offered.

THE LINER AND THE ICEBERG

Capt. Kettle had been thanking Carnforth for getting him command of the Atlantic liner Armenia. "But," he went on, "qualifications, sir, are all in my eye. Interest's the thing that shoves a shipmaster along. Yes, Mr. Carnforth, interest and luck. I've got qualifications by the fathom, and you know pretty well what they've ever done for me. But you're a rich man and an M.P.; you've got interest; you come up and give me a good word with an owner, and look. The thing's done."

"Well, I sincerely wish you a long reign," said Carnforth. "The Armenia's the slowest and oldest ship on the line, but she was the best I could get the firm to give you. It's seldom they change their captains, and they promote from the bottom upward. You've got all the line before you, Kettle, and the rest must depend on yourself. I'd sincerely like to see you commodore of the firm's feet, but you'll have to do the climbing to that berth by your own wit. I've done all I can."

"You've done more for me, sir, than any other creature living's done, and believe me, I'm a very grateful fellow. And you can bet I shall do my best to stick to a snug berth now I've got it. I'm a married man, Mr. Carnforth, with children; I've them always at the back of my memory, and I've known what it is to try all the wretched jobs that the knockabout shipmaster's put to if he doesn't choose his belongings to starve. The only thing I've got to be frightened of now, is luck, and that's a thing which is outside my hands, and outside yours, and outside the hands of every one else on this earth. I guess that God above keeps the engineering of luck as his own private department; and he deals it out according to his good pleasure; and we get what's best for us."

Now the SS. Armenia or the old Atrocity, as she was more familiarly named, with other qualifying adjectives according to taste, was more known than respected in the western ocean passenger trade. In her day she had been a flier and had cut a record; but her day was past. Ship-building and engine building are forever on the improve, and with competition and the rush of trade the older vessels are constantly getting outclassed in speed and economy.

So heavy stoke-hold crews and extravagant coal consumption no longer made the Armenia tremble along at her topmost speed. The firm had built newer and faster boats to do the showy trips which got spoken about in the newspapers; and in these they carried the actresses, and the drummers and the other people who run up heavy wine bills and insist on expensive staterooms; and they had lengthened the Armenia's scheduled time of passage between ports to what was most economical for coal consumption, and made her other arrangements to match. They advertised first-class bookings from Liverpool to New York for £11 and upward, and passengers who economized and bought £11 tickets fondly imagining that they were going to cross in one of the show boats, were wont to find themselves consigned to berths in inside cabins on the Armenia.

The present writer (before Capt. Kettle took over command) knew the Armenia well. A certain class of passengers had grown native to her. On outward trips she was a favorite boat for Mormon missionaries and their converts. The saints themselves voyaged first-class, and made a very nasty exhibition of manners; their wives were in the second cabin; and the rock of the converts—Poles, Slavs, Armenians and other noisome riff-raff—reposed in stuffy barracks far below the water line, and got the best that could be given them from their contract transport price of three-pound-ten a head. Besides the Mormons (and shunning them as oil does water) there were civilized passengers who shipped by the Armenia either because the cheap tariff suited their purses, or because an extra couple of days at sea do not matter to them, and they preferred her quiet regime to the hurry, and noise, and dazzle, and vibration of the crowded and more popular greyhounds.

On to the head of this queer family party, then, Capt. Owen Kettle was pitchforked by the fates and Mr. Carnforth, and at first he found the position bewilderingly strange. He was thirty-seven years of age, and it was his debut as an officer on a passenger boat. The whole routine was new to him. Even the deck-hands were of a class strange to his experience, and did as they were bidden smartly and efficiently, and showed no disposition to simmer to a state of constant mutiny. But, newest of all, he came for the first time in contact with an official called a purser (in the person of one Mr. Reginald Horrocks), at whose powers and position he was inclined to look very much askance.

It was Mr. Horrocks who welcomed him on board, and the pair of them sized one another up with diligence. Kettle was suspicious, brusque and inclined to assert his position. But the purser was more a man of the world, and, besides, he was by profession urbane, and a cultivator of other people's likings. He made it his boast that he could in ten minutes get on terms of civility with the sourest passenger who was ever put into an undesirable room; and he was resolved to get on a footing of geniality with the new skipper, if his art could manage it. Mr. Horrocks had sailed on bad terms with a captain once in the days of his novitiate, and he did not wish to repeat the experience.

But Kettle was by nature an autocrat, and could not shake down into the new order of things all at once. The Armenia was in dock, noisy with stevedores working cargo, when the new captain paid his first preliminary visit of inspection. Horrocks was in attendance, voluble and friendly, and they went through every part of her, from the sodden shaft-tunnel to the glory-hole where the stewards live. The purser was all affability, but Kettle resented his tone, and at last, when they had ended their excursion, and walked together into the chart-house on the lower bridge, the little sailor turned round and faced the other, and put the case to him significantly.

"You will kindly remember that I am captain of the ferry," he said.

"You're captain all the way, sir," said Horrocks genially. "My department is the care of the passengers as your deputy, and the receiving in of stores from the superintendent purser ashore; and I wish to handle them all according to your orders."

"Oh," said Kettle, "you'll have a pretty free hand here. I don't mind telling you I'm new to this hotel-keeping business. I've been in cargo boats up to now."

"Well, of course, captain, a purser's work is a profession to itself, and the details are not likely to have come in your way. I suppose I'd better run things on much as before to start with and when you see a detail you want changed, you tell me, and I'll see it changed right away. That's where I come in; I'm a very capable man at carrying out orders. And there's another thing, captain; I know my place; I'm just your assistant."

Captain Kettle pressed the bell. "Purser," said he, "I believe we shall get on well. I hope we shall; it's most comfortable that way." A bareheaded man in a short jacket knocked and came in through the chart-house door. "Steward, bring a bottle of whiskey and put my name on it and keep it in the rack yonder, and bring some fresh water and two glasses—purser, you'll have a drink with me?"

"Well, here's plenty of cargo," said Kettle, when the whiskey came.

"Here's plenty of passengers and a popular ship," said the prsuer.

But if Mr. Horrocks was civil and submissive in words on the Armenia, it was because he had mastered the art of only saying those things which are profitable and keeping his private thoughts for disclosure on more fitting occasions. When he sat at tea that night with his wife across in their little house in New Brighton he mentioned that the new captain did not altogether meet with his august approval. "He's a queer savage they've got hold of and no mistake this time" said he, "a fellow that's lived on freighters all his life and never seen a serviette and doesn't know what to do with his entertainment money."

"Tell the firm," suggested Mrs. Horrocks.

"Not much. At least not yet. He's new, and so naturally they think he's a jewel. I'm not going to make myself unpopular by complaining too

Boils and Pimples

Red Rash, Eczema, in fact any skin disease, disfigures the complexion because the bowels are constipated—or because the kidneys do not rid the system of waste—or because the skin itself is unhealthy.

Ointments, salves and soaps are useless. Because the trouble is with the blood.

Owing to defective action of bowels, kidneys or skin, the blood becomes laden with impurities. It is these impurities — deposited by the blood — that make boils, pimples, and painful, disfiguring skin diseases. It is because the trouble is with the bowels, kidneys or skin, that FRUIT-A-TIVES cure these diseases

Fruit-a-tives

act directly on the eliminating organs—correct their irregularities—strengthen them—and thus clear the skin and make the complexion clear and soft.

If you have any skin trouble—or any fault with constipation, liver trouble, biliousness, headaches, indigestion, rheumatism—cure yourself with Fruit-a-tives. They are made of fruit juices and tonics—and never fail to cure.

THE POULTRY YARD.

An English Farmer's Impressions of America.

The Country Gentleman: For many years it had been my desire to visit America, long before the poultry industry had assumed its present importance in the United States and Canada, but especially since we have heard in Europe stories as to the large poultry plants, great packing eaters, mammoth incubators, and 300-egg hens. I was not able, however, to fulfil my wish until this summer, and as I am presenting the results of my visit to the readers of the Country Gentleman before I report them even to my own government, I wish, through this journal, to acknowledge the hearty welcome and great courtesy I met in every place visited. Public officials, private individuals, those interested in poultry questions and educational work, and many who are not concerned in this special branch of agriculture, alike gave their help to make my visit successful and pleasant, and in the 5000 miles travelled from arrival at New York to sailing thence, extending from Washington to Toronto, from the Atlantic seaboard to Kansas, my work was facilitated by all with whom I came in contact.

Very soon the vastness of America impresses itself upon the mind. Even in the older states the extent of land available is evident. Instead of the somewhat cramped conditions which are met with at home, and the limitations thus imposed on those who are concerned in food production, enhanced to a very large extent by the demand for residential properties, there is an abundance of land everywhere, save in the immediate neighborhood of a few large cities. This in itself has had considerable influence upon the people and their work. In the eastern states land can be purchased at prices much below the rental for a single year of similar farms in Britain. Where it has been worked out by the system of cropping adopted, the ordinary course seems to have been to leave it, or sell for whatever it would realize, and migrate elsewhere, perhaps to the West. Or if the soil becomes sick from over-stocking, it is left fallow for a series of years. What would appear to us a most wasteful system is practicable in a country whose resources and enormous area are almost beyond comprehension. But such conditions cannot fail to influence the methods adopted. Perhaps it is here we find some explanation of the larger ideas held with regard to poultry keeping, and, in fact, every branch of agriculture, manufactures and commerce. Big things are in the air. People think big, talk big, and seek to act big. They risk more in many ways than we should feel to be justifiable. The pioneer spirit is strong. Plans are attempted which we should, in the light of European experience, regard as impossible of success. Failures are many, but some successes are met with, and whether failure or success follows, some progress is the result, for men often learn more by their failures than by their achievements.

The difference between European and American poultry-keeping is shown in the different ideas at work. We have sought to make it primarily a farmers' question, a means of increasing the incomes of those already on the land, an addition to their other work, with such specialists in the shape of breeders as may be demanded. To that end, our main efforts have been the increase of poultry on the farms of the country, without displacement of other livestock or crops, and it may fairly be said that much success has been achieved. The increase of home production has been very large, and will be greater in the future. But, although both in the western states and Canada the poultry question is one for farmers, and they are the main producers, the number of fowls kept by them is very small comparatively with their opportunities and the acreage available, and this side of the question has yet been touched to only a very limited extent. Its importance is, however, realized, and probably will be more so in the future.

In the eastern states the greater developments, with two exceptions to be afterward noted, are in the direction of larger plants. At present there are many such plants, some of which present problems of the deepest interest, and which should be carefully watched. Even though these large plants have been conducted for several years, they must still be regarded as experiments. There can be no question that these huge plants for the production of eggs, of chickens or of ducklings have fascinated many people. When a place is seen where 4000 laying hens are kept, and the owner talks of having 10,000, where men have invested $30,000 and talk of putting down twice that sum, we are sure to meet either great success or equally great failure. That the personal equation is a huge factor cannot be questioned, for it is so in every department of human enterprise. We may find captains of industry in poultry as in other directions, men who win success where others fail. All the failures in that case would go for nothing in view of the undoubted fact that some one has succeeded — any more than fifty failures to establish wireless telegraphy are of any account in the realization that this morning in mid-Atlantic we had news of yesterday's occurrences in London and New York. I am more than doubtful as to the permanent success of some of the places visited during my tour, but others are on a different basis, and appear to have the elements of permanence. Where this business is taken up by faddists, or wealthy men desiring a new toy, or enthusiasts without staying power, their failures neither prove nor disprove anything. But one thing stands out clearly and plainly, namely, that in America and England alike I would not give a dollar bill for the best plant in existence, if compelled to run it purely for egg production, and prohibited from selling stock birds or eggs for hatching or day-old chicks, or using the land as far as possible for the cultivation of some crops. It is the combination plants that have succeeded and will succeed.

One most interesting feature of the industry in America is the absence of what we know as suburban poultry-keepers — that is, those who live on the borders of great cities and who utilize part of their garden ground for fowls, thus producing a portion of their own food. The number of these in all parts of Britain is very great and the production very large. They are found everywhere, perhaps on the larger lines in the manufacturing and mining districts. Perhaps the apartment house system may offer a partial explanation, or the use of open gardens is another, but I surmise that the purchasing of plots of ground, and the attempt to get as much as possible in the way of buildings on the plot is the main cause. Even in small towns and villages the ground around each house is very limited, and frequently an English cottage of four rooms has a much larger garden than an American house, owned by the occupant, or more than twice the size. Even, however, where there is a wealth of open land around, many poultry-keepers in the United States and Canada appear to prefer to see their birds yarded and restricted to a limited plot. What we have frequently to do nolens volens, the American does voluntarily and without any necessity.

Perhaps the most striking development, from the English point of view, is the system adopted by farmers in Rhode Island, around Little Compton, where the method of poultry-keeping is carried out in a more complete and systematic manner than in any other place I have had the opportunity of visiting. This is essentially the right method, and I am surprised that more has not been made of it by writers in America. It is known as the "colony system," and is as a rule carried out on a much more satisfactory basis, according to our ideas, than any other which I saw. The birds are entirely kept in colony houses, and are distributed over the land, not to the same extent as we do in Europe, but in a way that appears to avoid the difficulty always presenting itself to us in Europe, namely, as to tainted soil. From all the information obtainable, and I spent a whole day among the farmers of that section of Rhode Island, this system yields substantial profits, and when the question was asked whether it was on an economical basis, their smile of satisfaction showed that the farmers were content.

In Europe we have developed along different lines. Our farmers have distributed the fowls in portable houses, linking poultry-keeping with the ordinary work of the farm, but making it subsidiary to other operations. In extensive poultry-keeping there has been a tendency to keep the birds on the same land year after year, as is common in America, without any real attempt to change it. These Rhode Island farmers, however, have carried out the system to a much greater extent in that they have made poultry-keeping the first subject, simply cultivating the land either for the provision of food for the fowls or to prevent it becoming sick by the fowl manure. The system here adopted appears to be capable of very great extension both in America and England, and my judgment is that it offers the best solution of the problem which is constantly before us.—Edward Brown.

No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air — DRY air — constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,— carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food that's being baked.

Handling the Apple Crop.

All baskets should be of the half-bushel type, round bottomed, with a swinging handle, and should be provided with a strong iron hook, that can be hung upon a limb or on the ladder, allowing the picker to have both hands free.

Stepladders are not usually desirable in apple-picking, because that portion of a tree covered by a stepladder can be equally as well picked from a longer ladder, and an experienced picker prefers not to move his ladder more than is necessary, and also desires to cover just as much surface on the tree as is possible with one moving.

Quick Work.

The rapidity with which an experienced picker can gather apples, where the picking is good, is astonishing. One picker has a record of gathering one hundred barrels of apples between daylight and six o'clock in the afternoon. Two barrels were picked in just ten minutes, being at the rate of 120 barrels for ten hours. Such picking is not desirable, but it simply demonstrates how extremely active and skilful some pickers may become by constant practice. It may be said that a good, fair day's work should average eighteen to twenty barrels; this means, with good picking, that the fruit should be carefully picked and placed in the basket, and emptied into barrels in such a manner as to prevent bruising.

Apples should never be handled but twice, once from the tree and again from the sorting table. When the sorting and packing is done in the field, the picker may deposit his apples direct upon the table; otherwise they should be placed in boxes, crates or barrels, and be removed at once to the packing-house, at which place they will be cooler, and sorted at some later time.

Apples Ripen Up Very Rapidly

in the pile if they are exposed directly to the rays of the sun. It is always well, therefore, if it becomes necessary to leave them in the field, to place them in some shady place if possible, but, no doubt, the very best results are obtained in long-keeping qualities when the apples are taken directly from the trees to a cool room, and there kept in storage, where the ripening process is wholly or partially checked. This is especially important if they are to be shipped long distances, and particularly if they are to be exported. All these details are simple enough, but they all require forethought, and unless a man has an eye out for all the little things, he will be left behind when the rush of apple picking and packing arrives.

Storage.

The advantages of a good storage building are two-fold, especially in commercial orchards. When picking time arrives every effort should be made to harvest the crop at the earliest possible moment, and if the grading and packing was done in the orchard at the same time it would not call for any extra number of hands, and in these days when scarcity of labor and high prices for the same is such a factor in crop production, it is by far better economy to concentrate all efforts toward harvesting the crop before attempting to prepare it for market. Again, if packing is attempted at the same time with picking, the manager's attention will be divided between the two operations, with the probability that neither will receive the care it should have; and still again, unless fruit is to be immediately placed in a chemical cold storage it is far better for it to be stored in a building which can be thrown open at night, when the air is clear and crisp, as it will be at that season of the year, and have the storage closed tightly in the daytime. Many dealers to-day give decided preference to fruit which has been stored in a well-ventilated storehouse; they claim they will keep practically as well up to March or April, and that there is much less danger from scald when they are taken out of storage.

Sorting.

The very first thing to be considered in the packing of fruit is to determine what first-class fruit is. Even among those persons who sell apples for the export trade there is very little exact practice in the sorting of apples. Growers' ideas as to what constitutes first-class fruit vary in proportion to the quality of the fruit they produce, and dealers' ideas are usually based upon the quality of fruit they are in the habit of handling and the demands of the trade to which they are catering. It is ordinarily considered that any fruit which is sound enough to reach its destination is good enough to be called first-class, but such standard is a serious error. The fruit should not only reach its destination in approximately the same condition in which it leaves the orchard, but it should also be attractive and uniform in quality, and capable of being held for some time when it reaches the wholesaler. All the specimens in a package should grade up to a more or less uniform standard of shape and size, and any fruit which is ever so perfect in itself would not be considered first-class among fruit which average either very much larger or very much smaller. In other words, there is a great difference between a perfect specimen and a first-class package.

The Market.

Usually it is better for a grower to sell his fruit before it is packed and let the buyer do the packing or direct the same, according to his ideas; in that way much dissatisfaction and many misunderstandings are avoided. Perhaps it will answer all requirements to define first-class fruit as such as are free from bruises and injuries and all insect and fungus blemishes, are fully characteristic of the variety and are in that stage of maturity which the market demands at the time of their exposure for sale. It should be especially impressed upon the grower and packer that uniformity in size is quite as important to a package of fruit as excellence in the individual specimen, and it is a question if in the near future we do not find apples graded for size as well as peaches and oranges. This work must be done by hand, for high quality apples which come through the grades apparently without blemish usually show discolored spots in a few days.

It is evident that if fruit is sorted two grades will result—the first-class grade and the remainder. In most cases, however, apples are made into three grades, the third being generally known as culls or cider apples. The methods of packing must depend very greatly upon the market which is to be reached, upon the quality of the fruit, and upon the package which is to be used. In the east most of the apples are packed in barrels, while in Colorado and on the Pacific coast the so-called bushel box is the standard package.

Sorting Table.

To facilitate handling fruit for packing a sorting table should be used, which should be about waist high, four feet wide, and long enough to accommodate the desired number of sorters; there should be a ledge running about the table to retain the apples, and on which the sorting baskets may be hung by their iron hooks. All barrels should be thoroughly clean and free from nails projecting on the inside. A paper or cushion liner should first be placed on the barrel, on which should be placed one or two layers of apples. This facing is done by placing by hand concentric rows of apples with the stem end of the apple facing the head of the barrel. These apples in all cases should fairly represent the approximate quality of the entire package.

After the Facing is done the apples may be turned carefully into the barrel from a round-bottomed, swing-handled basket. After every third basket is emptied the barrel should be gently shaken to settle the apples well in the barrel. It is not necessary to face the upper head of the barrel, the person heading usually adjusting the apples on the head end in order to get the package as tight and secure as possible. A well-balanced gang for sorting and packing usually consists of eight sorters at the table, two facing up barrels, two inspecting apples while running them into the barrels, and one or two heading up. Such a gang in a convenient packing-house should easily put up a carload a day, the same varying from 160 to 200 barrels. All barrels after being headed should be plainly stenciled on the face end at once with variety and grade, to avoid future mistakes.

Shiftless Packing

really accounts for more than one-half of all the unsatisfactory returns from fruit, and to remedy this trouble it calls for the united efforts of growers and dealers. They should realize that their interests are mutual and not antagonistic, that whatever tends to build up the apple industry affects one as well as the other. Our eastern fruit is, as a rule, better than the western, and being grown near the consumer, ought to command a superior price, and yet it is a fact, because of the better sorting and packing, it drives the home fruit from the markets. Upon the best brand of fruit a trademark is often important. Some neat pictorial design, or even the name of the farm or orchard where the fruit is grown.

BUILDING AN EMPIRE

THE NEW METHOD PURSUED IN CANADIAN NORTHWEST.

Remarkable Tribute of a Writer in a New York Magazine—"Things Run Better Here," Say Americans in Canada—The Lure of the Wilderness—From Engineer to Grand Piano—Conquering the Last Frontier.

The leading article in "Success" Magazine of New York for August is one on the Canadian Northwest, called "Conquering the Last Frontier," by Samuel Merwin, and gives a graphic description of how an empire is there being built. Part I. of the article, entitled "Our Lost Empire" follows in part:

Definition number seven, in Webster's unabridged, of the transitive verb, "to lose," reads. "To fail to obtain or enjoy; to fail to gain or win." Twenty-five years ago Canada was young and diffident. To-day she is strong, rich, and a little proud. Then, had we thought it worth while to make advances, it is difficult to say what might or might not have taken place. Now, there are half a million American settlers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and Alberta, and, if you should ask them, you would find that they are not at all interested in the annexation question. "Things run rather better here," they say, "than in the States. The administration of justice is much more satisfactory. We see no advantage in changing."

If you have ever felt, as I rather fancy you have, that it is in you to explore strange, new countries for yourself, that you would not hesitate very long between going into something in the dry goods way and going into something in the empire-building way, you will do well to open the atlas to the map of North America and let loose your imagination in the splendidly romantic conquest of that Far Northwest which we know very little about, but which we shall, willy nilly, learn a good deal about before "Jim" Hill, and the new Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern, and the Canadian Pacific, and the Dominion Government get through with it. They are building—while you wait,—an empire with which we, of these States, shall very shortly have to reckon.

New Method of Empire Building.

It is the first time an empire was ever built in just this way. The rifle has no place in the undertaking. Thanks to the century-long influence of the Hudson's Bay Co., the Indians and half-breeds are docile. Thanks to the Anglo-Saxon sense of order, and to the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, there are few or none of those "bad men" who have infested our frontiers. The conquering army is made up of farmers and cows and sheep and horses and ploughs and harvesting machines. The advance skirmishers, if you could see them at work, are hardy young men in rough clothes who carry transits and levels, and travel with pack horses or, in the depth of the winter, with pack dogs.

It is these hardy young men of the transit in whom we are most interested here. The farmer makes excellent foundation material, — the best there is, in fact; but like certain of the others of us he is neither very exciting nor very decorative. In small parties for reconnoissance work, in large parties for survey work, scattered over three thousand miles for construction work, the engineers are blazing the steel trails across the prairies and through the wilderness. Before many of them lies hardship, perhaps starvation. For the larger survey parties provisions are freighted out by Indians and cached where expert woodsmen can find them. But the small reconnoissance parties, plunging into the northwestern mountains for six months at a time, can carry only a few staples. When gun and rod fail, they must eat dog. In winter—and winter is winter up there,—they must roll up in a blanket or two and sleep under the stars. A Canadian Pacific engineer, poor Vance, was frozen to death west of Battleford two winters ago. I know an engineer who has slept under canvas when the camp thermometer registered fifty-six below zero. I know another engineer who thinks little, at forty below, of rolling up in a single Hudson Bay blanket on the snow. In summer this same country is hot, and, in places, dusty, and along the river bottoms the insect pests are all but unbearable. The minute and tedious work of surveying and map-making is relieved only by intervals of pushing through rough country, of building rafts in order to ferry supplies, instruments, and records across rivers, of cutting a way for pack horses through tangled windfalls, or, in winter, of "breaking trail" for the dogs.

By way of recompense for this work the engineer, equipped with technical training and with years of hard experience, shares with the college professor the distinction of being the most highly underpaid of brain workers. A fat traveling salesman with a grin, a good story or two, and a fund of questionable grammar, will draw from twice to ten times the salary.

And the curious thing is that they love the life, these lean, youngish men with the clear heads and the magnificent bodies. They will perhaps try to make you think they don't. They are a silent lot, as becomes men who pass their years in the wilderness or on the lonely, wind-swept prairies, and they are working for corporation directors whose business ears are not attuned to the call of the wild. But if you could drop into the Alberta Hotel at Edmonton, on some mild spring evening, and have a look at the assistant engineers and the instrument men who are booked to disappear toward the Rockies, within a day or two, for some six, eight, or ten months, you would see what I mean. The undying spirit of adventure is in their eyes; the half-conscious swagger of the soldier of fortune is in their stride. The same haunting desire that drove Stanley back to Africa, that drives the soldier to the wars, or the sailor to the sea, is sending these men back to the wilderness.

The spending out of hand of a hundred millions or so for railroad building through a new land obviously means something. Three new trunk lines are already under construction in Western Canada. Before long we shall be hearing a good deal about the foresight and the unflinching courage of the men who are standing back of these huge undertakings. But when you see this sort of thing in the papers, smile. A man would show about as much foresight in staking out a claim in the bullion room at the mint. In Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta Provinces there are more than two hundred thousand square miles of prairie land, most of it rich black loam, ready cleared for the plough. As much again awaits clearing. In the mountains are minerals and timber. Settlers are pouring in on every train to occupy this vast region. Towns and grain warehouses are springing up over night. Imagine the Mississippi and Missouri Valleys to settle over again under modern conditions. Imagine anything you like, and you will probably be within the facts.

It is nothing unusual for these prairies to yield a general average of 25 bushels of wheat to the acre, and 40 bushels of oats. Much of the wheat is of a higher grade than any now raised in our West, and it is frequently mixed with ours to bring ours up to standard. No, the wonder is that the pompous gentlemen in the tall hats didn't get their railroads through ten years ago. Add to this that all save the Hill undertaking are bolstered up with vast land grants, and, now and then, with cash subsidies, and the wonder grows.

No, the engineer is our man. Of the two types, the man who is risking other people's money is neither so picturesque nor so interesting as the man who is risking his life. It is the engineer who is conquering this last, and perhaps greatest, frontier.

Edmonton.

Edmonton is the jumping-off place for all North-Western Canada, the place where town and wilderness strike hands. Here in Washington Square the prosperous little city on the Upper Saskatchewan seems even farther away than its accredited 2,500 miles. It is 800 miles west of Winnipeg, and it is some little way north of that fifty-third parallel, beyond which, if one is to believe Mr. Rex Beach, the laws of God and man don't work very well. If one were to attempt the somewhat hazardous feat of walking due east from Edmonton, it would be found necessary to swim the upper waters of Hudson Bay before fetching up on the coast of Labrador. All this sounds very remote and inaccessible. It suggests rather the interior recesses of Greenland than the pastoral charms of an Iowa or an Illinois; and if carried away from New York, buttoned inside a prosaic waistcoat, what I took to be the emotions of the explorer, my ignorance was not, I prefer to think, unique.

A City of Contrasts.

Edmonton is a city of banks and a board of trade; of department stores a block long and a good many storeys high; of paved streets and brick and stone buildings; of well-to-do men in frock coats or in trim riding breeches and puttees; of prettily-gowned women; of the latest thing in automobiles, of clubs, churches and polo grounds. All this speaks of the life of to-day. But jostling by the prosperous merchant or the English "younger son" is the half-breed in Stetson hat and silk-embroidered gauntlets, or the squaw with papoose bundled on her shoulders. The contrast, to one who has surrendered much of himself to the effete influence of our Atlantic States, is somewhat bewildering. One evening I strolled to the brink of the bluff and tried to straighten it out. Edmonton was the frontier; I knew that. But maps, with great "unexplored" patches on them, are not so convincing as they might be when one is in the living presence of clubs, and banks, and churches, and automobiles. Before me was the mile-wide valley, cut out square and deep from the yellow earth. The smoke from the lower town, thickened by a May mist, filled the valley to the brim, and in the moonlight it was luminous and faintly purple. Through this veil glistened the silver Saskatchewan, as it wound its leisurely way toward Hudson Bay. It was all very serene and very charming. At this moment it seemed, after all, as if I might be pretty close to those unexplored blank spaces. I should have liked to let my thoughts float off downstream through the mist to encounter the wild adventures of frontier times; but even if they could have slipped safely under the railroad bridge, they would have come up short against the very business-like log boom just below.

From Engineer to Grand Piano.

The wild days are almost over with; the frontier is losing ground every day. In the trading stores at Edmonton, the half-breeds sit, and smoke, and talk of the old days when the steamboats ran on the Saskatchewan. Men talk that way of the rotting wharves at Portsmouth, of the ancient, faded glories of the Spanish main. When I heard this plaint, from the lips of a whimsical old trader, I gave up my hope of finding a frontier. I surrendered to the spirit of Jasper street, Prince Rupert, with its electric lights and its automobiles. I merely shook a listless head when a talkative young man put the age-old question, "What's your line?" So he was here, too! Behind a certain prosaic waistcoat, a spark had flickered out. After the engineer, the traveling man; after the traveling man, the steam plough; after the steam plough, the grand piano; that is the way they build up empires to-day.

How He Got His Cherries.

We hear a lot nowadays of the scarcity of farm labor, and of the dilemma in which farmers find themselves to secure the gifts of a bounteous Providence. But The Clinton New Era caps the climax with a story, which is too good not to reproduce: "A good joke is told at the expense of one of Clinton's independent gentlemen, who having made provision for the picking of his cherries with a certain person who afterwards found it impossible to fulfil his contract, went into the orchard, cut the valuable tree down, stripped it of its heavily-laden limbs, and proceeded to pick fruit 'under the shade of the old apple tree.'"

(VISION)

Sight is an active function. Although we see apparently without effort, and without volition, yet every moment of vision is costing its adequate amount of vital energy. True, we cannot estimate just how much energy is utilized in looking for a given length of time at any particular object or scene, but we do know that many nervous persons are very much exhausted by the use of the eyes for a short time in an art gallery, where things of great interest are constantly attracting their attention; some are more exhausted by one hour of such effort with the eyes than they would be by ten hours of manual labor; consequently the same amount of vital force that would be required for ten hours of labor may be expended in one hour through the medium of the eyes.

We check this waste of energy, by the correction of the visual defects with the proper glasses.

MILLINERY OPENING!

MISS M. CAMPBELL

Takes pleasure in announcing to the public, that her Millinery Opening takes place on Monday, Sept. 10th, and following days, to which all are cordially welcome.

This will be one of the finest Millinery displays ever shown by Miss Campbell, and all should take this opportunity of seeing this grand display.

MISS M. CAMPBELL.

"He who does not open his eyes must open his purse." This old German adage is a piquant admonition to read the store-ads. before going shopping."

Some Big Prizes for Drilling Oddfellows.

Toronto, Sept 17. — Four thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars in cash will be presented in prizes for the drilling competitions to be held during the Oddfellows' gathering. In addition eight valuable trophies are to be given away.

The result of this generosity will be some remarkably brilliant drill and parade exhibitions. All the best corps on the continent are entered and the competition will be exceedingly keen and interesting.

The Patriarchs Militant competitions are three in number. A first prize of $750 and a second of $350 are offered for the best drilled minimum cantons of twenty-four chevaliers and three officers; prizes of $300 and $150 go to the minimum cantons of eighteen chevaliers and three officers; while $200 and $100 are the awards offered for the exemplification of the militant degree.

The parade prizes, which are open to all excepting Toronto city, are $150 and $75 for the class A cantons having the largest number of chevaliers in line and presenting the finest general appearance and military bearing, and $75 and $25 for the class B cantons in the same competition. For the encampment best meeting the qualifications $75 is offered and for the lodges most largely represented $100, and presenting the best appearance $50.

Kleingbeil Says He's Enjoying Life.

Old Ferdinand Kleingbeil, who will be tried at the coming assizes for killing his wife on Monday, March 5th, is standing his confinement well. He looks fine, eats and sleeps well, and does not really seem to realize his position. Talking to a visitor recently, the aged prisoner made the remark that he was having a very comfortable time, in fact, to use his own words, "he had not enjoyed life so much for years" as he had during the past summer.

Clarke Released.

Nelson H. Clarke, who on Friday last was remanded to jail on a charge of being of unsound mind, was last evening released from that institution. Two physicians who examined Clarke certified that he was perfectly sane, and upon their finding the Magistrate ordered his release.

Notes From the Dock.

The steamer Vatuna this morning took away from here a large consignment of tomatoes for a canning factory at Picton.

The steamer Ella Ross was this morning well ladened with freight, and also brought many passengers to the city from the various bay ports.

Work is progressing rapidly upon the new dock which is being built at the Corby elevator. When completed it will be a first-class job, and add much to the appearance of that part of the harbor.

Deaf Mutes Married.

A very interesting event took place at the residence of Mr. Wm. Elliott on Wednesday of last week being no less than the marriage of two persons each of whom are deaf and dumb. They were both educated at Belleville Institute and are each clever and in many ways gifted. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Coon, of Bobcaygeon, Mrs. Foster Heron acting as interpreter and repeating the ceremony by signs. There were about forty guests present and the young couple left for their future home near Bracebridge with the good wishes of a host of friends. — North Verulam correspondent to the Bobcaygeon Independent.

A Social Evening

The Young People's Society of Emmanuel R. E. Church had a pleasant time last evening. After the regular devotional exercises of the society were over the members adjourned to the rectory, where an enjoyable hour was spent in social intercourse. A short programme of music and singing was given and at its conclusion ice cream and cake were served.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Brantford and Woodstock Will Have Pro. Hockey.

Ottawa Free Press: The Ontario Hockey Association for years has ruled hockey in Ontario with a firm hand and has succeeded, so far as it is possible in eliminating professionalism. This year there is to be some opposition. In Brantford and Woodstock there are a number of splendid players, who because of lacrosse careers cannot play in the O.H.A. They are barred because they are professionals. Now the two cities have decided to have professional hockey. A good many players who have figured in the International Professional League, and who are either tired of it, or have been released will be used.

SPORTING NOTES.

Both Canadian clubs in the Eastern league got walloped yesterday, Toronto by 12 to 1 and Montreal by 11 to 2. They seem both doomed to finish as tail-enders.

The National Lacrosse Union last night decided to give the Tecumsehs and Capitals a loss each, and ordered the Nationals and Tecumsehs to play in Toronto next Saturday. The Tecumsehs, if they win, will play the Torontos, and the winners will play off with the eastern winners.

"Knotty" Lee, the Toronto twirler, who was reported dead as the result of being hit by a batted ball, is home. Lee says that a line drive hit him in the stomach, and involuntarily clutching at the spot, he held the ball, which they had to pry out of his fingers. He was unconscious for 28 hours, and then had the pleasure of reading telegrams of condolence to Mrs. Lee and the nice obituaries written over his body. Up to that time he had won 12 and lost 8 games and hit .340. He lost the four games he pitched after his recovery, and closed batting .290.

A despatch from Corry, Pa., shows conclusively that the suckers are not all dead yet: "The running race at Corry fair grounds this afternoon between Harry Batson, colored, of Jamestown, N.Y., and a ringer by the alleged name of Harry Wilson, of Hamburg, N.Y., was won by the latter, who stepped the 100 yards in ten seconds flat. Batson was defeated by over six feet. The purse was for $500 a side, and fully $1,500 changed hands. It was a killing pure and simple, the white man outclassing Batson at every point. A man by the name of Boyd from Canada had charge of Wilson.

Popular Musicians Married at Banff.

Two exceedingly popular musicians and former residents of this city were married at Banff, Alta., on Wednesday, Sept. 12th, in the persons of Mr. Erwin R. Gordon, eldest son of Ald. and Mrs. Gordon, of this city, and Miss Letitia M. Thompson, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Thompson, formerly of this city. The wedding, which was a quiet affair, was performed at the Methodist parsonage by Rev. Mr. Haggeth. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon have a host of friends in this city, who will wish them every success and happiness in their married life. Music-lovers, in particular, will have grateful and appreciative memories of the young couple, who were exceedingly talented musicians, and were ready, at any time, to aid a good cause. In the palmy days of Mrs. MacColl's orchestra Mr. Erwin R. Gordon and his bride were among the best performers. Mr. Gordon is a clever all-round musician, and his wife, besides being a fine performer on the viola, is one of the best pianists ever heard in this community. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon will reside in Vancouver, where Mr. Gordon will open a studio, and teach music in all its branches.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY" TO-NIGHT.

A New York paper thus speaks of Miss Eveleen Dunmore, who will be seen in "The Arrival of Kitty" at the Carman opera house to-night: "No, when you fish for laughs you don't use a pole." Pretty Eveleen Dunmore was waiting to go on for her first scene in "The Arrival of Kitty." "What I mean is this—don't you know? In playing a part that is new, like Kitty, one has to sort of grope around in order to strike the right responsive chord in an audience. The very same lines, spoken in different ways, may be received in different ways by an audience. To amuse, to entertain, to make people laugh, is the object of our little play, and that is why I say 'we fish for laughs' while the play is new and untried."

THE BLACK DIKE BAND.

The Cleveland Leader had this to say of the famous Black Dike Band, which appears at the Carman tomorrow night: "The Black Dike Band is making a strong impression at the Coliseum, where it is playing this week, and there haven't been as big crowds there this season or such delighted ones. The band is restoring the social glories of the place. It plays brilliantly and it has a number of delightful soloists, too. Besides this, Conductor Gladney and Bandmaster Bower are eclectic enough musicians to recognize that there are two classes of listeners at all concerts; those who are educated in music and those who like it instinctively and have had no training. Both of these classes are looked after in the programmes, which are selected with fine discrimination."

"KING RICHARD THE THIRD."

John Griffith the well-known and very popular tragedian, is booked for a performance of Shakespeare's "King Richard the Third" at the Carman on Friday next, Sept. 21. This announcement will be welcomed by theatre-goers who patronize only the leading plays and stars, for Mr. Griffith always "makes good," and his company is the best obtainable. His scenic, costume, electrical and mechanical equipment is adequate for the most thrilling effects, and evenings spent at his performances are intellectual treats to his hearers. The production of "King Richard the Third" is about twice as expensive as "Macbeth," in which Mr. Griffith starred for the past three seasons, but his management feel assured the public will recognize and appreciate the fact that the desire to please it will be rewarded.

PROTECTION KEYNOTE

Of C. M. A. President's Address to Winnipeg Convention.

C. C. Ballantine Says Fiscal Policy Has Ceased to Be a Matter of Partizan Controversy in Canada—Drew Alluring Picture of Prospects of West as a Field For Establishment of Manufactures—Got Civic Reception.

Winnipeg, Sept. 18.—Over 200 delegates to the convention of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association were registered here yesterday morning when several sections met for business. Most interesting was a meeting of subscribers to and members interested in the formation of a mutual fire insurance company. This was endorsed.

In the afternoon the reports of the treasurer and parliamentary and technical education committees were received.

Last night a civic reception was tendered at the Royal Alexandra Hotel, when addresses of welcome were given by Premier Roblin, Mayor Sharpe and others, which were replied to by Vice-President Cockshutt of Brantford.

The reading of the annual address of President Ballantyne was, of course, the feature. He drew an alluring picture of the prospects of the west as a field for the establishment of manufacturers. His remarks were constantly applauded. On the question of the tariff he said:

Build Up Canada.

"It is for us to say whether we will continue to purchase our manufactured goods in the United States, or put just a little more tariff on certain lines, and make the factories in the States build plants in Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Moose Jaw, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Regina, Edmonton or any other of the many centres in our great western prairies which have advantages to offer, and by this means keep the population we are getting.

"It must be a matter of gratification to all patriotic Canadians that the fiscal policy has ceased to be a matter of partisan controversy. The leading politicians of both political parties now recognize the necessity of protecting Canadian industries of all kinds, and we may hope that when the members of our Dominion Parliament are called together in November to consider the revision of the tariff, they will set aside all old prejudices and look at the question from the broad standpoint of Canadian interests, that they will consider what policy will best develop the varied resources of our country, give profitable employment of all classes of our people and maintain and advance the prosperity that now exists.

"It is a deplorable fact that many of our provincial legislators have so forgotten the great confederation idea of unity that they have been only too ready to devise means to add to the local revenue by taxation directed at the business people of other provinces, thereby imposing unnatural restrictions upon inter-provincial trade."

O. J. C. FALL MEET.

Toronto, Sept. 18.—Yesterday at the O. J. C.'s fall meeting the weather was clear and the track fast. The record:

After Forty Years.

Ottawa, Sept. 18.—President Hay of the Bible Society has retired after forty years' service.

A TRIPLE WELCOME.

Toronto, Sept. 18.—The public welcome tendered the Sovereign Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., yesterday morning in the Legislative Chamber of the Ontario Parliament Buildings was an evidence that the 82nd Communication of that organization was now in full swing.

No more royal welcome was ever tendered the delegates of any convention than that given yesterday morning. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity with representatives from the Grand Lodges and members of Rebekah Assembly.

A Triple Welcome.

Those who delivered the addresses of welcome were: Hon. J. P. Whitney, Prime Minister of Ontario, in behalf of the province; His Worship, Emerson Coatsworth, Mayor of Toronto, in behalf of the city; J. J. Graham, chairman of the Civic Reception Committee; W. S. Johnston, Grand Master for Ontario; Joseph Fowley, Grand Patriarch for Ontario; and Miss Ida J. Robins, president of the Rebekah Assembly, in behalf of the order in this jurisdiction.

Owing to the temporary indisposition of the Grand Sire, Hon. Robt. E. Wright, Deputy Grand Sire E. S. Conway responded to the addresses of welcome.

Cantons Complete.

Three cantons of 27 men each, including captain and two lieutenants, completed in the drilling competitions. These were from Detroit, Toledo and Washington. The evolutions were little short of marvellous and the experts were cheered to the echo by the large crowd of spectators at the Exhibition grounds. To those unacquainted with the possibilities of fancy drill yesterday's exhibition was a revelation. The judges will give their decision to-day. The first prize is $750, and the second prize $350.

To-day at 9.30 four cantons will enter into competition in class B, resuming at 3.30. The Patriarchs Militant Band of the 3rd Regiment, Department of Pennsylvania, will provide music.

Camp Opened.

The formal ceremony of opening the camp took place about 1 p. m. when a handsome large tri-color of purple, red and white, was flaunted to the breeze from the official flagstaff in the presence of Gen. M. A. Raney and Col. W. S. Johnston, who is camp commandant of Camp Wright. There was thus allowed no opportunity for any "flag incident," the tri-color, which is the emblem of the Patriarchs Militant, being innocent of any unpleasant possibilities.

The ceremony, which was concluded by a few words from Major-General Harris, expressive of feelings of international amity, was conducted in the presence of about 1,000 Oddfellows.

Official Reports.

The report of the grand sire and commander-in-chief, R. E. Wright, stated that, except for the San Francisco earthquake the year had been one of unexampled prosperity for the order.

Grand Secretary J. B. Goodwin compared the growth since the last convention in Toronto in 1880, when the total active membership of subordinate lodges was 440,158, as against 1,278,065 now.

The total membership of encampments was 185,370 at the end of 1905, and the net gain over the previous year 7,531; the total Rebekah membership, 501,283, the net gain over the previous year being 27,224; the sisters of Rebekah lodges 322,617, the net gain of sisters being 19,171; and the net gain of brothers of Rebekah lodges 8,053, the net gain in all of the above branches being 95,675.

The total contribution for the relief of Oddfellows in San Francisco was $208,781.18.

The report of the grand treasurer, W. R. Muckle, showed receipts amounting to $181,123.48, which included a cash balance from last year of $70,174.43, and expenditure of $71,860.55, leaving a balance in banks to credit of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of $109,262.93.

Every train yesterday brought delegates, but the big crowd is expected to-morrow, when at least 20,000 will come in for the parade. Meanwhile the downtown streets are becoming gayer with bunting.

Coming to Canada.

New York, Sept. 18.—Governor Sir William Gray Wilson arrived here yesterday, on the steamer Yucatan, from Nassau, New Providence. He is en route to Canada.

Three After the Seat.

St. Johns, Que., Sept. 18.—A convention of Liberals was held last night to choose a candidate for the House of Commons. J. S. Masler, K. C., G. Marchaud and Joseph Demers are the aspirants.

Seventeen delegates were named to meet to-day and make a choice.

Million Lost by Storm.

Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 18.—Late reports show that the storm of Saturday night and Sunday washed out about 25 miles of railroad track within a radius of 50 miles of this city. Thousands of acres of grain and corn were damaged, besides many buildings. The damage is estimated at $1,000,000.

Made In St. Thomas.

St. Thomas, Sept. 18.—The made-in-St. Thomas exhibition opened last night with a brilliant military display at the Granite rink, which is handsomely decorated. The booths, which number over a hundred, represent all the leading manufacturers in the city.

WOMEN ARE NOT ADMITTED.

To Courts of Methodism After Conference Debate the Question.

Montreal, Sept. 18.—"Was it an apostle who said 'Let them be keepers at home'?" Dr. Antliffe asked the general conference, and, receiving no answer, repeated it. The debate on admitting women to equality in the church courts was finally closed by a vote of 173 to 76, and the proposal to change laymen to lay members was rejected by 147 to 105. The question being a constitutional one, 189 votes would have been needed.

Church union came up again yesterday, but there was an evident disposition to postpone the debate.

One Dead and One May Die.

Toronto, Sept. 18.—David Jackson of 318 Bathurst street died about midnight at the Western Hospital, from concussion of the brain, received in a street car collision on McCaul street yesterday morning.

Isaac Caswell, an old man aged 75, who lives on Strachan avenue, was hit by a street car last night. He was taken to the Western Hospital, where it was found concussion of the brain had resulted from the accident. Mr. Caswell is a brother of the late City Solicitor Caswell. His condition is critical.

Locates Runaway Wife.

Peterboro, Sept. 18.—While Ernest Leflay of this city was in the hospital a few weeks ago, his wife left suddenly in company with a boarder, Joseph Dare, taking two small children with her. Leflay located them in Welland. The woman refused to return and Leflay has written to friends here stating that he purposes remaining in Welland.

Big Guns Open Campaign.

Port Burwell, Sept. 18.—The bye-election campaign in East Elgin, in the interests of W. F. Hepburn, the Liberal candidate, was opened with a meeting here last night. The "feature" orators were Hon. Charles Hyman and Hon. A. B. Aylesworth. W. H. Williams presided and the hall was well filled.

To American Courts.

Windsor, Sept. 18.—George Burling, confessed bigamist, who was released Friday by Judge Horne because a Canadian statute made it impossible to prosecute him in Canada, is now in Detroit. It is thought Mrs. Burling No. 2, a resident of Windsor will carry the matter to the American courts.

Good-Bye to Zion.

Chicago, Sept. 18.—John Alexander Dowie Sunday announced a farewell service at Shiloh for next Sunday. Immediately after this service he will leave for Mexico. It is not expected that he will ever see Zion City again.

Cheese Factory Burned.

Peterboro, Sept. 18.—The cheese factory at Melrose Abbey, owned by Andrew Matheson, was burned to the ground Sunday. The fire is believed to have originated from a spark of a passing traction engine.

Persia's New Council.

Teheran, Persia, Sept. 18.—According to an ordinance just published, the new Persian National Council will consist of 156 members. Teheran will be represented by 60 members, while the provinces will send 96.

Piles Cured

A FREE TRIAL PACKAGE SENT TO ALL TO PROVE ITS REMARKABLE POWER.

Now that the Pyramid Pile Cure has been discovered and has been proven to be a quick and certain means of relief and lasting cure, there is no excuse for undergoing an operation.

Does the Pyramid Pile Cure give immediate relief? Does it cure? Try a sample and prove it to yourself, as thousands have done before you. Then go to your druggist and get a 50-cent box and complete the cure.

The Pyramid Pile Cure acts with a certainty and a rapidity that is both pleasing and astonishing.

Take, for example, the case of Mr. Geo. B. Bender, 28 Diversey St., Chicago. We quote his own words:

"I have been a sufferer for 14 years from internal and external piles. I have bought all kinds of pile cures to get relief, but it was all in vain until I read your ad. in the American, and I sent for a sample, which you sent me. I used it. I have bought one 50c box of Pyramid Pile Cure and one box of Pyramid Ointment. I have used them as you directed and to-day I bought another 50c box. Gentlemen, candidly speaking, I must tell you the truth that I am feeling fine after using one 50c box and I am free from pain at present. I sincerely believe it is one of the best and grandest pile cures in the world. I would advise all sufferers to try the Pyramid Pile Cure for it is the best remedy ever used. It is a sure cure. I am very thankful for the sample you sent me.

"The Pyramid Pile Cure is a God-send to the sufferer of piles and I know it."

The Pyramid Pile Cure has quickly and easily cured the worst cases of piles. The Pyramid Pile Cure heals ulcers and sores, reduces inflammation and takes away all itching and pain.

Prove it to yourself at our own expense. That is all we ask you to do.

Send your name and address to the Pyramid Drug Co., 53 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Michigan, and get a free sample package by return mail.

TREPOFF IN DEATH STILL RULES.

Over 100 People Rejoicing at His Demise, Placed Under Arrest.

Odessa, Sept. 18.—Upwards of one hundred persons were arrested here yesterday for rejoicing over the death of Gen. Trepoff in too public a manner.

The funeral of the late Gen. Dmitri Trepoff will take place Wednesday morning. In accordance with the desires of the deceased, the ceremony will be conducted in the most simple manner, consistent with official usage. The body will be interred in the chapel attached to the palace at Peterhof.

The appointment of Gen. Dedioulin to succeed Gen. Trepoff has been made permanent as "acting commandant." He is too low in the official hierarchy to receive the full title.

Bullets For the Judge.

Warsaw, Russian Poland, Sept. 18.—Gen. Doroshevsky, president of the court-martial which, on Sept. 15, condemned two revolutionists to death by hanging, was shot at and wounded in the thigh while driving here yesterday.

Operation on Witte.

Berlin, Sept. 18.—A despatch to The Lokel Anzeiger from Hamburg, says that Count Witte, ex-Premier of Russia, was operated upon Sunday for the fifth time by Prof. Spiess for polypi of the nose.

SIR EDWARD CHICHESTER DEAD.

British Admiral Who Stood by Dewey In Manila Bay.

Gibraltar, Sept. 18.—Rear Admiral Sir Edward Chichester, who commanded the British squadron at Manila during the Spanish-American war, died here yesterday of pneumonia, after an illness of a few days.

Rear Admiral Chichester was chief of the sea transport service during the South African war. His work in transporting a quarter of a million men 5,000 miles to South Africa won him great praise.

It was Sir Edward Chichester who, according to report, "stood by" the Americans in Manila Bay at a time when friction between Admiral Dewey and the German commander seemed likely to lead to serious consequences.

One account of the affair, printed in a London paper, said that "when the American and German fleets were grinning defiance at each other in parallel lines, their decks cleared for action, Capt. Chichester stolidly steered the British squadron between them, giving, indeed, an exhibition of calmness, tact and nautical good humor that probably saved a battle which would have resulted in disaster to the peace of the world."

FENCE IN HOTELS.

Keepers Object to Prosecution by the Provincial Inspector.

Tara, Sept. 18.—Last week Provincial Inspector Ayearst for local option municipalities, arrived in Tara and searched two hotels, securing liquor to the value of about $70.

In the Police Court Friday, both hotelkeepers pleaded guilty and were fined $50 and costs and the liquor was destroyed.

On Saturday the hotelmen fenced in their property and will not accommodate the traveling public in anyway. The temperance people intend to take care of travelers until such times as the hotelkeepers are ready to open their houses.

WORK SUSPENDED.

Strike In Winnipeg Ties Up a Million Dollars In Buildings.

The building inspector states that $1,000,000 in city buildings is tied up.

A union committee was formed to wait on the city council and the Legislature later on if necessary to try and induce master plumbers to arbitrate.

Almost Killed by Dog.

Hamilton, Sept. 18.—Mrs. P. W. Burrows, 501 East Cannon street, was almost worried to death Sunday by a big St. Bernard dog. The brute thought Mrs. Burrows was going to attack his mistress, Mrs. Williams, and sprang on Mrs. Burrows, knocking her down and tearing her arm, breast and hand. The owner, Peter Williams, labored the dog over the head with a big shovel, but it paid no attention to him. Mrs. Burrows is in a serious condition, but Dr. Wickett has some hope of saving her life. It was thought at first that her arm would have to be amputated, but the doctor says he will be able to save the limb. The dog was shot.

Deckhand's Foot Cut Off.

Hamilton, Sept. 18.—Yesterday morning Thomas Frawley, a deck hand on the Macassa was the victim of a peculiar accident. As the boat was tying up at the beach pier, he got his foot caught in the rope and his foot was cut off at the ankle, dropping on to the deck. He was taken to the city hospital where the leg was amputated.

A 'Quake at Sea.

San Francisco, Sept. 18.—The lumber laden ship Robert Searles has arrived from Tacoma and northern ports, Capt. Piltz, in command, says a severe disturbance of the water was felt on the morning of Sept. 14. The cargo and upper works of the vessel were shaken. The length of the shock was 22 minutes.

Running In Two Months.

Winnipeg, Sept. 18.—A contract for building a line from the land selected for the G. T. P. shops, four miles east of St. Boniface, was awarded yesterday, and within eight weeks G. T. P. engines will be running into Winnipeg.

Publisher Aiken Hurt.

Saskatoon, Sask., Sept. 18.—J. A. Aiken, publisher of The Phoenix, is slowly recovering from a fall by which he fractured a rib. He has been able to get down to the office for the past two days, after a retirement of ten days.

Steamer Sinks In Pigeon Bay.

Detroit, Sept. 18.—By hitting an obstruction off Point Pelee, in Lake Erie, in Canadian waters Sunday, the steamer Charles B. Packard, upbound, coal laden, drove a hole in her bottom and sank in Pigeon Bay.

To the Top of the Jungfrau.

The success of the Alpine railways, notably of those around Interlaken, encouraged Mr. Guyer-Zeller, an engineer of Zurich, to venture a railway to the top of Jungfrau. He obtained the concessions from the Swiss federal council, and, being a man of wealth and enterprise, he set to work at once, notwithstanding apparently insurmountable difficulties. To-day the first half of the work is completed, and thousands of tourists visit the famous glaciers of the Eiger and the sea of ice on the other side of the Jungfrau range as an afternoon excursion, sipping their 5 o'clock tea in the subterranean station of the Eiger pyramid, 10,500 feet above the sea.—Century.

Coal Enough For 700 Years.

The coal fields of eastern Shansi, which are soon to be accessible through the railways of the Pekin syndicate, says Fuel, contain, it is estimated, some 600,000,000,000 tons of coal, or enough for the world's supply for 700 years, while in western Shansi there is a larger field of bituminous coal; also there are enormous deposits in Honan and in Kansu. These figures, a mining engineer thinks, show the absurdity of a recent statement in the Nation that the available coal deposits of the world have a life of only 300 years, and most people, we imagine, will be inclined to agree with him.

THE INSURANCE INQUIRY.

Dr. Oronhyatekha Throws Further Light On Fraternal Insurance.

Toronto, Sept. 19.—The examination of Dr. Oronhyatekha, the chief of the Independent Order of Foresters, was resumed yesterday before the insurance commission.

Mr. Shepley, Dominion examiner, led the witness through the various acts of incorporation and the establishment of the order in foreign countries. The powers of the witness and the patriotism of the membership, as described, were features of the examination.

He submitted comparative statements showing cost of business done by four "giant" insurance companies in the United States and the I.O.F. and also a comparison between a leading insurance company in Canada and the I.O.F. on the same basis.

In reply to a question as to the probable effect upon the membership should the order be compelled to make extra assessments because of the disappearing surplus, Dr. Oronhyatekha replied that such an event was so improbable that it was useless contemplating it.

Mr. Shepley asked if disaster were to come in the form of the order being declared illegal and it had to be dissolved, what would be the condition? Would the I.O.F. be able to re-insure in a solvent company with the funds on hand?

"I fancy not," was the answer.

The examination will be resumed at 10 o'clock yesterday.

Innumerable Cities Destroyed With Enormous Loss of Life.

C.P.R. Steamer Monteagle Driven on Shore, But Empress of Japan is Saved by Dock Tugs—Many British, French, American and German Vessels Come to Grief—Storm Lasted For Two Hours.

Hong Kong, Sept. 19.—A terrific storm broke suddenly here yesterday afternoon, lasting two hours and destroying innumerable native cities and causing much loss of life. The harbor is literally strewn with wreckage, and the streets of the city are blocked with debris.

An unknown steamer collided with the British steamer Strathmore, seriously damaging the latter.

C. P. R. Monteagle Driven Ashore.

The C. P. R. steamer Monteagle, the German Signal, the German steamer Emma Luyken, the British steamer Chang Sha, the German steamer Sexta, the Kowloon ferryboat and a waterboat were driven ashore.

A Japanese steamer is stranded on Kellet's Island. The British river gunboat Moorhen is leaking badly, one French torpedo boat destroyer is ashore, and two others dragged their anchors the entire length of the harbor.

Tugs Save Empress of Japan.

The American ship S. P. Hitchcock was driven high and dry on shore.

The French steamer Chas. Hardouin was damaged. The little Chinese steamer Wing Chai was beached.

Numerous steam launches and lighters foundered, and most of the wooden piers on the waterfront were demolished.

Twenty Frenchmen Killed.

The military quarters and temporary buildings were demolished and the men are quartered in the casemate of the fort.

Nineteen deep sea junks were washed on Stone Cutters' Island.

A tramp vessel collided with the French torpedo boat destroyer Fronde, and it is reported twenty Frenchmen were killed. The French torpedo boat destroyer Francisque is ashore, the steamer Apenrade is badly stranded on Stone Cutters' Island, and the British steamer Radnorshire is damaged.

SCHOONER STRIKES REEF.

Crew of the May Queen Had Barely Time to Save Their Lives.

Sydney, N. S., Sept. 19.—A telegram from Port Aux Basque states that the schooner May Queen, owned and commanded by Capt. John Gillian of Channel, Newfoundland, had, during a heavy sea, struck at high tide on a submerged reef known as "Sunker" at the Isle of Mort, about four miles east of Port Aux Basque.

Nine minutes after she was lying under thirty fathoms of water.

The crew had no time to save any of their personal effects, and the greatest difficulty in saving their own lives.

Four Cling to Vessel's Spars.

Charleston, S.C., Sept. 19.—The Clyde liner New York yesterday brought into port the mate and three seamen of the American schooner R. D. Bibber, Capt. Sayers, lumber-laden, from Savannah to New York, wrecked off the Fryingpan shoals. The vessel turned turtle and went to pieces. The men were found clinging to the spars. The captain and others of the crew were not found. The normal crew of the schooner was eleven.

Many Schooners Wrecked.

St. John's, Nfld., Sept. 19.—Besides eleven schooners wrecked at Belle-Isle recently by storms, seven others, with over 100 souls on board, were driven ashore on the Labrador coast. Four fatalities only are reported thus far. It is feared worse disasters occurred on the northern part of the coast, word from which is yet to be received. Over 250 castaways are now awaiting the arrival of a Government steamer to convey them home. This is the worst disaster since 1886, when 868 fisherfolk were made destitute by a single storm.

Passengers Stranded.

Honolulu, Sept. 19.—As a result of the stranding of the Pacific Mail Liner Manchuria and the transport Sheridan, both on their way to the Orient, and now followed by the Mongolia striking a reef near Midway Island, all within less than a month, there is much congestion of passengers here and the long interruptions of mails is causing great inconvenience.

Schooner Melrose Strands.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Sept. 19.—The Canadian schooner Melrose, bound down, in tow of the steamer Fairmount, took a sheer and stranded at the entrance to the Canadian channel. The vessel is leaking. It is loaded with wheat and will have to be lightered.

Leaves $10,000 to Students.

Toronto, Sept. 19.—A bequest of $10,000 to the University of Toronto, the interest therefrom to be utilized from time to time in assisting progressive Canadians in scientific research, is contained in the will of Aeneas McCharles of Sudbury, who died in Montreal last August. Mr. McCharles was one of the first to become interested in the Sudbury nickel mines.

Steals Employer's Goods.

Halifax, N. S., Sept. 19.—Ralph Smith, a porter in the employ of W. and C. Silver, wholesale and retail drygoods, was behind prison bars last night charged with stealing from the firm goods to the value of $3,000. The thefts have extended over a period of one year. Nathan Hubley, a storekeeper at St. Margaret's Bay, was arrested as the receiver of the stolen goods.

Blames Wabash Employes.

St. Thomas, Sept. 19.—The coroner's jury enquiring into the causes leading to the death of John McKay, C. P. R. engineer, killed in a collision with a Wabash train, find that the Wabash employes did not observe the rules of the company in not bringing their train to a stop at the distant semaphore, and that the Wabash Railway officials have been neglecting to enforce the said rules at the diamond crossing.

In Interests of Labor.

Ottawa, Sept. 19—W. L. Mackenzie King, Deputy Minister of Labor, who goes to the old country to make endeavor in the interests of Canadian labor to get legislation introduced in the British Parliament, enabling penalties to be inflicted on emigration agents who induce mechanics and others to come to Canada by false represenations, sails on Friday by the Empress of Britain.

Why Protection Pays.

In 1904 the exports from Great Britain to Germany were valued at £48,080,000; those of Germany to Great Britain at £49,750,000. From a free trade point of view, says the Montreal Gazette, this situation is regarded as satisfactory, a fair exchange being no robbery and trade being encouraged by the exchange between the two countries. Unfortunately the exchange was not a fair one. Germany was the great gainer. An analysis of the business done made by a correspondent of the London Times clearly demonstrates this, and at the same time illustrates the great value of protection. He divides the exports into classes. In the first class are included raw materials, those shipped from Great Britain to Germany including coal, yarn, hides and skins, India rubber, wool, tin and copper. Of the same class Germany sent Great Britain hides and skins, zinc ingots, woollen yarn, etc. The second class consisted of partially manufactured goods, or goods containing more labor than those of the first class. In this class Great Britain is credited with cotton web, iron ingots and woollen cloths and stuffs while Germany has half silk stuffs woollen stuffs, iron ingots, cotton web, and angle iron. In the third class are placed the higher grades of manufactured articles, those on which the expenditure for labor is large in proportion to the cost of production, such as machinery, made up fabrics, hosiery, hardware, etc., and in the final group are enumerated the products of agriculture and fishing. Finally there are sundries. Thus divided the trade of the two countries with one another appears as follows;

Class	English exports.	German exports
Raw materials..	£34,000,000	£2,100,000
Partially manufactured	1,390,000	5,720,000
Manufactured ...	980,000	12,810,000
Agriculture and fishing	1,115,000	7,930,000
Sundries	10,500,000	21,190,500

These figures show that while the trade of Germany and Great Britain with one another is, so far as value is concerned, practically even, that as a matter of fact, Germany is getting much the better of the deal. Imports of raw materials mean work to be done. Great Britain sells Germany £34,000,000 worth and buys from Germany only £2,000,000. Exports of partially manufactured materials mean some work done, and more to be done. Great Britain sells Germany a million and a half and buys from her nearly £6,000,000. Manufactured articles when exported mean that a country is paying a portion of its indebtedness in the cheapest form in which it can pay it, with the work of its inhabitants. The work put into the manufactures is clear profit if, without the experts, the men who performed it would have remained idle. Thus summarized it will be seen that Germany is buying raw materials, i.e., work to be done, from Great Britain, and paying for them with manufactured goods, that is with work which has been done. This is, of course, a very good thing for Germany. It is the attainment of the ideal in protection. It is a good thing for the German workingman. When he is not busy working for the foreigner, he swaps his labor for the raw material which is to supply him with more employment. It is not so good for the British workingman. He is sometimes idle because, through the kindness of the principle of free trade his home consumer has been able to save sixpence on a lot of goods in which there were many shillings of employment value for him had he had a chance of making them.

It on a shilling's worth of goods the British consumer saves a penny and the British workman loses sixpence worth of employment how much is the British nation ahead? If on the same shilling's worth of goods the German manufacturer fails to make a penny of his usual profit, but the German workingman gets a sixpence worth of work which he would not otherwise have had, how much is the German nation ahead?

The backbone of the present summer does surely seem to be unusually tough.

Belleville amusement-lovers will have mirth, music and tragedy all in one week, which, as the young man in the outspoken vest would say, is going a few.

"Citizen" writes complaining bitterly of the administration of a certain civic utility. Our correspondent makes some serious charges, which he may be able to substantiate, and then again, he may not. "Citizen's" best plan would be to lay his case before the chairman of the committee which looks after the utility in question. We quite agree with him that all classes of our citizens should be treated alike.

They say things are so dry out in the country that many farmers have to drive their cattle miles to water.

The horrible thought strikes us that perhaps we'll get enough snow next winter to make up for the rain that failed to fall this summer!

It will soon be time to begin to talk elections. By the way, have you heard the latest conundrum: — "Why is Mayor Sulman like President Roosevelt? Because he sidesteps when a third term is spoken of.'

Another summer has about gone and still the Council has been unable to get that tar macadam walk built which has been talked about for oh. so many years. It's a pity the experiment couldn't be tried, for there are many places in outlying parts of the city where cheap but safe walks would be just the thing.

It is gratifying to note that a decided improvement has recently taken place in the appearance of that good Conservative paper, the Kingston News. Our esteemed contemporary seems to have fallen on better days. Congratulations.

Almost every other town and city in Canada just now is busy talking about Rugby football. Why is it Belleville has never sported a football team? Surely not because we have not enough kickers.

It is to be hoped that the following from the Kingston News, is a cap which does not fit the owners of boats which ply in this vicinity. The charge made is an exceedingly serious one;

"All over the inland waters of this country the practice of repainting and renewing old boats is going on. The object, in most cases, is to regain popular favor which may have been lost by an accident to the steamer, or its known old age. By the transformation an old decayed hull, impaired machinery and decks unfitted for the strain of a storm on the open lake, may pass for a new boat. Now, it does not need proof to convince any one that such boats are unsafe for either freight or passengers, and their owners should simply be ordered to break them up. Yet few such orders are given. The inspectors, are, we fear, lax in this respect. And vessels are permitted to do business that place in jeopardy all property and persons on them."

The following, from the Woodstock Express, is exceedingly timely and sensible. No doubt many will agree with it who would not begrudge a contribution to a deserving object, but the reasons advanced are unanswerable;

"The sight of hopelessly deformed cripples creeping along the sidewalk, begging, or selling pencils, is a painful one, and unnecessary as well. Unfortunates like this live at the public expense, and should be taken care of in institutions where they may be comfortable, and prevented from being nuisances. They should like it better than having to humiliate themselves by begging along the streets, and the public would be benefited by their absence from the streets. Since there are so many frauds who are able to simulate deformity, the pockets of the people would be protected as well as their feelings."

McKeown's DRUG STORE

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY."

That merry young person, "Kitty Benders," arrived at the Carman last night, and made her bow before a fairly good house in the laughing success which bears the name that heads this article. As a fun-maker, "The Arrival of Kitty" is a huge success. In fact, fun was the keynote of the performance. It was clever fun, too, not merely three acts of horseplay, as is usually the case with farce comedies. From the first curtain ring-up the audience was kept in laughter, which was almost hysterical as the situations got more and more complex.

The play centres around the love affair of Jane, a winsome young girl, cleverly portrayed by Miss Gladys Arnold. A gay, young college student is in love with Jane, but her uncle, Col. Bell, wants her to marry Benjamin Moore, a retired attorney-at-law. Col. Bell is himself in love with Kitty Bendero, a self in love with Kitty Benders, a vaudeville artist, and is very much ter, Aunt Jane, an old maid with a view to matrimony, and an entire willingness to accept anything in the shape of a man.

"Billy" Brown impersonates "Kitty," and from the minute of his arrival in that character there are humorous situations galore. To make matters worse, the real Kitty arrives on the scene, and, as the melodrama villain says, "the plot thickens." Col. Bell is almost frantic, and Benjamin Moore falls in love with the psuedo Kitty. Everything is happily cleared up eventually. Jane gets her college student, Col. Bell has Kitty, and Aunt Jane is relieved from her fears of "drifting into spinsterhood, unwooed, unloved, and unwed," by the attorney's promise to marry her.

All the characters were cleverly portrayed. The work of Hal. Johnston in the dual role of the college student and the imitation Kitty is worthy of special mention. Eveleen Dunmore, as the real Kitty, is a pretty, sprightly damsel, whose acting was deliciously clever.

There was plenty of music to add variety, although there was no variety needed. Miss Dunmore showed herself to be the possessor of a powerful soprano voice, which was displayed to good advantage in the song, "Cressema." The duet, "I Like Your Way," by Mr. Johnston and Miss Arnold, was a dainty little number that made a hit. The dancing by Mark Lane, as Col. Bell, and Miss Brandscombe, as Suzette, was very clever.

THE BLACK DIKE BAND TO-NIGHT.

The Black Dike Band, which comes to the Carman to-night, is the world's greatest brass band. It captured Toronto music-lovers by storm. Toronto papers have the following to say: Toronto Mail and Empire — "The band is well balanced and its tone excellent. Toronto Globe — "They were greeted by a multitude of several thousand, who became enthusiastic admirers on completion of their second number." Toronto News—"Thousands were delighted with the playing of the Black Dike Band." Toronto Star—"The Black Dike Band will stand comparison with any band that has ever appeared here."

JOHN GRIFFITH AS "KING RICHARD."

This most excellent tragedian, by many leading critics regarded as the best living interpreter of Shakespeare's strenuous characters, will appear here on Friday next, in a superb presentation of "King Richard," aided by a company and equipment that will fill all the demands of an intellectual audience. Mr. Griffith's success in other Shakespearean roles has been considerable, and will be welcomed by theatre-goers who patronize and appreciate the highest class of theatrical offerings.

AN OLD IDEA.

Shown to be Absolutely False by Modern Science.

People used to think that baldness was one of those things which are handed down from generation to generation, from father to son — just like a family heirloom.

Science has shown the falseness of this belief by proving that baldness itself is not a constitutional disease, but the result of a germ invasion of which only Herpicide can effectually rid the scalp.

Washing only cleans the scalp of Dandruff, it doesn't kill the germs. "Destroy the cause you remove the effect."

Newbro's Herpicide will do this in every case. It is also a delightful dressing.

SPLENDID ATTRACTION COMING.

There have been musical comedies and musical comedies, but none that have electrified the theatre-going public as has "The Gingerbread Man," the brand new fanciful fairyesque that Frederic Ranken and A. Baldwin Sloane are offering through its producers the Edward A. Braden Company. Creating an entirely new field in the realms of fancy these geniuses have struck the keynote of success at a time when the surfeit of musical comedy was beginning to pall upon the amusement loving adherents of the theatre. "The Gingerbread Man" appeals to the fancies of our youth and introduces scenes in Santa Claus Land, Pastry Land and Bun Land peopled with characters of our story book days. Real flesh and blood people of our infancy dance, sing and make merry to the singing melody of verse and brilliant humor. An all-star cast in the interpretation of the principal characters and a beauty chorus of 70, backed by a superb scenic investiture and wonderful electrical and mechanical effects form a continuous stage picture, whose beauty and brilliancy has never been equalled in a production of this kind. "The Gingerbread Man" will be at the Carman on Tuesday evening, Sept. 25, and no amusement-lover can afford to miss it.

Eye Strain

(Brain Strain)

By far the commonest cause of NERVOUSNESS.

The actual underlying cause of many ills, which the thousands of sufferers are vainly trying to relieve by drugs. Really the most dangerous evil that now exists, because it gives rise to brain irritation of so many different degrees. The most unsuspected, and therefore, neglected menace to the general health, because the very brain-strain enables the person to "see alright."

Very often completely changes the person's disposition, by the intense irritation of nerve-centers in the brain.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Maple Leafs, of this city, will play baseball with Picton, on local grounds, in the near future. The Park Nine, of this city, think they can trim the winners of the above match, and would like to try.

For several weeks past negotiations have been pending between Manager D. R. Cameron, of Queen's senior football team, and "Chaucer" Elliott, with the object of securing the services of the latter as coach for the college team this year. It is now learned from a most reliable source that the deal has been practically closed, and "Chaucer," who is playing ball at Oswego, has accepted the terms offered.

The New York Nationals did not draft any players at all from the minors. Three players have been purchased, Burke, outfielder, and Hannigan, infielder, from New Haven, and Mullen, the Baltimore second baseman. Then there is second baseman Shay, now playing in California, whom New York got from St. Louis in a deal. There is still a chance of Abbaticchio playing with New York next season. With these players, and those already on the team, it is likely that McGraw will stand pat for next year, though there may be a shift in certain positions to increase the batting strength.

Billy Nolan, Nelson's manager, has received a telegram from Tex Rickard, offering him the February date for Gans in the Goldfield roped arena for a $30,000 purse. Rickard says the pictures of the late fight are good, and show the complete fight. He says Nelson looked strong all the way. Nolan says his $10,000 deposit is for a side bet with Gans, calling the negro's proposition on similar lines. Nolan says he will not insist on any side bet.

Jude, the Indian outfielder of the Cincinnatis, uses his grey matter on the diamond, and came near turning a neat trick on Hallman, of the Pittsburgs, the other day. On a hit to right by the latter, Jude made a bluff as if the ball had gone past him. He started to run out, and Hallman chased down to second. Jude wheeled and threw, but Hallman's speed saved him from being nailed by the strategy.

A Thurlow Wedding:

On Wednesday evening, Sept. 12, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Hoard, Front of Thurlow, was the scene of a very pretty wedding, when their second daughter, Ethel May, was united in marriage to Mr. S. R. Probst, a popular young man, who holds a prominent position as foreman in a cabinet factory in Rochester, N.Y. He was formerly of Williamsport, Pa. At 7.30 the bridal party entered the drawing-room to the strains of the wedding march, played by Miss Pearl Scott, and took their places beneath a canopy of evergreens and flowers and wedding bells. Rev. Mr. Clarry, of Shannonville, performed the ceremony. The bride looked charming in a dress of white silk trimmed with valenciennes lace insertion and an embroidered front, and wore the traditional bridal veil, caught up with carnations and maiden hair fern, and carried a small bible, tied with streamers of white ribbon. The bridesmaid was Miss Clara Hoard, sister of the bride, gowned in white organdie. The happy groom was ably supported by his brother, Mr. Lester Probst, of Glen Haven, New York. After the ceremony was performed and congratulations given, the guests, upwards of forty, did justice to a sumptuous repast, prepared by the host and hostess. The bride and groom received many useful and beautiful presents, both here and in Rochester, which showed the high esteem in which they are held. The groom's present to the bridesmaid was a gold locket and chain, and to the groomsman a set of gold cuff links. The guests from a distance were Mr. T. Probst, of Seneca Falls, N.Y.; Mrs. Caister Tree, of Wheatland, N.D.; Mrs. Ed. Mitchell, of Hunter, N.D; Miss L. Hallstone, of Madoc; Mr. B. Lloyd, of Norwood; Mr. O. Lloyd, Harold, and Mr. Ross Hoard, of Anson, Ont. The bride and groom visited friends the remainder of the week in Belleville, Wallbridge, Foxboro and seventh line of Thurlow, and went on Sunday evening, on the steamer Caspian, to their future home in Rochester, N.Y.

Farmer Stones Auto.

Peterboro Examiner: The farmers who utilize the road, upon which the auto-bus travels, may break out in open rebellion against it any day. In fact they have a leader already in the field, who came very near taking the life of a chauffeur the other day.

Mr. Hanna was driving the auto towards Chemong Park, on Wednesday, when he noticed a vehicle coming towards him driven by a farmer. The latter was immediately filled with apprehension and indignation, and drove into a gateway to prevent the horse from being frightened at the big "demon."

When the auto arrived on the scene the farmer was stationed on the ground beside his property prepared for a vigorous defence. He grasped tightly several dangerous-looking "rocks," which immediately shot from his hand as the machine drew alongside.

One of the missiles of undue proportions, came perilously near the chauffeur's face, passing within a few inches of him. Mr. Hanna stopped the bus and went back to enquire the cause of the fusilade.

It was useless to debate the question with him, so the chauffeur was compelled to travel on towards his destination, wondering when and from where the next bombardment against him and his machine would greet him.

Must Pay for Sausages.

Munich, Bavaria, Sept. 18. — For three years Carl Huber was engaged to Fraulein Grete Christ. Not only did he give her jewelry, but he feasted her nearly every evening. But another young admirer came and, with hardly a word of explanation, Fraulein Grete broke her engagement with Huber. The discarded lover sought balm in the law. The German code does not recognize damages for breach of promise, but the jilted person can claim all presents. Huber put in a bill of particulars including not only rings, brooches, bracelets, stickpins, hatpins, and other things, but added several thousand glasses of beer and links of sausage.

Much to Fraulein Grete's chagrin her jilted lover won his case. She had to return a lot of assorted jewelry and give him $100 in cash to settle for the beer and sausages.

Scotland and Whisky.

"One of the grossest misconceptions from which Scotland suffers," says a writer, "is that her national drink is and always has been whisky. But this is just as untrue, neither more nor less, as that the national garb of Scotland is the kilt. Whisky, like the kilt, is a purely Celtic or highland product, and up to the middle of the eighteenth century it was just as unfamiliar in the lowlands as the clan tartans. It was only after the '45 that the highlanders began to settle in the lowlands and bring their whisky with them, but before that the national drink of the lowlanders had been ale. Tam-o'-Shanter and Souter Johnny got 'roarin' fou' not on whisky, but on strong beer."

HIRAM, KING OF TYRE.

Hiram, the Phoenician monarch, strove to imitate God by erecting four mighty pillars upon which he caused seven heavens—apartments—to be built. The first was constructed of glass, 500 by 500 yards, storing therein mock images of the sun, moon and stars. The second compartment of iron, 1,000 by 1,000 yards, was the receptacle of precious stones, causing a terrific noise resembling thunder when they crashed against each other and the casement of the inclosure. The third chamber was of lead, 1,500 by 1,500 yards. The fourth was of tin, 2,000 by 2,000 yards. The fifth was of copper, 2,500 by 2,500 yards. The sixth was of silver, 3,000 by 3,000 yards. The seventh was of gold, 3,500 by 3,500 yards, containing precious stones, pearls and a magnificent throne. A channel of water separated the apartments.

Hiram, imitating the royal splendor of the court of King Solomon, surrounded himself by the grandest conceivable display of magnificence. In the seventh apartment was stationed a golden bed, the corners of which were set in pearls without value in all the world, sparkling forth beautiful flashes resembling lightning, which spread wonder and terror among his subjects.

The prophet Ezekiel was ordered to appear before Hiram, who, at a loss as to how to reach the seven heavens wherein the monarch presided, was transported into his castle by the locks of his hair. Upon perceiving the divine messenger Hiram trembled. "Who art thou?" thundered the indignant harbinger of future events. "Why dost thou boast? Art thou not born of woman's womb?"

"I am," replied Hiram, "but I live forever. Like God dwelling over waters, dwell I. Like him reigning over seven heavens, I rule in seven apartments. As God is surrounded by lightning and thunder, so am I. God has stars in heaven; so have I. Many sovereigns have succumbed to mortality, and I still exist. Twenty-one kings of the house of Israel and David, twenty prophets and ten high priests have departed this earth, but I outlive them all."

"Why dost thou boast?" again demanded Ezekiel.

"Because thou didst supply the cedars for Solomon's temple? This puts me in mind of a subject who prepared a splendid garment for his sovereign, and as often as the servant gazed at the glorious piece of work he boastingly remarked, 'This is my manufacture,' until the king, observing his vanity, tore it off in disgust. Such will be thy lot. The temple which thou helpest to build will be destroyed. What will then become of thy pride?"

Where They Have Time to Be Polite.

Copenhagen, Denmark, is a city of canals and cleanliness—a land of pure delight, free from beggars, organ grinders and stray dogs. The inhabitants thereof are born courteous and seem never to have recovered from the habit.

When a passenger boards a car in Copenhagen he exchanges greetings with the conductor. A gentleman on leaving the car usually lifts his hat in acknowledgment of a salute from that official. When a fare is paid the conductor drops it into his cash box, thanks the passenger and gives him a little paper receipt.

He offers change with a preliminary "Be so good," and the passenger accepts with thanks. If, in addition, transfers are required complimentary exchanges go on indefinitely. Yet there is always time enough in Copenhagen.—Caroline Domett in Four Track News.

The Fates.

Fable teaches that the fates were three goddesses, holding, one a spindle, another a distaff and the third a pair of shears. They spun the thread of human life, then cut it off, and men's destiny was either happy or unhappy according to the texture of the wool employed by these inexorable deities. Might it not be said that here below we play more or less the part of the fates? It is we who, in some degree, mold our own destinies.

TIMELY TOPICS.

TO THIS SUMMER.

You've toasted us, you've roasted us,
You've done us to a turn;
Torridity, humidity,
You've really had to burn,
You've goaded us, you've loaded us
With terrors not a few,
And so we're mad, and very glad
To bid you now "Skidoo!"

You've record beat for torturing heat,
You've done the worst you can;
Your memory will matter be
For curse by beast and man.
You've done your best to be a pest,
No meaner could you be;
So in delight we shout with might,
"For you 'tis 23."

You're drawing near your limit, dear,
Your backbone's almost broke,
And life will be less misery
For sweltering human folk.
We will not mourn when you are gone,
Nor raise a doleful rhyme;
With fond intent, none will lament
This good old summer time.

"Gravedigging is not a gay business, but it is a very old one, and many curious superstitions surround it. One of these is never to buy a new spade. To dig a grave with a spade that is new is supposed to bring death in the family within a twelve month. Hence gravediggers buy their spades second hand as a rule. Another superstition with some is that a grave should never stand open overnight. It should not, they say, be dug till the day of the funeral. If it is made the day before, beware. There is a third superstition that if a cock crows once while a grave is being dug one friend of the digger will die; if it crows twice, two will die; if thrice, three."

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world—you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. See that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief Ass't G. P. A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. The best single steer on the market sold at $4.75, and several dealers were after him. The best on the market sold at $4 to $4.35; medium at $3.50 to $3.75; common $3 to $3.25; cows at $2.50 to $3.60; bulls $1.50 to $2.25.

Feeders and Stockers.

A few sales were made at unchanged quotations as follows: Best feeders, 900 to 1100 lbs. at $3.60 to $4; best feeders, 800 to 900 lbs. at $3.40 to $3.65; best stockers, 600 to 800 lbs, at $3.25 to $3.50; medium stockers, 600 to 900 lbs, at $2.75 to $3.25; common stockers, 600 to 900 lbs, at $2.25 to $2.50.

Milch Cows.

About 40 milkers and springers sold at $30 to $55 each.

Veal Calves.

Prices steady at $3.50 to $6.50 per cwt., an extra choice new milch fed calf would bring $7 per cwt., if not too heavy.

Sheep and Lambs.

The same old story can again be repeated about cull lambs, and buck lambs. 95 per cent. of the lambs offered to-day being bucks. Prices for lambs of this class were easier. Lambs were quoted all the way from $6.50 to $5.86 per cwt.; sheep at $4 to $4.50 per cwt.; bucks at $3 to $3.50. Farmers were buying buck lambs to take back on the farm at $5.50 per cwt.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris got over 500 at unchanged quotations, selects $6.40 and light fats at $6.15 per cwt.

It's a "Hecla" Patent

And no other Furnace has it.

FUSED JOINTS are to be found only in Hecla Furnaces. In ordinary furnaces the joints between the steel and the cast iron parts are made with bolts and cement. Such joints are soon pulled apart by the unequal expansion and contraction.

In the Hecla this joint is made by fusing the two materials together at a white heat. This joint is everlasting and will never leak gas, dust or smoke.

"Hecla" Furnaces are the only ones with FUSED JOINTS—the only means of having a house free of dust, smoke and gas.

Send me a rough plan of your home, and I will send you an estimate of the cost of installing the proper "Hecla" Furnace. Also a copy of new catalogue of Hecla Furnaces. Write to-day "Clare's Furnace Builder," care of 37

STRICTURE AND KIDNEY DISEASE CURED.

"I had stricture for eleven years. It finally brought on Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. I had an uncomfortable shooting pain in the groin and feeling as though something was in the urethra. My back was weak and I could scarcely stoop over. Urine was full of sediment. Had a desire to urinate frequently. Family doctors, so-called specialists, patent medicines, electric belts, all failed. I was discouraged. I had spent hundreds of dollars in vain. Finally I consulted Drs. Kennedy & Kergan as the last resort. I had heard a great deal about them and concluded from the fact that they had been established over 25 years that they understood their business. I am delighted with the results. In one week I felt better and in a few weeks was entirely cured. Have gained sixteen pounds in weight."

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

soon. Give this new old man string enough and he'll hang himself neatly without my help."

"Like the last?"

"O, this one's worse than him. In fact, I'm beginning to be sorry I ever did get our last old man the push. He was all right so long as I didn't make my perquisites too big. But as for this one, I don't suppose he'll understand I've a right to perquisites at all."

"But," said Mrs. Horrocks "you're purser. What does he suppose you live on? He must know that the pay don't go far."

"Well, he didn't seem to know what a purser was, and when I tried to hint it to him, he just snapped out that he was captain of this blooming ship."

"And then?"

Mr. Horrocks shrugged his shoulders. "O, I agreed right away. May as well tickle a fool as tease him, my dear. He thinks because he's a splendid seaman—and he may be that, I'll admit—he's fit to skipper a western ocean passenger boat. He's a lot to learn yet, and I'm the man that's going to educate him."

Now the exasperating part of it was that not only did this process of "education" promptly begin, but Capt. Kettle knew it. Never before had he had anyone beneath him on board ship who had dared to dispute his imperial will and do it successfully. There was no holding this affable purser, no pinning him down to a specific offence. If he mapped out a plan of action and Capt. Kettle objected to it, he was all civility, and would give it up without argument: "Certainly, sir," he would say. "You're captain on his boat, as you say, and I'm purser, and I just know my place." And then afterward would invariably come a back thrust which Capt. Kettle could never parry.

There were three long tables in the saloon, headed by the captain, the purser and the doctor, and when the passengers come on board at Liverpool or New York, it was Mr. Horrocks who arranged their meal places. He had a nice discrimination, this purser, and from long habit could sum up a passenger's general conversational qualities at a glance. He knew also Capt. Kettle's tastes and limitations, and when that redoubtable mariner had been making things unpleasant he rewarded him with dinner companions for the next run who kept him in a state of subdued frenzy. It was quite an easy thing to do, and managed craftily, it was a species of torture impossible to resent.

In fact it may be owned at once that as a conversational head to a liner's tables, Capt. Kettle did not shine. The situation was new and strange to him. Until then he had fought his way about the seas in cargo tramps, with only here and there a stray passenger; and, at table, professional topics had made up the talk, or what was more common, glum, scowling silence had prevailed.

Here, on this steam hotel, he suddenly found himself looked up to as a head of society. His own real reminiscences of the sea he kept back; he felt them vastly impolite; he never dreamed that they might be interesting.

His power of extracting sweet music from the accordion he kept rigidly in the background. Accordions seemed out of place somehow with these finicking passengers. He felt that his one genteel taste was for poetry, but only once did he let it slip out. It was halfway across the Atlantic on a homeward trip, and conversation had lagged. The purser's and the doctor's tables were in a rattle, of cheerful talk. Kettle's was in a state of boredom. In desperation he brought out his sacred topic.

At once every ear within range started to listen; he saw that at once. But he mistook the motive. The men around him—they were mostly Americans—thought that the whole thing was an effort of humor. It never occurred to them that this vinegary-faced little sailor actually himself made the sentimental rhymes he quoted to them; and when it dawned upon them that this was no joke, and the man was speaking in sober, solemn earnest, the funniness of it swept over them like a wave. The table yelped with inextinguishable laughter.

Of a sudden Capt. Kettle realized that he was his passengers' butt, and set back in his chair as though he was getting ready for a spring.

In his first torrent of rage he could with gusto have shot the lot of them, but to begin with he was unarmed, and, in the second place, passengers are not crew; and moreover, after the first explosion, the laughter began to die away. One by one the diners looked at the grim, savage, little face glaring at them from the end of the table, and their mirth seemed to chill. The laughter ended, and an uncomfortable silence grew, and remained to the finish of the meal.

During the succeeding meals, moreover, up till the end of the voyage, that silence was very little encroached upon at the captain's end of the middle table. Anyone who ventured to speak had the benefit of Capt. Kettle's full gaze, and found it disconcerting. Even to passengers on a modern steam ferry, the captain is a person of some majesty, and this one had a look about him that did not invite further liberties.

That batch of passengers dispersed to the four corners of the earth from Queenstown and Liverpool, and the Armenia saw them no more; but news of the fracas somehow or another reached the headquarter's office, and a kindly hint was given to Capt. Kettle that such scenes would be better avoided for the future.

"I quite know that passengers are awkward cattle to deal with," said the partner who put it to him, "but you see, captain, we make our living by carrying them, and we can't afford to have our boats made unpopular. You should use more tact, my dear skipper. Tact; that's what you want. Stand 'em champagne out of your entertainment allowance, and they'll stand it back, and run up bigger bills with the wine steward. It all means profit captain, and those are the ways you must get it for us. We aren't asking you to drum round for cargo now. Your game is to make the boat cheery and comfortable for passengers, so that they'll spend a lot of money on board, and like it and come again and spend some more. Tumble?"

The captain of the Armenia heard, and intended to conform. But, admirer of his though I must conscientiously write myself, I cannot even hope that in time he would have shaken down fitly into the berth; for to tell the truth, I do not think a more unsuitable man to govern one of these modern steam hotels could be found on the seas of either hemisphere. However, as it happened, the concession was not demanded of him. His luck, that cruel, evil fortune, got up and hit him again, and his ship was cast away and he saw himself once more that painful thing, a shipmaster without employ. More cruel still, he found himself at the same time in intimate touch with a great temptation.

The fatal voyage was from New York home, and it was in the cold, raw spring time, when passenger lists are thin. The day before sailing a letter addressed "Captain Kettle, SS. Armenia," made its appearance on the charthouse table. How it got there no one seemed to know, but with the crowd of stevedores and others working cargo, it would have been very easy for a messenger from the wharf to slip it on board unobserved. The letter was typewritten, and carried the address of an obscure saloon in the Bowery. It said.

"There is a matter of $50,000 (£10,000) waiting for you to earn with a little pluck and exertion. You can either take the game or leave it, but if you conclude to hear more, come here and ask the barman for a five-dollar cocktail and he will show you right inside. If you are frightened don't come. We got no use for frightened men, we can easy find a man with more sand in him somewhere else."

The little sailor considered over this precious document for the full of an hour. "Some smuggling lay," was his first conclusion, but the sum of money appeared too big for this; then he was half minded to put down the whole thing as a joke; then as a lure to rob him. The final paragraph and the address given, which was in the worst part of New York city, seemed to point shrewdly to this last. And I believe the prospect of a scrimmage was really the thing that in the end sent him off. But any way, that evening he went, and after some difficulty found the ruffianly drinking shop to which he had been directed.

He went inside and looked enquiringly across the bar.

The shirt-sleeved barman shifted his cigar. "Well, mister, what can I set up for you?"

"You're a bit proud of your $5 cocktails here, aren't you?"

The man lowered his voice. "Say, are you Capt. Cuttle?"

"Kettle, confound you!"

"Same thing, I guess. Walk right through that door yonder and up the stair."

Capt. Kettle patted a jacket pocket that bulged with the outline of a revolver. "If anyone thinks they are going to play larks on me here, I pity 'em."

The barman shrugged his shoulders. "Don't blame you for coming 'heeled,' boss. Guess a gun sometimes chips in handy round here. But I think the gents upstairs mean square biz."

"Well," said Kettle. "I'm going to see," and opened the door and stumped briskly up the stairway.

He stepped into a room, barely furnished, and lit by one grimy window. There was no one to receive him, so he drummed the table to make his presence known.

Promptly a voice said to him, "Howdy, captain? Will ye mind shuttin' the door?"

Now Kettle was not a man given to starting, but he started then. The place was in the worst slum in New York. Except for a flimsy table and two battered chairs the room was stark empty and this voice seemed to come from close beside him. Instinctively his fingers gripped on the weapon in his jacket pocket.

He slewed sharply round to make sure he was alone, and even kicked his foot under the table to see that there was no jugglery about that, and then the voice spoke to him again, with Irish brogue and Yankee idiom quaintly intermingled.

"Sure captain, I have to ask your pardon for keeping a brick wall right here between us. But I've me health to consider, an' I reckon our biz will be safest done this way."

The little sailor's grim face relaxed into a smile. His eye had caught the end of a funnel which lay flush with the wall.

"Ho!" he said. "That's your game, is it? A speaking tube. Then I suppose you've got something to say you're ashamed of."

"Faith I'm proud of it. A pathriot is never ashamed of his cause."

"Get to business," said Kettle. "My time's short and this waiting room of your's is not over savory."

"It's just a little removal we wish you to undertake for us, Captain. You have gotten a Mr. Grimshaw on your passenger list for this run to Liverpool."

"Have I?"

"It's so. He's one of the big bosses of your British Government."

"Well, supposing I have."

"He's been out here as a sort of commission, and he's found out more than is good for him. He sails by the Armenia to-morrow, and if you can—well—so contrive that he doesn't land at the other side it means that you are set up for life."

Capt. Kettle's face stiffened, and he was about to break out with something sharp. But he restrained himself, and asked instead:

"What's the figure?"

"$50,000— say ten thousand of your English sovereigns."

"And how do I know that I should get paid?"

The answer was somewhat astounding.

"You can pocket the money here, right now," said the voice.

"And once I got paid what hold would you have on me? How do you know I'd shove this Grimshaw over the side? That I suppose is what you want."

The voice chuckled. "We've agents everywhere, Captain. We'd have you removed pretty sharp if you tried to fool us."

"O, would you," snapped Kettle, "I've bucked against some tolerably ugly toughs in my time and come out top side, and shouldn't mind tackling your crowd for the sheer sport of the thing. But look here, Mr. Paddy Fenian, you have got hold of the wrong man when you came to me. By James, yes, you skulking, cowardly swine! You face behind a wall! Come out here and talk. I won't lift my hands. I'll use my feet to you and kick your backbone through your hat. You'd dare to ask me to murder a man, would you?"

Captain Kettle's eloquence had an unlooked for effect. The voice from the speaking tube laughed.

The sailor went on afresh and spoke of the unseen one's ancestors on both sides of the house, his personal habits and probable future. He had acquired a goodly flow of this kind of vituperation during his professional career and had been obliged to keep it bottled up before the passengers on a liner. He felt a kind of gusto in letting his tongue run loose again, and had the proud consciousness of each of his phrases would cut like the lash of a whip.

But the unseen man apparently heard him unruffled. "Blow off steam, skipper," said he; don't mind me."

Kettle looked around the empty room dejectedly. "You thing!" he said. "I could make a man with more spirit than you out of putty."

"Of course you could, skipper," said the voice with the brogue; "of course you could. I don't really exist. I'm only a name as your beastly Saxon papers say when they abuse me. But I can hit, as they know, and I can draw checks, as you can find out if you choose. You can have your pay yet if you see fit to change your mind, and 'remove' spy Grimshaw between here and Liverpool. We've plenty of money and you may as well have it as any one else. It's got to be spent somehow."

"I'd give a lot to wring your neck," said Kettle. He tapped the wall to test its thickness.

"You tire me," said the voice. "Why can't you drop that? You can't get at me; and if you go outside and set on all the police in New York city, you'll do no good. The police on this side know on which side their bread's margarined. I'm the man with the check book, sonny, and you bet they're not the sample of fools that would go and try to snuff me out."

"This is no place for me," said Kettle. "It seems I can't lug you out of the drain where you live, and if I stay in touch of your breath any longer I shall be poisoned. I've told you who I consider your mother to be. Don't forget,"—And the little bearded sailor strode off down the stair again and into the street. He had no inclination to go to the police, having a pious horror of the law, and so he got a trolley car which took him down to the East river, and a ferry which carried him across to his ship.

The time was 2 a.m. and the glow of the arc lamps and the rattle of winch chains, and the roar of working cargo, went up far into the night. But noise made little difference to him, and even the episode he had just gone through was not sufficient to keep him awake.

The master of a western ocean ferry gets little enough of sleep when he is on the voyage, so on the night before sailing he stores up as much as he may.

As it chanced Mr. Grimshaw took steps to impress himself on Captain Kettle's notice at an early stage of the next day's proceedings. The ship was warping out of dock with the help of a walking beam tug, and a passenger attempted to pass the quartermaster at the foot of the upper bridge ladder. The sailor was stubborn, but the passenger was imperative, and at last pushed his way up, and was met by Kettle himself at the head of the ladder.

"Well, sir?" said that official.

"I've come to see you take your steamer out into New York bay, captain."

"O, have you," said Kettle. "Are you the Emperor of Germany, by any chance?"

"I am Mr. Robert Grimshaw."

"Same thing. Neither you nor he is captain here. I am. So I'll trouble you to get to Halifax out of this before you're put. Quartermaster, I'll log you for neglect of duty."

Grimshaw turned and went down the ladder with a flushed cheek. "Thank you, captain," he said over his shoulder. "I've got influence with your owners. I'll not neglect to use it."

It chanced also that Captain Kettle had been cutting down his purser's perquisites more ruthlessly than usual in New York, and that worthy man thirsted for revenge. He had taken Mr. Grimshaw's measure pretty accurately at first sight, and was tolerably sure that eight days of his conversation would irritate his skipper into a state approaching frenzy. So he portioned off the commissioner to the end right-hand chair at the captain's table, and promised himself pleasant revenge in overlooking the result.

Capt. Kettle worked the Armenia outside the bar and came down to dinner. Horrocks whispered in his ear as he came down the companion, "Mr. Grimshaw's the man on your right, sir. Had to give him to you. He's some sort of a big bug in the Government at home; been over in New York inquiring into the organization of those Patlander rebels."

Kettle nodded curtly and went on to his seat. The meal began and went on. Mr. Grimshaw made no allusion to the previous encounter. He had made up him mind to exact retaliation in full, and started at once to procure it. He had the reputation in London of being a "most superior person," and he possessed in a high degree the art of being courteously offensive. He was a clever man with his tongue, and never overstepped the bounds of suavity.

How the wretched Kettle sat through the meal he did not know. Under his polished attack he was impotent of defence. Not a chance was given him for retort. And all the thrusts went home. He retired from the dinner table with a moist prespiration on his face, and an earnest prayer that the Armenia would carry foul weather with her all the way up to Prince's landing stage, so that he might be forced to spend the next seven or eight days on the chilly eminence of the upper bridge.

And now we come to the story of how Capt. Owen Kettle's luck again buffeted him.

The Armenia was steaming along through the night, to the accompaniment of deep and dismal hootings from the syren. A fog spread over the Atlantic and the bridge telegraph pointed to "Half speed ahead" as the board of trade directs. The engine room, however, had private instructions, as usual, and kept up the normal speed.

On the forecastle head four lookout men peered solemnly into the fog and knew that for all the practical good they were doing they might just as well be in their bunks.

On the bridge, in glistening oilskins, Kettle and two mates stared before them into the thickness, but could not see as far as the foremast. And the Armenia surged along at her comfortable fourteen knots, with 500 people asleep beneath her deck. The landsman fancies that on these occasions steamships slow down or stop; the liner captain knows that if he once did so, he would have little chance of taking his ship across the Atlantic again. A day lost to one of these ocean ferries means in coal, and food, and wages, and so on, a matter of £1,000 or so out of the pockets of her owners, and this is a little sum they do not care to forfeit without strong reason. They expect their captain to drive the boats along as usual and make up for the added risk by increased watchfulness and precaution, and a keen noting of the thermometer for any sudden fall which should foretell the neighborhood of ice.

Now the Armenia was skirting the edge of the banks, on the recognized steam lane to the eastward, which differs from that leading west; and by all the laws of navigation there should have been nothing in the way. Nothing, that is, except fishing schooners, which do not matter, as they are the only sufferers if they haven't the sense to get out of the way.

But, suddenly through the fog ahead there loomed out a vast shape, and almost before the telegraph rung its message to the engine room, and certainly before steam could be shut off, the Armenia's bow was clashing into and clanging and ripping and bucking as though it had charged full tilt against a solid cliff.

The engines stopped and the awful tearing noises ceased save for a tinkling rattle as of a cascade of glass, and, "There goes my blooming ticket," said Kettle bitterly. "Who'd have thought of an iceberg as far south as here this time of year." But he was prompt to act on the emergency.

"Now, Mr. Mate, away forward with you, and get the carpenter, and go down and find out how big the damage is." The crew were crowding out on deck. "All hands to boat stations. See all clear for lowering away, and then hold on all. Now keep your heads men. There's no damage, and if there was damage, there's no hurry. Put a couple of hands at each of the companion-ways and keep all passengers below. We can't have them messing round here yet awhile."

The Armenia had slipped back from the berg by this time and lay still, with the fog dense all around her. "Now it's all up with the old Atrocity, purser; look how she's by the head already. Get your crew of stewards together and victual the boats. Keep 'em in hand well, or else we shall have a stampede and a lot of drowning. I'll have the boats in the water by the time you're ready, and then you must hand up the passengers, women first."

"Aye, aye, sir."

"Wait a minute. If any one won't do as he's bid, shoot. We must keep order."

The purser showed a pistol. "I put that in my pocket," said he "when I heard her hit. Good-by, skipper, I'm sorry I haven't been a better shipmate to you."

"Good-by, purser," said Kettle, "you aren't a bad sort."

Mr. Horrocks ran off below, and the chief officer came back with his report, which he whispered quietly in the shipmaster's ear. "It's fairly scratched the bottom off her. There's 60 feet gone, clean. Collision bulkhead's nowhere. There's half the Atlantic on board already."

"How long will she swim?"

"The carpenter said 20 minutes, but I doubt it."

"Well, away with you, Mr. Mate and stand by your boat. Take plenty of rockets and distress lights, and if the fog lifts we ought to get picked up by the Georgic before morning. She's close on our heels somewhere. If you miss her and get separated make for St. John's."

"Aye, aye, sir."

"So long, Mr. Mate. Good luck to you."

"Good-by, skipper. Get to the inquiry if you can. I'll swear till all is blue that it wasn't your fault, and you may save your ticket yet."

"All right, Matey, I see what you mean. But I'm not going to shoot myself this morning, I've got the missis and the kids to think about."

The mate ran off down the ladder, and Kettle had the upper bridge to himself. The decks of the steamer glowed with flares and blue lights. A continuous stream of rockets spouted from her superstructure far into the inky sky. The main foredeck was already flush with the water, and on the hurricane deck, aft, thrust up high into the air, frightened human being bustled about like the inhabitants of some disturbed anthill.

Pair by pair, the davit tackles screamed out, and the liner's boats kissed the water, rode there for a minute to their painters as they were loaded with the dense human freight, and then pushed off out of suction reach, and lay to. Dozen by dozen the passengers left the luxurious steam hotel and got into the frail, open craft which danced so dangerously in the clammy fog of that Atlantic night. Deeper the Armenia's fore part sank beneath the cold waters as her forward compartments swamped.

From far beneath him in the hull, Kettle could hear the hum of the bilge pumps as they fought the incoming sluices; and then at last those stopped, and a gush of steam burred from the twin funnels to tell that the engineers had been forced to blow off their boilers to save an explosion.

Nothing Relieved His Kidneys Until He Tried

Bu-Ju

MARKHAM, Ont., Dec. 1, 1903
"I had suffered for seven years with kidney trouble. Could scarcely walk and was unable to attend to my farm. Saw "Bu-Ju" advertised, and after taking the first few pills, felt much relieved. After taking half a box, was able to do a full day's work. I know one box of "Bu-Ju" saved me $40.00 doctor bills.
"JAMES ABBOTT."

It costs only 3c a day to take "Bu-Ju"—the kidney pill that never fails.

All druggists have "Bu-Ju" or will get them for you.

BLACKNESS.

"Chevreul's Black," Which Is Blacker Than Black Velvet.

A simple experiment is one on blackness. You know that no paint or any other substance in the world is perfectly black, but there is a way to make a figure appear so that it will look blacker even than black velvet.

Paint the inside of a pasteboard box black or cover it with dead black cloth. In the lid of the box make a hole, being careful not to make it larger than one-tenth of the surface of the lid. If now you hold the box so that the light will not strike the hole directly and look through the hole into the box the hole will appear intensely black.

THE BLACK BOX.

Make the hole in the form of a design or an imp or a brownie, and even if you paint the lid black, when you look through the hole you will see the figure darker than the dark background.

The black produced by this method is called "Chevreul's black," after the Frenchman who invented it.

BIRD CITIES.

Many Places That Have Feathered Inhabitants Only.

All along the coast of the Atlantic ocean are little cities inhabited by birds alone. Gardiners island, at the extremity of Long Island, is the place where the fish hawks come during their breeding time, and owing to the friendly attitude of the family on the island the ospreys have become very tame, and build their nests upon the ground instead of in the high trees.

In the Indian river, Florida, is a small island called Pelican island. It received its name through being one of the favorite settlements for the pelicans during their nesting season.

Away up in the mouth of the St. Lawrence river is the famous Bird rock, "the greatest bird tenement house in the world," as one naturalist expresses it. This rock rises abruptly from the water, and in its formidable clefts thousands of northern sea birds dwell—the snowy feathered gannets. On the crest of this rock rises a lighthouse, whose keeper is on the best of terms with his countless feathered neighbors.

These bird cities, or settlements, are under the protection of the American Ornithological union.

Apparent and Presumptive.

There is a good deal of misapprehension as to the difference in the meaning of the two terms heir apparent and heir presumptive, as used in royal families. The heir apparent must succeed to the throne or the dignity, whatever it may be, if he survive the present holder, while the heir presumptive, although he is the heir at the moment, may have his right to the succession nullified by the birth of another heir. In England, for instance, the Prince of Wales is always the heir apparent to the throne. Should there not be a prince of Wales—that is, should the reigning monarch not have any sons—the nearest heir in the legitimate succession becomes the heir presumptive, his or her right being always subject to nullification by the birth of a direct heir to the monarch.

An Amusing Experiment.

A simple kaleidoscope may be made by any boy or girl by taking a straight lamp chimney—an argand one is best —and painting the outside of it black. If you make a pinhole in a piece of paper and hold it at one end and look at it through the other it will appear as a number of circles of light. It is the cylindrical surface that reflects and causes this. If now you fasten two pieces of glass at one end of the chimney, placing between them beads and bright colored bits of glass so that they may move as you turn the chimney you will have as good a kaleidoscope as you would care to buy.

Generous.

A little three-year-old, whose mother was mixing a simple cough medicine for him, watched her curiously and asked if it was good. He was permitted to taste.

"Oh, mamma," he exclaimed, "it's awful good! Let's keep it all for papa."

The Persian Zoo.

Did you ever see a two headed cat
With five legs that are black and blue,
And horns like a cow, and elephant's ears
And neck like a mutton stew?

Did you ever see a mouse with wings,
Its tail like a kangaroo,
Its nose like a couple of scrambled eggs
I often have. Haven't you?

Just lie on the floor near a Persian rug
And the figures that stare at you
Are the strangest animals ever seen
Either in or out of the zoo.

(VISION)

Sight is an active function. Although we see apparently without effort, and without volition, yet every moment of vision is costing its adequate amount of vital energy. True, we cannot estimate just how much energy is utilized in looking for a given length of time at any particular object or scene, but we do know that many nervous persons are very much exhausted by the use of the eyes for a short time in an art gallery, where things of great interest are constantly attracting their attention; some are more exhausted by one hour of such effort with the eyes than they would be by ten hours of manual labor; consequently the same amount of vital force that would be required for ten hours of labor may be expended in one hour through the medium of the eyes.

We check this waste of energy by the correction of the visual defects with the proper glasses.

MILLINERY OPENING!

MISS M. CAMPBELL

Takes pleasure in announcing to the public, that her Millinery Opening takes place on Monday, Sept. 10th, and following days, to which all are cordially welcome.

This will be one of the finest Millinery displays ever shown by Miss Campbell, and all should take this opportunity of seeing this grand display.

MISS M. CAMPBELL.

"He who does not open his eyes must open his purse." This old German adage is a piquant admonition to read the store-ads. before going shopping."

The Ritchie Company's Opening.

To-day was the hundredth Opening at the Ritchie Co.'s large store. Fifty years ago this month, Mr. George Ritchie commenced business in Belleville, and every Spring and Fall since, a formal opening has been held for the special exhibition of new goods. The store is considerably larger to-day than at any previous fall opening, and a larger stock than ever before fills the various departments.

Mr. Reid returned a few weeks ago from an extended purchasing tour in England and on the Continent of Europe, and since then hundreds of cases of new goods have arrived and been checked off and put into stock.

To-day the entire store was ablaze with new Autumn and Winter goods Silks, Dress Goods, Laces, Braids, Gloves, Hosiery, Linens, Cottons, etc., filled the large main store almost to overflowing. There were many beautiful Furs on exhibition in the Fur Department, which is situated in the new extension in rear of the Mantle Rooms. We were shown some beautiful Alaska Seal and Persian Lamb Jackets and some very choice setts of muffs and stoles in genuine Russian Sable and Ermine, as well as the cheaper and more popular furs. One Russian Sable sett was priced $250.00.

There were also some very choice specimens of blue and black Lynx in setts of muffs and stoles. We were pleased to see such rich goods displayed in Belleville.

There were some lovely silk, velvet, and cloth coats shown, but the firm were greatly disappointed at the non-arrival of about 500 coats, that are between here and Quebec and should have been in stock some days ago. These are expected every day. The coat styles are long and loose, with many new features in sleeves, trimmings and shapes, and while black coats will be more popular than for years, tweeds, both light and dark, will have a big sale.

The Millinery Department, under the management of Miss Greene, never looked prettier, and she and her large staff were kept busy all day showing the new hats, and explaining the newest styles. The shapes are rather larger, and a number of Picture Hats and Gainsboroughs were seen, as well as a quantity of Toques and Turbans, although these are not considered quite as correct as before, but, being always becoming, they will be sure to have a good sale.

Wines, Plums, and indeed all the Red shades are very popular, and Browns promise to be much sought after again. Black and White in combination is popular, and various tints of Greens and Blues will be worn.

Ribbons are extensively used for trimmings, and are largely substituted for Maline and Chiffon for draperies and filling in the bandeaux. Buckles in odd colorings which harmonize with the hat are used, as is jet in all forms. Handsome Ostrich plumes are much used, as are also wings breasts, and quills of almost every variety.

There was a separate show of black hats suitable for mourning, and the styles for children are varied and pretty Miss Jewell, the head designer, is one of the best in Canada, and she and Miss Greene have every reason to feel proud of their exquisite display, which would do credit to a much larger city.

On the third floor the ladies were treated to a sight of the lovely new Rugs, Carpets, Curtains, etc., and the finest show we have ever seen of Eider Down Quilts.

One of the most important branches of the concern is the large store devoted to Men's and Boys' Clothing and Furnishings, in which a very large trade has been built up. From the very start the Clothing Department has "caught on" with the public, and a steadily increasing trade has been the result of their strictly business methods.

Again we wish The Ritchie Company success as they enter into another season's trade.

Boy and Cartridge.

MADE A BAD COMBINATION—ACCIDENT IN HIGH SCHOOL ROOM THIS MORNING.

There was considerable excitement in one of the High School rooms this morning, just before the opening of the school.

Master Howard Hunter, son of Mr. John Hunter, a G.T.R. employee, who resides on Foster avenue, was sitting at his desk, in Mr. H. J. Clarke's room. Some say he was studying, waiting for the bell, when something happened. Bang! There was a sudden explosion, and young Hunter was seen to be hurt. Masters and pupils hurried to him, and it was apparent that he had sustained a serious injury to his left hand.

It seems that, somewhere, perhaps on the road to school, the lad had picked up a metallic cartridge, of what kind is not yet known, and while at his desk started to play with it. Some of his school-fellows say he was rolling the cartridge round between his hands, when it suddenly exploded, with the result that the end of his left thumb and the end of the middle finger of his left hand were blown off, and the other fingers and part of his left hand badly lacerated.

When seen by The Intelligencer, Dr. MacColl said he looked, at present, for no serious results, but there was a possibility of danger from lockjaw. The Doctor understood, he said, that the boy had been picking at the cartridge, which was loaded with cordite. Cordite cartridges, he understood, exploded very easily sometimes.

Young Hunter is between 14 and 15 years of age.

Route of New C.P.R. Line

Brockville, Sept. 18.—The C. P. R. engineer, Mr. Ardagh, has visited Brockville in surveying for a new route from Montreal to Toronto. After looking over the ground here he decided that it would be impossible to get in on the south side of the Grand Trunk without tunnelling, which would be impracticable. The proposed line will run from Prescott to Brockville on the north side of the G.T.R., but just west of here it will cross to the south, running along south of Mallorytown and Lansdowne touching Gananoque that is now 3 miles from the G.T.R., and also getting inside the G.T.R. at Kingston.

York Loan Land Sold.

Toronto, Sept. 19.—A block of land belonging to the estate of the York County Loan and Savings Company, on Sorauren Ave., has been sold by the National Trust Company. The land comprises four and a half acres, and is situated just below Dundas street and immediately adjoining the York Loan piano factory. The price paid for it is $17,100 cash.

CLARKE-PHILLIPS NUPTIALS TO-DAY.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING AT THE RESIDENCE OF MR. NORMAN PHILLIPS THIS AFTERNOON.

A very pretty home wedding took place at 3.30 this afternoon at the residence of Mr. Norman Phillips, Charles street, when his second daughter, Miss Clara J., was united in marriage to Dr. Mason J. Clarke, of this city. The drawing-room, where the ceremony took place, was beautifully decorated with palms and asters. Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, Rector of St. Thomas Church, was the officiating minister. The bride, who was given away by her father, was attired in a gown of cream ecru lace, over taffeta. She also wore the traditional bridal veil and carried a bouquet of white roses. Her sister, Miss Annie Phillips, was bridesmaid, her gown being of pale blue organdie and her bouquet red roses. Little Misses Marion Clarke, of this city, and Helen Fraser, of Montreal, were flower girls. They were dressed in white and carried baskets of flowers. Mr. Russel Clarke, of Edmonton, a brother of the groom, was best man. Mrs. Phillips, mother of the bride, wore a dress of black silk voile. The wedding march was played by Miss Ruby Milburn, and at the conclusion of the ceremony Miss Edna Bird sang "Bid Me to Love," by Bingham, the violin obligato being rendered by Mr. Arthur J. Bird. The guests were afterwards entertained in a handsome manner. The gifts to the bride were numerous and were both costly and beautiful. Dr. and Mrs. Clarke will leave on the evening train for a trip to New York, and upon their return will take up their residence on Chatham street. The bride's going away gown is of navy blue cloth, with hat to match.

Belleville Boy In the North.

A steamer of the Hudson Bay Co., with 26 passengers on board, arrived at Edmonton on Friday last, having on board a large consignment of furs. Amongst the passengers was Constable Phillips, of the Northwest Mounted Police, a son of Mr. Norman Phillips, of this city. He with other members of a party has been stationed for the past three years at Fort Macpherson, 2,000 miles north of Edmonton, and having fulfilled their term of service at that point have come south for a change and rest.

Kingston Presbytery.

A session of the Kingston Presbytery was held here yesterday afternoon, in the John St. Presbyterian Church. Rev. Mr. Binnie, of Tweed, Moderator, presided, and a number of clergymen and laymen were in attendance. There was nothing of especial interest in the session, the business transacted being purely of a routine character.

Death of a Child.

Dorothy E. Chown, aged two years and three months, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. A. Chown, died at an early hour this morning. The little one was taken ill yesterday with convulsions, and passed away after a few hours' illness. Mr. and Mrs. Chown will receive the sincere sympathy of many friends in the affliction which they have been called upon to bear.

RATES ARE EXCESSIVE

Cost of Sending Freight Retards Growth of Dominion.

St. John Member of C. M. A. Urges Steps to Keep Them Within Reasonable Bounds—Steamship Route From Eastern Port For New Zealand Consignments Advocated — Neglect of Technical Education in Canada.

Winnipeg, Sept. 19.—The manufacturers' convention devoted yesterday to reports of committees. Only two reports were received in the afternoon, that of railways and transportation and intelligence committees.

A. Saunders of Goderich moved the adoption of the intelligence committee report, which was unanimously carried. He referred to the fact that the Canadian manufacturers had not availed themselves of the opportunity offered them for export trade, and advised them to devote more attention to this branch in the future.

Hugh Blain presented the railway and transportation committee report.

Freight Rates Excessive.

A lengthy discussion took place in connection with the resolution regarding a New Zealand steamship service. J. O. Thorne and W. H. Henderson opposed the resolution advocating the shipping of goods across the continent. They claimed that freight was shipped cheaper from the head of the great lakes eastbound via the New York route than by rail west. They said the New York route was at present imperative, and advocated, instead of shipping by rail to Vancouver and hence to New Zealand, the establishment of a steamship line from an eastern point.

J. Prender of St. John addressed the meeting regarding freight rates. He said rates were generally excessive in the Dominion. He emphasized the retarding influence these rates would have in the growth of the country unless steps were taken immediately to keep them within reasonable bounds.

Technical Education.

The proceedings in the morning were of general interest, chiefly, perhaps, on account of outspoken opinion of some of the delegates on the neglect of technical education in the public schools, and also in more advanced educational institutions. Much regret was expressed that foreign correspondence schools should draw from young Canadians fees which run into the hundreds of thousands annually for technical instruction, which is often of doubtful value. The speakers were of the opinion that what was taught in the United States was capable of being taught in Canada. Under present conditions the country not only lost a large sum in fees, but, because of an inefficient system of education, its industrial growth was seriously retarded.

The secretary and treasurer's report were received, also the committee on insurance report, on technical education, on Industrial Canada, reception, and membership. The remainder of reports will come up to-day.

Last night a big society reception was given the visitors at government house.

THE ODDFELLOWS.

Judge Nolan of Nashville Elected Deputy Grand Sire—Night Thieves.

Toronto, Sept. 19.—The Sovereign Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., met in the Parliament Building with Grand Sire Wright in the chair, and proceeded immediately with the election of officers for the term of two years. Deputy Grand Sire Conway was unanimously elected grand sire. For deputy grand sire was chosen Judge John L. Nolan of Nashville, Tenn.; the present grand secretary, John B. Goodwin, P. G. S., of Georgie was relected Grand Treasurer Richard Muckle, who has served in the same position for many years, was tendered a unanimous re-election by a rising vote.

Thieves Busy.

In the silent watches of Monday night, while cantons from Indiana and Erie, Pa., slumbered in the woman's building, some person or persons unknown made stealthy entry and stole the watches and money of sleeping Oddfellows. Those who suffered by the depredations included Major Lumbine of Erie, Pa., who lost a $125 gold watch, and $45 cash; Chevalier Allen of Erie, Pa., $15, and Chevalier Holden, also of Erie, who lost $17 and a return railway ticket. Other smaller amounts were abstracted, and a number of valuable jewels belonging to the Indiana Cantons, were taken.

CHARRED BONES IN RUINS.

Remains of Miss Loveday and Miss O'Neill Discovered—Fourth Gilmour Fire Victim Dies.

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—One more name has been added to the death roll of the Gilmour Hotel fire, Harry T. Walker of Mallakahill, N.J., died at 10 o'clock last night as the result of his injuries. Mr. Walker was asleep in bed when the fire broke out and had to jump from the fourth storey to the one storey roof of a building attached to the hotel. He had both legs broken, was burned severely about the arms and injured internally.

This brings the list of known fatalities up to four.

All day the work of searching for the remains of the victims has proceeded, but up till late last night only two had been discovered. It is practically impossible to identify the few charred bones the searchers discovered, but they are believed to be those of Miss Loveday of the Barnardo Home, Peterboro, and Miss O'Neill, the head waitress.

Mrs. Pentecost is still in a very low condition. At the hospital she is reported as having "passed a good day."

A letter of enquiry from A. E. Maynard of Galt, concerning Miss Alice King an English girl, gave rise to a rumor last night that she had perished in the flames, but on enquiry it was said that Miss King, who had been employed at the Gilmour as a waitress, was now at the new Russell, Yonge street, Toronto.

It is reported that Mr. Irwin of Winchester is missing. No news of him has been heard since the fire. It is said also that a new bell boy and a new waitress, whose names are unknown, are missing.

KILLED AS SHE SLEPT.

Lightning Strikes Mrs. McEwan of Canton While In Bed.

Brockville, Sept. 19.—Mrs. Wm. McEwan, who lived with her husband on a farm a short distance from Canton, was killed by a bolt of lightning as she slept.

A loud crash attracted the attention of Dana Tracey, a nearby neighbor, who investigated and found Mrs. McEwen dead. Her husband, who slept beside her, was hurled out on the floor and was unconscious three-quarters of an hour.

The house was badly shattered, but did not take fire.

Mrs. McEwen was only 30 years of age. Two young children who occupied another room, were uninjured.

Little Boy Burned.

Quebec, Sept. 19.—While playing with matches the seven-year-old son of Mr. Dery, foreman at the Ritchie boot and shoe factory, set his clothes on fire and died from burns.

Falls to His Death.

Detroit, Sept. 19.—Wheelman Harry Smith, aged 24 years, of Sombra, Ont., son of Banker Smith of that place, was killed at Escanba, Mich., on Sunday, by falling through a hatch into the hold of the steamer Mitchell.

IN CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Principal Scrimger Voices Presbyterian Ideal at Methodist Conference.

Montreal, Sept. 19.—The reception of the fraternal delegate from the M. E. Church of the United States to the general Methodist conference drew a fair audience last evening. Dr. Kelley gave an outline of the work of the M.E. Church.

Principal Scrimger, Dr. Robt. Campbell, Dr. Scott and Justice Archibald presented the greetings of the Presbyterian Church to the conference. The principal in a very eloquent passage referred to the negotiations in progress for union.

"Whatever the issue of the negotiations ultimately," he said, "I believe all the branches of the evangelical church, and I trust, all churches, will eventually be evangelical, will be united at last in some kind of Christian unity.

"The waters that flowed around the Island of Montreal were much broken and divided, but uniting in one stream to reach the ocean, they symbolized the destined unity of Christianity."

Justice Archibald also spoke.

Resolution of thanks were carried to both deputations.

The business done in committee and in conference yesterday possessed no very stirring interest.

STIFFENED STRANGELY.

Banker Killed by Unknown Quality While Under X-Ray.

Philadelphia, Sept. 19.—While undergoing an X-ray examination at the Polyclinic Hospital yesterday, Martin F. Murphy, a Renova, Pa., banker, one of the richest men in the state, died as though stricken by lightning. Mr. Murphy passed a rigid physical examination before going into the chair and his heart action was pronounced perfect. Surgeons believed some unknown quality entered the ray and killed.

The course of the ray was directly through the heart.

As it flashed upon Murphy he stiffened strangely. The ray was turned off and it was found that he was stone dead.

Cheating the Mint.

Philadelphia, Sept. 19.—Charged with falsifying the scales used in weighing gold, Thomas W. Huff, for twelve years assistant weigher and representative of the coiner at the United States mint in this city, and a respected citizen of Woodbury, N. J., is under arrest. A copper planchette, or unstamped penny, was either fastened on the bottom or laid in the pan of the scale of which the gold is weighed. At each weighing the Government lost $3 in gold.

Apple Evaporator Burned.

Watford, Sept. 19—The apple evaporator building owned by R. J. Graham of Brockville was burned yesterday. The fire caught from the dry kiln. Over 25 hands are thrown out of employment.

Liberals at Aylmer.

Aylmer, Sept. 19.—The Liberal meeting last night was largely attended. The Reform candidate, W. F. Hepburn, Hon. C. S. Hyman and Hon. A. B. Aylesworth spoke.

Another Shock

"Yes," said the waiter, "this cafe is thoroughly up to date. We cook by electricity."

"Is that so?" said the guest, pointing to a platter. "Then will you please give that beefsteak another shock?"

Shavings.

"By the great omelet!" clucked the old hen, as she cuddled down upon the thirteen eggs, "this nest is made of excelsior. No doubt about it, this is going to be a shaving set."

The Result of Environment.

"I saw the oddest freak the other day," says the man with the honest eyes and the trustworthy face.

"A three legged cat?" we ask, smiling.

"No. It was a chicken that had fur instead of feathers."

"Fur?"

"Yes. It was hatched from a cold storage egg."

Virtue's Reward.

Where is the reward of virtue and what recompense has nature provided for such important sacrifices as those of life and fortune, which we must often make to it? Oh, sons of earth, are ye ignorant of the value of this celestial mistress? And do ye meanly inquire for her portion when ye observe her genuine beauty?—Hume.

TRAIN THROUGH A BRIDGE.

Eight Dead, Twenty Injured and as Many More Are Missing.

Guthrie, Okla., Sept. 19.—Eight persons are dead, twenty more or less injured and as many more missing, as the result of the wrecking of a Rock Island passenger train three miles from Dover, Okla., at 8.30 o'clock yesterday morning.

The engine, tender, baggage and mail cars, smoking car and day coach of passenger train No. 12, northbound, left the high bridge that spans the Cimarron River and plunged into the stream, which is flanked by treacherous quicksands. The locomotive disappeared almost immediately. They mail and baggage clerks escaped from their cars and swam to the shore.

The accident was due to driftwood, which piled against the bridge and swerved it one of it.

The train was an hour late, and was running at high speed

INTERESTING FACTS

FOR NEARLY EVERY MAN, WOMAN OR CHILD.

A short time ago we published an article recommending to our readers the new discovery for the cure of Dyspepsia, called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and the claim then made regarding the wonderful curative properties of the remedy have been abundantly sustained by the facts. People who were cautious about trying new remedies advertised in the newspapers and were finally induced to give Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets a trial were surprised and delighted at the results. In many cases a single package costing but 50 cents at any drug store made a complete cure and in every instance the most beneficial results were reported. From a hundred or more received we have space to publish only a few of the latest, but assure our readers we receive so many commendatory letters that we shall publish each week a fresh list of genuine, unsolicited testimonials and never publish the same one twice.

From James Yemmeisler, LaCrosse, Wis.: Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are doing me more good than anything I ever tried and I was so pleased at results that I gave away several boxes to my friends who have also had the same benefits.

From Jacob Anthony, Portmurray, New Jersey: I have taken Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets with the best results. I had Dyspepsia for 6 years, and had taken a great deal of medicine, but the Tablets seem to take right a hold and I feel good. I am a farmer and lime burner and I heartily recommend to everyone who has any trouble with his stomach to use these Tablets.

From Mrs. M. K. West, Preston, Minn.: I have received surprisingly good effects from using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I gave one-half of my last box to a friend, who also suffered from indigestion, and she had the same good results.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a certain cure for all forms of indigestion. They are not claimed to be a cure-all, but are prepared for stomach troubles only, and physicians and druggists everywhere recommend them to all persons suffering from nervous dyspepsia, sour or acid stomach, heartburn, bloating or wind on stomach and similar disorders.

INGRATITUDE OF KINGS

Wolsey-Like Experience Meted Out to Trepoff by the Czar.

Tyrant's Heart Was Broken—Had Made a Radical Remark About Cabinet and It Was Attributed to Cowardice—Jewish Intercession Successful, But New Horror Threatens Them at Odessa—"Flying Group" Disbands.

Vienna, Sept. 19.—According to information received by The Neues Wiener Tageblatt from a distinguished Russian authority, Gen. Trepoff, at the council at Peterhof, Aug. 15, remarked: "We have made a fearful mistake in not having formed a cabinet representative of society."

Emperor Nicholas, indignant at the observation, avoided Gen. Trepoff henceforth. Later, Gen. Trepoff presented the Emperor with a project he had elaborated represting the sale of the crown lands, but the Emperor coldly ordered him to hand it to Grand Duke Nicholas, his bitterest enemy.

The grand duke, after reading the project, remarked: "It is extraordinary that you have now become a Liberal after the attempt to poison you. You are a Liberal from fear of a revolution, not from conviction."

Gen. Trepoff took this treatment to heart, coming from the hands of those to whom he had devoted his whole life, and passed his days in the closest retirement, suffering intensely from depression.

Early on the morning of Sept. 13, Gen. Trepoff found on his writing table a document, which he knew, as he unfolded it, was a death sentence from the revolutionary committee. Greatly agitated, he was seized with a cramp of the heart, eventually causing his death.

Jews Intercede.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 19.—As a result of intercession by a deputation of Jews, at the head of which was Baron Ginsburg, a prominent banker of St. Petersburg, Premier Stolypin has sent telegraphic orders to the Governor of Siedlce that the persons arrested there following the recent massacre shall not be submitted to trial before the newly-established drumhead court-martial.

Jews Marked For Massacre.

Odessa, Sept. 19.—Policemen, accompanied by soldiers, made tours of the city Monday night and cut marks on the trunks of trees standing close to a great number of shops belonging to Jews. These actions are supposed to be in preparation for the intended attack by the military, and a great panic ensued when the people learned what had been done. Representatives of the Jews appealed to the mayor to investigate, and the investigation is said to have confirmed the story.

A police official was tried here yesterday on charges of having killed 11 Jews during the anti-Jewish attacks last year. Although the murders were fully proven, the man was condemned to only three years' imprisonment.

Mutineers Were Shot.

Helsingfors, Finland, Sept. 19.—Seventeen marines, condemned to death for participation in the Sveaborg mutiny, were shot yesterday. The court-martial has sentenced 80 others sailors to various terms at hard labor to service with the disciplinary battalions. Eleven of the men tried were acquitted.

Traitor In Their Midst.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 19.—Disheartened at the capture of their principal leaders, of whom Vladimir Maseuri and a number of others have been executed, the "Flying Group" of the revolutionists, which seceded from the parent organization last winter, and which has been responsible for almost all the important assassinations and robberies since the convocation of Parliament, has voted to return to the fold and submit to the orders of the central committee. Members of the "Flying Group" are convinced that they have had a traitor in their ranks. They suspect Belenzoff, the leader of the band which committed the bank robbery in Moscow last March.

THE CUBAN REVOLT.

Rebels Are Again Destroying British Railway Property.

Havana, Sept. 19.—Since the return here of the military trains, the rebels are again destroying property of the Cuban Western Railroad, a British enterprise.

Government forces, 2,000 strong, under the command of Gen. Belancourt, are concentrating at Matanzas, and it is reported that they expect orders to march toward Havana.

Alferdo Zayas, president of the Liberal party, says that Col. Avalos, with 200 mounted men, attacked a rebel force under Pino Guerra Monday near Los Palacios, in Pinal Del Rio Province. The rebels had one man killed and two wounded. The Government soldiers had 13 killed and 30 wounded.

A second attack was about to begin when Guerra's brother, in the capacity of peacemaker, arrived from Havana and urged an armistice, which was speedily arranged.

Joseph Demers Chosen.

St. Johns, Que., Sept. 19.—The convention to nominate a candidate in succession to L. Phillipe Demers was held yesterday afternooon. Eighty-five votes were cast, of which 75 were in favor of Joseph Demers. Hon. L. P. Brodeur announced that the Government would accept any candidate named by the convention.

Bank Shares Drop 100 P. C.

Rotterdam, Sept. 19.—Suspected of the embezzlement of $294,000, Bland Vandenburg, a notary and director of the South Holland Bank, has been taken into custody. The shares of the bank dropped 100 per cent. on the bourse yesterday.

THE MANUFACTURERS.

Close Annual Meeting With Banquet —New Officers.

Winnipeg, Sept. 20.—The big manufacturers' convention was brought to a close last night by a banquet in the Alexandra Hotel, at which over 500 were present. Premier Roblin was the leading speaker.

Harry Cockshutt of Brantford, the new president, was the chairman, and dealt in a general way with the advance of science and invention, and what it meant for manufacturing.

W. K. George, president for 1904-1905, was presented with an illuminated address by C. C. Ballantyne, the retiring president.

"Canada and the Empire" was responded to by Hon. Clifford Sifton.

The New Officers.

The officers elected yesterday are:

President: Harry Cockshutt, Brantford.

First vice-president: Hon. J. D. Rolland, Montreal.

Provincial vice-presidents—Ontario: Lloyd Harris, Brantford; Quebec: G. A. Vandry, Quebec; Nova Scotia: T. M. Cutter, Halifax; British Columbia: John Hendry, Vancouver; Manitoba: L. C. McIntyre, Winnipeg; New Brunswick, Charles A. McDonald, St. John's; Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown; Alberta, A. E. Cross, Calgary; Saskatchewan, E. J. Brooks, Regina.

Treasurer: George Booth, Toronto.

Auditor: W. C. Eddis. Toronto.

Tariff Committee Reports.

The report of the tariff committee presented by W. K. McNaught, chairman, claimed that present prosperity was not due to the tariff, but to the general world-wide prosperity, and to the fact that a normal activity in the United States did away with the necessity of its exploiting foreign markets at slaughter prices. A tariff, to be effective, must be up-to-date.

The time to give Canada a tariff to aid in its development was during its prosperity. At present some Canadian companies were struggling against foreign competition.

The committee viewed with regret the great increase in the importation of dutiable goods during the past year, and the continuance of the excess of imports over exports, which this year amounted to $35,000,000.

Stranger Found Dead.

St. Catharines, Sept. 20.—Alfred Green, an elderly stranger, was found dead in one of the outbuildings at the Imperial Hotel by Porter Robert Lewis yesterday afternoon. The man, who was evidently in straightened circumstances, had been in the General and Marine Hospital for a short time, but owing to the fact that he was a victim of tuberculosis, had been discharged.

G. T. P. in Abitibi.

Ottawa, Sept. 20.—The National Transcontinental Railway Commission will shortly invite tenders for the construction of 200 miles of road running east and west from Lake Abitibi.

Plot to Kill Russia's Czar

Emperor, Fearing For His Own Life, Not at the Funeral.

Premier Stolypin Warned His Majesty Not to Return From Pleasure Cruise in Finland to Attend Trepoff Obsequies—Much Unfavorable Comment Upon His Failure to Honor Devoted Subject—Nicolateff Assassinated.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 20.—Gen. Dmitri Trepoff, who died last Saturday, was buried yesterday at Peterhof. The Emperor was not present at the funeral. The fact that the Emperor did not abandon his pleasure cruise to return and attend the funeral of a devoted subject, although his return was scheduled for yesterday has aroused much unfavorable comment.

Plot Against the Czar.

A high police officer explained to the Associated Press that the Emperor's absence was due to Premier Stolypin, who had been informed that an attempt might be made against His Majesty and telegraphed him not to return.

The only members of the imperial family who attended the funeral were two grand dukes and Grand Duchess Elizabeth, widow of the late Grand Duke Sergius and sister of the Empress.

General Assassinated.

Warsaw, Sept. 20.—Gen. Nicolateff of the arellery, was assassinated here yesterday. He was walking on Wielka street when he was surrounded by five revolutionists and shot dead. The murderers escaped. Gen. Nicolateff was erroneously thought to be a member of the field court-martial.

FIVE THOUSAND DIE.

Chinese Perish in the Hong Kong Typhoon—Bishop of Victoria Missing —Steamer Heung Stranded.

Hong Kong, Sept. 20.—It is now estimated that 5,000 Chinese lost their lives in the recent typhoon.

Reports are hourly increasing the mortality.

The typhoon came suddenly and without warning. The observatory had predicted moderate winds. Half an hour after the gun signal had been fired the storm was at its height. It lasted two hours.

Most of the damage done was wrought on the Kowloon Peninsula. Losses are estimated at several million dollars. Over one thousand sampans and junks are missing from Hong Kong alone.

Wharves were swept away and houses collapsed. The military barracks are in ruins.

The Bishop of Victoria (Hong Kong), Dr. J. C. Hoare, was on his way to visit some neighboring islands when the storm broke, and is reported missing. His launch has been found floating bottom upwards.

Sir Matthew Nathan, Governor of Hong Kong, and the authorities are doing everything possible to render assistance.

The steamer Heung Shan from Macao with hundreds of passengers on board, stranded off Lantao Island at noon Sept. 19. A mate with a towline swam ashore and succeeded in rescuing about 300 of the passengers.

BINDING OF BOOKS POOR.

Text Book Commission Begins the Taking of Testimony.

Toronto, Sept. 19.—The text-book commission appointed by the Ontario Government heard testimony yesterday. The original agreements between this Government and the W. J. Gage Co., the Canada Publishing Co., and the Copp Clark Co., respecting the price and character of the school books were read.

Richard Southam, president of the Mail Job Printing Company, testified that he could produce the same books under similar conditions if the plates were supplied as was now done, for from 33 1-3 to 60 per cent. less than their present cost. He offered to furnish for $20,000 wholesale, or $32,000 retail, the number of books as estimated by the department and which cost $16,000.

Other witnesses testified to the poor quality of the books furnished.

Dr. Allen of Toronto University made a chemical anaylsis of the paper used. He thought that the use of mechanical wood pulp should be forbidden.

The enquiry resumes next Tuesday.

SENATOR LOVITT GUILTY.

Sentence on Bank President Postponed Pending Appeal.

Halifax, N. S., Sept. 20.—Hon. Senator Lovitt, president of the defunct Bank of Yarmouth, who was charged with signing monthly bank statements wilfully, knowing them to be false, was found guilty in the supreme court at Tusket yesterday.

Mr. Polton, K. C., moved that sentence be postponed pending an appeal to the full bench, on the grounds that the verdict was not in accordance with the evidence given. This motion was readily granted by Justice Longley.

The case of S. A. Crowell, the vice-president of the bank, against whom a similar charge is made, will be heard in June.

THE ODDFELLOWS.

Toronto, Sept. 20.—The Oddfellows' parade here yesterday was the biggest ever seen in this city, and broke the Knights of Pythias' record of 20 years ago. The uniformed members of the order presented a grand sight, and the beautiful movements of the beautiful drill of the drill cantons were much admired by the biggest crowd ever seen in the city streets since Pretoria night. There were 30 bands in the procession, which took one hour and a quarter to pass a given point.

DR. SUTHERLAND'S RETIREMENT.

Montreal, Sept. 20.—A crisis in missionary administration was reached by the Methodist General Conference yesterday, when a motion to divide the executive into two parts, each independent of the other, led Dr. Sutherland to announce his withdrawal from the service. The veteran stalwart of the Church, minister for 51 years and missionary secretary for 32 years, so strongly differed from some features of the policy proposed that he found it impossible to longer retain his post. The scene as he delivered his valedictory was touching. The painful situation arose over a report on which in general there was unanimity.

Doubtless an effort will be made for a compromise, whereby both sides will be satisfied.

Sympathy Not Called For In the Fielding Case

Hon Mr. Fielding's refusal to answer questions strictly material to the issue at his election trial, has given rise to much discussion. The Moncton Times remarks:

"The law in its charity allows a witness to refuse answering questions when in his opinion doing so might lead to his conviction of a crime. When the Minister of Finance claimed this protection he acted either honestly or dishonestly. If dishonestly he trifled with his solemn oath; if honestly he added cowardice to crime. In either case he erased his name from the list of men of true honor and dignity. While the world approves of this lenient feature of British law it denies its respect to the man high or low who, like trickster or coward, crawls under its protection. The fact that Mr. Fielding acted under the advice of counsel only made his conduct worse. Had he refused to answer from momentary excitement some extenuation of his course might be offered. But there is no such palliation. Deliberately and on the advice of astute counsel he drew around his imputed manliness that cloak of immunity which through pity is provided for the miscreant and the felon. Mr. Fielding forgot that in his high position he was custodian of his country's honor and that we all shared in his humiliation. And yet for such an one and for such conduct the sympathy of men of principle is asked."

An Ottawa letter observes that Mr. Fielding has been too busy explaining away the election scandals in his own constituency to do much with the work of tariff revision. He is still not quite sure that he will be in Parliament when the House meets, or whether he will be qualified to sit in any parliament during the next seven years. There is a report that he will take the risk of disqualification and be a candidate in Colchester after the appointment of Mr. Lawrence to the Bench. At the present moment it is thought that the Finance Minister is giving more attention to these personal matters than to the question of maximum and minimum tariff.

Waste Of Public Money.

The Liberal keynote of the bye-elections next month is that of "something for the constituency." This plea is unblushingly put forward by the Laurier organ in North Renfrew, the Pembroke Observer, which says "it is very important that North Renfrew be with the powers that rule." It refers to the halcyon time when Mr. Mackie was in Parliament supporting Laurier, "when the county received close to half a million dollars to say nothing of the military camp, which was obtained by having a representative who was with the Government."

No more damning commentary has been made upon Laurier political methods than this reminder to the electors of North Renfrew that half a million dollars was obtained "by having a representative who was with the Government."

The subsidized organ at Pembroke goes on to say that "since the electors went back on the Liberal candidate not one dollar has been received."

There could be no plainer admission that the Government used the money of the people to purchase support, and is ready to do so in the pending bye-election.

How Federal money is wasted in the lower provinces was shown in the way Nova Scotia was swept from end to end. And in Quebec, where Premier Gouin is pressing for a larger provincial subsidy, one of his ministers, Hon. Mr. Provost, speaking at Lachute, Sept. 10, criticized the way Dominion money was misspent. He said "he had seen on the Baie des Chaleurs, on his voyage down there, places where $20,000 and more had ..en spent on wharves that were not built, where breakwaters had been .. three or four fishermen. Would it have been better to save that mo.. and apply it to the schools or to the ..rovement of the roads in the Province of Quebec."

Hon. Mr. Provost, a strong supporter of the Laurier Government, let the truth out in his zeal for a larger appropriation to Quebec Province.

The same sort of appeal is made in East Elgin. Vote for Hepburn and get Government money spent, for he "is with the Government." Vote against him, and be outside the pale of Laurier's favor. That is the kind of argument used to defeat the Conservative candidate, Mr. Marshall—an open bribe for support.

Many people who do not live in Montreal, however, think the idea all right, and believe that a man behind in his taxes should lose his vote. It seems reasonable that those who will not pay up their own taxes should not be allowed a voice in the election of men who will vote away the taxes of people who do pay.

President Roosevelt has made Captain John J. Pershing a brigadier-general of the U. S. Army, promoting him over the head of 257 other captains, 364 majors, 131 lieutenant-colonels and 110 colonels. The reason given for the act was that Brigadier-General Pershing managed a successful expedition in Mindinao in 1902. The hostile critics, who are numerous, says the Montreal Gazette, think that the fortunate soldier's being son-in-law to a statesman at Washington has most to do with his luck. There was comment some time ago over a British army order to the effect that women were not to be permitted to promote the advancement of officers. Perhaps our neighbors have need of a like regulation.

Eye Strain

(Brain Strain)

By far the commonest cause of NERVOUSNESS.

The actual underlying cause of many ills, which the thousands of sufferers are vainly trying to relieve by drugs. Really the most dangerous evil that now exists, because it gives rise to brain irritation of so many different degrees. The most unsuspected, and therefore, neglected menace to the general health, because the very brain-strain enables the person to "see alright."

Very often completely changes the person's disposition, by the intense irritation of nerve-centers in the brain.

The Straw Hat.

Officially Saturday began the open season for straw hats. On and after September 15th from olden times the game laws have permitted us to go gunning for the said summer headgear.

Not many know why September 15 is the day to stow your straw among the camphor balls. According to the New York Telegraph the custom has a Roman origin.

"The Roman straw hat resembled the Filipino straw hat, inasmuch as it was cone-shaped and came well down over the face. This was rendered necessary by the size and prominence of the Roman nose.

"These straw hats, which almost concealed the features, were worn well into the autumn, much to the disgust of the Roman actors and matinee idols, who, not daring to defy the accepted customs, were forced to conceal their handsome features while walking up and down the Roman Broadway or Via Sacra. This irked them. They revolted, led by Quintus Roscius Histrio, the William Faversham of the hour. They approached Julius Caesar and requested him to issue a decree making it against good manners to wear straw hats after the arbitrary date of September 15, the date of the opening of the Roman dramatic season. Caesar graciously consented.

"It happened that Caesar's proclamation was first posted on the pillars of the Forum Boarium, or Roman Livestock Exchange. The actors leaving their chop house, just underneath the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, went in a body to see that the Julian proclamation was enforced and during the arguments and discussions which ensued several hats were smashed. The custom has been kept up from that day to this."

Value Of Sleep.

(Toronto World.)

It seems to be agreed, in the case of adults, that a spell of sleep longer than met the requirements of a past generation is not only desirable but necessary. The idea that a change of occupation is all that is needed is discredited. A man who works hard cannot get the recuperation he needs from hard play. If he works hard and plays hard, he needs more sleep than if he merely worked hard or played hard. "What is needed," said one medical gentleman, "to put an end in the future to his decline of staying power is to divide the day scientifically between work, sleep and exercise." Excess of work is not balanced by excess of exercise. Only the minority of town workers, unhappily, can so arrange matters. There are thousands whose daily round is work and sleep, relieved only by the double journey between the suburban home and the city office or warehouse. Except at week-ends, they can have no exercise. If they take it during the week, the time devoted to it must be taken from their sleeping hours—a form of abstraction which demands a double reparation. There are others who are more happily situated, and to them the advice to sleep whenever they can seems justified. A gallant officer of 70, who looked 15 years younger, attributed his health to acting on his doctor's advice to "take plenty of sleep," and not to despise a 10 to 30 minutes' nap after luncheon and dinner. Why should he. Does not the greater part of wild nature take its nap after feeding? Such sleep helps the mechanism of the body, although a longer spell would clog it.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Matter of the Estate of William Francis Reeves, late of the City of Belleville, in the County of Hastings, Assessor, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given pursuant to the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, Chapter 129, that all creditors and others having claims against the estate of the said William Francis Reeves, who died on or about the ninth day of May, A.D. 1906, are required on or before the 22nd day of October, A.D. 1906, to send by post prepaid or deliver to W. C. Mikel, of the City of Belleville, in the County of Hastings, Solicitor for the Administratrix, their Christian and surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, the statement of their accounts and the nature of their securities, if any, held by them.

And further take notice that after such last mentioned date the said Administratrix will proceed to distribute the assets of the deceased among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which she shall then have notice and that the said Administratrix will not be liable for the said assets or any part thereof to any person or persons of whose claim notice shall not have been received by her at the time of such distribution.

Dated September 20th, 1906.

Fifteen Dollars For A Wedding Outfit

Peterboro Review: Fifteen dollars to purchase her wedding trousseau consisting of a dress, winter coat, and a couple of waists, some household articles, groceries and the ingredients for her wedding cake!

How would the average Peterboro girl like to have this sum meted out to her to secure all the above essentials for such an important event as her wedding day? Not a very large allowance, is it?

Yet fifteen dollars was the amount a sixteen year old girl of Young's Point, who is to be married shortly, was alloted by her father to purchase her trousseau and several other articles that were necessary in connection with the wedding.

The girl came to the city yesterday and called at a George street dry goods store to make her purchases. She said her father had given her fifteen dollars to buy herself a wedding outfit consisting of a dress, couple of waists, winter coat, and some other wearing apparel. Out of the same money she was to buy groceries to be used at the wedding feast, the ingredients for her wedding cake, and some bedding. She bought the wearing apparel at the dry goods store and when she left there she had only eleven cents with which to purchase the groceries and wedding cake. Needless to say the prospective bride was considerably perturbed. She was afraid to go home and face the music and did not know what to do to secure the groceries. She stated at the store that her father had told her she should not spend all of the fifteen dollars.

The girl went home last night without the groceries and with a heavy heart. What reception she got when she arrived at the parental abode is not known.

The wedding day is set a couple of weeks hence. One of the clerks at the store stated to the girl that she was getting married rather young.

"Well, mamma was married when she was fifteen," said the blushing bride-to-be, "and she says I am old enough now."

Divisional Court—Before Mulock, C. J., Anglin, J., and Clute, J.

Simmons v. Chown—F. E. O'Flynn, for defendants, moved to set aside verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $150 damages in an action under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and to dismiss the action, or for a new trial. The plaintiff was engaged as a workman in defendant's factory at Belleville, operating a Bliss drawing press for making vessels out of metal, and lost his hand by reason, as he alleged, of a defect in the machine. The jury found that the tripping part of the machine was defective. Defendants contended that there should have been a non-suit, but if there was any evidence to go to the jury, that it was not sufficient to warrant the jury in finding as they did. E. G. Porter (Belleville), for plaintiff, contra. Not finished.

Rosebery Pokes Fun At U. S. President.

Hawick, Scotland, Sept. 19.— Lord Rosebery, speaking at the Jubilee dinner last night of the Hawick Archeological Society, of which Dr. Murray, editor of the Oxford New English Dictionary, is president, said amidst laughter that he came especially to hear Dr. Murray's opinion of President Roosevelt and was disappointed that not a word had been uttered on the subject. Lord Rosebery then humorously referred to Mr. Roosevelt's spelling reform, saying a blow struck at the recognized rules of spelling of the English race was a blow at morality itself. Conscientious and virtuous people, he said, were hampered by spelling, but the unscrupulous and vicious spelt ahead according to phonetic rules of their own, producing results fully acceptable to themselves and sometimes understood by others. He was not at all sure that the archaic rules of spelling laid down by tradition and stereotyped by the dictionaries had not filled half the lunatic asylums of the country. The conscientious man got muddled, but the unscrupulous went ahead, and at the last moment of his life might be honored by the homage of the President of the United States.

USEFUL DISCOVERIES.

It is not always the greatest, most startling discoveries of science that are most useful to the human race. Comparatively few people were directly interested in Herschel's finding of the new planet Uranus, but many thousands have been benefited by Prof. Unna's experiments, which proved beyond a question that Dandruff and Baldness are the results of the inroads of a parasitic germ which invades the roots of the hair.

The discovery of the true cause of baldness made Newbro's Herpicide possible. Herpicide effectually kills this germ. Destroy the cause you remove the effect.

County Exhibits at the 1906 Horticultural Exhibition.

This year at the Show, twenty of the best fruit counties in Ontario will exhibit the finest products of their orchards and gardens. The exhibition is to be held in Massey Hall, Toronto, November 6th to 10th, and promises to exceed in magnitude and beauty the show of 1905, which was considered by experts the finest of its kind ever held on the continent. The famous Black Dike Band of England will play during the entire show, and will add materially to the enjoyment of those in attendance.

Each county is offering substantial prizes for the varieties of apples specially suited to the section. These varieties have been selected by local authorities, and everyone has a chance to exhibit. The opportunity to show to the world what your county can excel in is unsurpassed, and the local growers should make every effort to uphold the honor of their county before the thousands of visitors who annually attend the exhibition. No expense whatever need be incurred by the exhibitor, as the Provincial Fruit Growers' Association will pay all express charges on the fruit to Toronto. The only condition attached is that the fruit must be grown in the county offering the prize. This matter should be taken up at once by the apple growers in this county, and the largest exhibit possible made at the November Show. The special county prize list, and the general prize list may be obtained by dropping a card to P. W. Hodgetts, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

The King's Wardrobe

London, Sept. 18. — The King's tailor has been giving some details of the wardrobe of Edward VII. His Majesty buys about a hundred pairs of trousers every year, and pays from $10.50 to $13 a pair for them. He orders about a dozen dress suits annually at $80 each, and for his sack suits he pays $32.

Twelve or 15 frock coats and 15 overcoats are also included in the King's yearly renewal of his wardrobe. The King has at least 100 naval and military uniforms, which represent a large sum in value; but, apart from the cost of these, his tailoring bill amounts to from $5000 to $6000 annually.

From the necessity imposed on royalty King Edward has acquired the celerity of a quick-change artist in dressing. He can change from one suit into another with marvellous rapidity.

His taste, which, when younger, inclined to somewhat loud patterns is now all in favor of simplicity. A plain navy blue serge is his majesty's favorite cloth.

"They Stood In Old Jerusalem."

Montreal, Sept. 19.—Nine members of the Methodist Conference now meeting in this city, were delegates to the World's Sunday School convention at Jerusalem in 1904. They are Rev. Dr. Potts, Toronto; Rev. J. J. Redditt, Toronto; Rev. W. W. Abbott, Elkhorn, Assa.; Mr. William Johnson, Belleville; Mr. J. A. Tomkins, of Granby, Que.; Mr. I. Hoard, Mitchell; Mr. Jas. McIntosh, Nepawa, Man.; and Mr. J. W. Forster, Toronto. They have arranged for a reunion and dinner together to-night, at which they will recount their three months' journey taken two years ago.

AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. For your own sake you should see that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." Write for full information about rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

Pandora Range

A Ventilating Oven that Ventilates.

There is only one practical way of ventilating a range oven and that way has been adopted in the Pandora—is an actual, positive, working feature and not a mere talking point.

Fresh air is drawn from the outside through small vents into the oven while the odors and cooking fumes are forced by the fresh air out through small vents into the smoke flues, and up the chimney.

Roasts cooked in a Pandora oven retain their sweet, natural flavor, entirely free from cooking odors, absolutely unmixed with any foreign flavor. Puddings, cakes, bread, meats, etc., are always light, fresh and free from mixed odors or flavors.

In the Pandora range you get all that scientific study, practical experience, skilled workmanship and an immense and finely equipped plant combined, can produce—the highest possible attainment in range perfection.

Ask your local dealer to show you the Pandora range, or write to us for free catalogue before buying any other.

What MOTHERS Should Know

Whether a child grows puny or sturdy, depends on how little or how much food is assimilated.

If Mothers only realized how much plumpness, and rosiness, and down right sturdy health there is in there would be fewer pale, sickly, scrawny children. ORANGE MEAT is the whole wheat, including hulls, wheat germs, gluten—with the starches converted into wheat sugars. It is all wheat and all food—in a form that every child can assimilate.

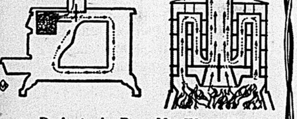
15c. and 25c. a package. At all grocers. Every 15c. package contains a coupon, good for new premiums. 25c. or "Jumbo" package contains 2½ times the quantity of the 15c. size. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston" for new premium catalogue.



BISON FURNACE

Drafts in the Bison Hot Water Furnace work on exactly the same principle as in a kitchen range.

Its direct draft will give a roaring fire in "no time," and its side and down draft will bring the water to the boiling point very quickly.

The Bison has more good heating points than all other heaters combined.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE HOME PAPER.

'Tisn't filled with cuts and pictures,
not the latest news despatches;
And the paper's often dampened,
and the print is sometimes blurred.
There is only one edition, and the eye quite often catches
Traces of a missing letter, and at times a misspelled word.
No cablegrams nor "specials" anywhere the eye engage;
The make-up is, maybe, a trifle crude and primitive;
But an atmosphere of home life fills and permeates the pages
Of the little country paper printed where you used to live.

How the heart grows soft and tender while its columns you're perusing:
Every item is familiar, every name you know full well;
And a flood of recollections passes o'er you as you're musing
On the past, and weaves about you an imaginative spell.
You can see the old home village once again in fancy, seeming
To be clasping hand of neighbor, and of friend and relative;
And their faces rise before you, as you're idly, fondly dreaming
Of the little country paper printed where you used to live.

And you seem to leave the city, with its rush and roar and clamor,
With its busy, bustling atmosphere or turmoil and of strife;
Leave the multitude of surging, eager workers, and the glamor,
For the quiet, soothing blandishment of restful country life.
And you note a vine-clad cottage with the roses nestling round it;
Hear the voice of mother calling for the long-gone fugitive,
While the echo of her pleading, memories repeat, and sound it
Through the little country paper printed where you used to live.

Every printed line reminds you of the days long since departed;
Here a boyhood chum is mentioned, there a schoolmate's name appears;
And the eye grows moist in reading while the soul grows heavy-hearted
O'er the changes time has wrought throughout the swiftly-passing years.
Memory's scroll has deep impressions stamped upon its face forever
Of sweet pleasures which the busy city life can never give;
And, in fancy, you are roaming through the quiet town whenever
You peruse the country paper printed where you used to live.

Labor Unions in Chicago and elsewhere are making appeals to Governor Folk of Missouri to commute the sentence of a man who has been condemned to death at Kansas City for killing a non-union man in a fight. Some of the revelations regarding the source of lawlessness in the teamsters' strike in Chicago raise the question whether this punishment would not be a wholesome example.

The Boston Transcript pays the following graceful tribute to King Edward; "Perhaps it is a statement not likely to be challenged by those who have closely and impartially watched the career of Edward VII., since he ascended the throne, that he is one of the best kings that England has had since the days of Alfred. He is a monarch who achieves and achieves wisely. There is nothing spectacular about his methods, hence he is not identified with mouth-filling deeds, but we doubt whether another ruler in all Europe has been so instrumental as he in preserving its peace and promoting its highest welfare.

A Hamburg despatch tells of a German torpedo fleet of 36 vessels having, during the course of manoeuvres, dashed at night from the German coast to the British coast and returned without having been discovered. It's easy to hit a pugilist when he is not looking. If tension existed between Britain and Germany, mister torpedo fleet would have been more than seen.

There are persistent rumors that Sir Thomas Lipton is to make yet another attempt to lift the America cup. Building yachts to sail for the America cup is a pastime which but very wealthy yachting sportsmen can indulge in. It is not improbable that owing to the fact Sir Thomas may continue to have a monopoly as a challenger. Most lovers of yacht racing would wish a change once in a while. Sir Thomas may be a good "sport," a persistent sport, and a lavish spender, but in the back of the public mind there must continue to be seen that vision of the Lipton trade mark. Like Banquo's ghost it will not down.

The deadliest of snakes is said to be the mamba, an African cobra. It flies at everybody and everything; it goes out of its way to quarrel; it will even come down from a tree to solicit an interview. Over in India there is the great king cobra, or hamadryad, a size larger, quite as fierce—it has been known to chase a man on horseback; he had to ride for his life—but his poison is a degree less virulent. The difference, however, may be considered negligible and ceases to interest the patient after a few minutes. Among the Australian cobras, the pit vipers of America and the great west African vipers there are species with evil reputations, and the most alarming feature is that the aggressive snakes are all desperately poisonous.

The Size of Bolivia.

The area of Bolivia is not accurately known, yet it is probable that its present area is not far from 600,000 square miles, which is the equivalent of the area of Germany, France and Spain combined. From the lowlands on the east and southeast the land rises, sometimes by easy slope and sometimes by abrupt uplift to the snowcapped peak of Sorata, with its altitude of near 25,000 feet and to the pyramid of Illimani, which is given as 21,300 feet in height. La Paz lies at an elevation of 11,000 feet above sea level and Potosi at nearly 14,000 feet. A few miles west of La Paz lies the inland sea of Titicaca, at an elevation of 13,000 feet.

His Position In the Matter.

"Gracious!" exclaimed the fond wife, coming in her husband's den and finding him smoking his pipe and reading. "This room is thick with smoke. I don't see how you can stand to sit in here."

"You can't?" responded the brutal husband. "Well, I don't stand to sit in here; I sit to sit in here. Did you think you had married a freak?"

It is said that this was the first time in their married life that she slammed a door on leaving him.

Ian Maclaren's Pun.

The Rev. John Watson (Ian Maclaren) is degenerating into a punster. At a dinner not long ago the conversation turned to the art—or crime—of punning, and Mr. Watson ventured the opinion that he could do very well in that line, offering to try then and there. He sat silent for a few moments, and Hall Caine, who was among the guests, exclaimed, "Come along, Watson, we're all waiting." The preacher-punster replied at once, "Don't be in such a hurricane."

Plague of Caterpillars.

The dreaded army of tent caterpillar, which for some time ravaged the State of Washington has at last made its appearance within a few miles of Vancouver, and the agriculturists of the surrounding districts are making preparations for an earnest fight with the invader. The first of the tent caterpillars to show themselves in the vicinity of Vancouver attacked the Central Park suburban garden of Mrs. E. Barrett, who lives about six miles from the city. In the early morning she saw a lonely caterpillar making its way up the branch of one of her apple trees, and within a few minutes noticed that it had been joined by hundreds of companions, which appeared seemingly from nowhere in particular. Promptly Mrs. Barrett applied the only effective weapon, fire, and destroyed the whole band. Careful examination failed to reveal the presence of any others.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

A knot of three men stood at the head of the port gangway ladder shouting for Kettle. They were the purser, the second mate and Mr. Grimshaw.

Kettle turned with a blaze of fury on his suave tormentor. "Into the boat with you. How do you dare to disobey my orders and stay behind, when the passengers were ordered to go," Into the boat with you, or by James, I'll throw you there."

Mr. Robert Grimshaw opened his lips for speech.

"If you answer me back," said Kettle "I'll shoot you dead."

Mr. Grimshaw went. He had a tolerable knowledge of men, and he understood that this ruined shipmaster would be as good as his word. He picked his way down the swaying ladder to where the white-painted lifeboat plunged beneath, finding footsteps with clumsy landsman's diffidence. He reached the grating at the foot of the ladder, and paused. The lifeboat surged violently toward him over the sea, and then swooped down again in the trough.

"Jump, you blame fool," the second mate yelled in his ear, "or the steamer will be down under us." And Grimshaw jumped, cannoned heavily against the boat's white gunwale and sank like a stone under the black water.

At a gallop there flashed through Capt. Kettle's brain a string of facts. He was offered £10,000 if this man did not reach Liverpool; he himself would be out of employ and back on the streets again; his wife and children would go hungry. Moreover, he had endured cruel humiliation from this man, and hated him poisonously, even by letting him passively down he would procure revenge and future financial easement. But then the memory of that Irish-American at the speaking-tube in the Bowery came back to him, and the thought of obliging a cowardly assassin like that, drove all other thoughts from his mind. He thrust Horrocks and the second mate aside, and dived into the waters after this passenger.

It is no easy thing to find a man in a rough sea and an inky night like that, and for long enough neither returned to the surface. The men in the lifeboat fearing that the Armenia would founder and drag them down in her wash, were beginning to shove off when the two bodies showed on the waves, and were dragged on board with boathooks.

Both were insensible and in the press of the moment were allowed to remain so on the bottom gratings of the boat. Oars straggled out from her sides, frantically laboring, and the boat fled over the seas like some uncouth insect.

But they were not without a mark to steer for. Rockets were streaming up out of another part of the night, and presently as they rowed on over that black watery desert, the outline of a great steamer shone out lit up like some vast stage picture. The other boats had delivered up their freights and been sent adrift. The second mate's boat rowed to the foot of her gangway ladder.

"This is the Georgic," said a smart officer who received them. "You are the last boat. We've got all your other people, unless you've lost any."

"No," said the second mate. "We're all right. That's the old man down there with his fingers in that passenger's hair."

"Dead?"

"No, I saw 'em both move as we came alongside."

"Well, pass 'em up and lets get 'em down to our doctor. Hurry now. We wanted to break the record this passage, and we've lost a lot of time already over you."

"Right-o," said the Armenia's second mate drearily, "though I don't suppose our poor old skipper will thank us for keeping him alive. After piling up the old Atrocity, he isn't likely to ever get another berth."

"Man has to take luck as he finds it at sea," said the Georgic's officer, and shouted to the rail above him. "All aboard, sir."

"Cast off that boat! Up gangway," came the orders, and the Georgic continued her race to the east.

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

THE WRECK OF THE CATTLE BOAT

There was considerable trouble and risk in bringing the lifeboat up alongside, but it must be granted that she was very unhandy.

The gale that had blown them out into the Atlantic had moderated, certainly, though there was still a considerable breeze blowing, but the sea was running as high as ever, and all Capt. Kettle's skill was required to prevent the boat from being incontinently swamped. McTodd and the two Portuguese baled incessantly, but the boat was always half waterlogged. In fact from constitutional defects, she had made very wet weather of it all through the blow.

It was the part of the steamer to have borne down and given the lifeboat a lee in which she could have been more readily handled, and three times the larger vessel made an attempt to do this, but without avail. Three times she worked round in a wallowing circle, got to windward, and distributed a smell of farmyard over the rugged furrows of ocean, and then lost her place again before she could drift down and give the smaller craft shelter. Three times did the crew of the lifeboat, with maritime point and fluency, curse the incompetence of the rust-streaked steamer and all her complement.

"By James!" said Kettle savagely after the third attempt, "are they all farmers on that ship? I've had a nigger steward that knew more about handling a vessel."

"She's an English ship," said McTodd, "and delicate. They're nursing her in the engine room. Look at the way they throttle her down when she races."

"The fools on her upper bridge are enough for me to look at," Kettle retorted. "Why didn't they put a sailorman aboard of her before she was kicked out of port? By James! if we'd a week's water and victuals with us in the lifeboat here, I'd beat back for the Canaries as we are, and keep clear of that tin farmyard for bare safety's sake."

"We haven't a crumb nor a drink left," said the engineer, "and I'd not recommend this present form of conveyance to the insurance companies." A wave top came up from the tireless gray sea, and slapped green and cold about his neck and shoulders. "Gosh! There comes more of the Atlantic to bale back into place. Mon, this is no' the kind of navigation I admire."

Meanwhile the clumsy tramp steamer had gone round in a jagged circle of a mile's diameter, and was climbing back to position again over the hills and dales of ocean. She rolled and she pitched, and she wallowed among the seas, and to the lay mind she would have seemed helplessness personified. But to the expert eye she showed defects in her handling with every sheer she took among the angry waste of waters.

"Old man and the mates must be staying down below out of the wet," said Kettle contemptuously as he gazed. "Looks as if they've left some sort of a cheap Dutch quartermaster on the upper bridge to run her. Don't tell me there's an officer holding an English ticket in command of that steamer. They aren't going to miss us this time though, if they know it."

"Looks like as if they were going to soss down slap on top of us," said McTodd, and set to taking off his coat and boots.

But the cattle steamer, if not skillfully handled, at any rate this time had more luck. She worked her way up to windward again, and then fell off into the trough, squattering down almost out of sight one minute, and in fact, showing little of herself except a couple of stumpy, untidy masts and a brine-washed smokestack above the seascape, and being heaved up almost clear the next second, a picture of rust-streaks and yellow spouting scuppers.

Both craft drifted to leeward before the wind, but the steamer offered most surface and moved the quicker, which was the object of the manoeuvre. It seemed to those in the lifeboat that they were ~~not going~~ to be missed this time, and so they lowered away their sodden canvas, shipped tholepins, and got out their oars. The two Portuguese firemen did not assist at first, preferring to sit in a semi-dazed condition on the wet floor gratings; but McTodd and Kettle thumped them about the head, after the time-honored custom, till they turned to, and so presently the lifeboat, under three straining oars, was holding up toward her would-be deliver.

A man on the cattle boat's upper bridge was exhibiting himself as a very model of nervous incapacity, and two at any rate of the castaways in the lifeboat were watching him with grim scorn.

"Keeping them on the dance in the engine room, isn't he?" said McTodd. "He's rung that telegraph bell 15 different ways this last minute."

"That man isn't fit to skipper anything that hasn't got a towrope made fast ahead," said Kettle contemptuously. "He hasn't the nerve of a pound of putty."

"I'm thinking we shall lose the boat. They'll never get her aboard in one piece."

"If we get amongst their cow pens with our bare lives we shall be lucky. They're going to heave up a line. Stand by to catch it, quick."

The line was thrown and caught. The cattle steamer surged up over a huge rolling sea, showing her jagged bilge chocks clear; and then she squelched down again, dragging the lifeboat close in a murderous cuddle, which smashed in one of her sides as though it had been made from eggshell. Other lines were thrown by the hands who stood against the rail above, and the four men in the swamping boat each seized an end.

Half climbing, half hoisted from above, they made their way up the rusted plating, and the greedy waves from underneath sucked and clamored at their heels. It was quite a toss-up even then whether they would be dragged from their hold; but human muscles can put forth desperate efforts in these moments of desperate stress; and they reached the swaying deck planks, bruised and breathless and gasping, but for the time being safe.

The cattle boat's mate who had been assisting their arrival sorted them into castes with ready perception. "Now, you two dagos," he said to the Portuguese, "get away forrard—port side—and bid some of our firemen to give you a bunk. I'll tell the steward to bring you along a tot of rum directly." He clapped a friendly hand on McTodd's shoulder. "Bo's'n," he said, "take this gentleman down to the messroom and pass the word to one of the engineers to come and give him a welcome." And then he turned as to an equal and shook Kettle by the hand. "Very glad to welcome you aboard, old fellow—beg pardon, 'captain' I should have said; didn't see the lace on your sleeve before. Come below with me, captain, and I'll fix you up with some dry things outside and some wet things in before we have any further chatter."

"Mr. Mate," said Kettle, "you're very polite, but hadn't I better go up onto the bridge and say 'howdy' to the skipper first?"

The mate of the cattle boat grinned and tucked his arm inside Capt. Kettle's and dragged him off with kindly force toward the companionway. "Take the synch from me, captain, and don't. The old man's in such a mortal fear for the ship, that he's fair crying with it. If he'd had his way, I don't fancy he'd have seen your boat at all. He said it was suicide to try and pick you up with such a sea running. But the second mate and I put in some ugly talk, and so he just had to do it. Here's the companion. Step inside, and I'll shut the door."

"Quite agree with you, captain; quite agree with you all the way. But that's what's done on this ship, and there's no getting over it. It's not to my liking either—I'm an old Conway boy, and was brought up to respect discipline. However, I daresay you'll see for yourself how things run before we dump you back on dry mud again. Now, here we are at my room, and there's a change of clothes in that drawer beneath the bed, and underwear below the settee here. You and I are much of a build, and the kit's quite at your service till your own is dry again."

The mate was back again in 10 minutes—dripping, cheerful, hospitable. "Holy tailors!" said he, "how you do set off clothes! Those old duds came out of a slop-chest once, and I've been ashamed of their shabbiness more years than I care to think about; but you've a way of carrying them that makes them look well-fitting and quite new. Well, I tell you I'm pleased to see a spruce man on this ship. Come into the cabin now and peck a bit. I ordered you a meal, and I saw the steward as I came past the door trying to hold it down in the fiddles. The old girl can roll a bit, can't she?"

"I should say your farmyard's getting well churned up."

"You should just go into those cattle decks and see. It's just hades for the poor brutes. We're out of the river Plate, you know, and we've carried bad weather with us ever since we got our anchors. The beasts were badly stowed, and there were too many of them put aboard. The old man grumbled, but the shippers didn't take any notice of him. They's signed for the whole ship, and they just crammed as many sheep and cows into her as she'd hold."

"You'll have the cruelty to animal people on board of you before you're docked, and then your skipper had better look out."

"He knows that, captain, quite as well as you do, and there isn't a man more sorry for himself in all the western ocean. He'll be fined heavily, and have his name dirtied, so sure as ever he sets a foot ashore. Legally, I suppose, he's responsible; but really he's no more to blame than you. He is part of the ship, just as the engines, or the mates, or the tablespoons are; and the whole bags o' tricks was let by wire from Liverpool to a South American dago. If he'd talked, he'd have got the straight kick-out from the owners, and no further argument. You see they are little bits of owners."

"They're the worst sort."

"It doesn't matter who they are. A skipper has got to do as he's told."

"Yes," said Kettle with a sigh. "I know that."

"Well," said the mate, "you may thank your best little star that you're only here as a passenger. The grub's beastly, the ship stinks, the cook's a fool, and everything's as uncomfortable as can be. But there's one fine amusement ahead of you, and that's try and cheer up the other passenger."

"Stowaway?"

"No, bona fide passenger, if you can imagine anyone being mug enough to book a room on a foul cattle-loaded tramp like this. But I guess it was because she was hard up. She was a governess, or something of that sort, in Buenos Ayres, lost her berth, and wanted to get back again cheap. I guess we could afford to cut rates and make a profit there.

"Poor lady."

"I've not seen much of her myself. The second mate and I are most of the crew of this ship (as the Old Man objects to our driving the regular deckhands), and when we're not at work, we're asleep. I can't stop to introduce you. You must chum on. Her name's Carnegie."

"Miss Carnegie," Kettle repeated, "that sounds familiar. Does she write poetry?"

The mate yawned. "Don't know. Never asked her. But perhaps she does. She looks ill enough."

The mate went off to his room then, turned in all standing, and was promptly asleep. Kettle, with memories of the past refreshed, took paper and a scratchy pen, and fell to concocting verse.

He wondered, and at the same time he half dreaded, whether this was the same Miss Carnegie whom he had known before. In days past she had given him a commission to liberate her lover from the French penal settlement of Cayenne. With infinite danger and difficulty he had wrenched the man free from his warders, and then, finding him a worthless fellow, had by force married him to an old Jamaican negress, and sent the girl their marriage lines as a token of her release. He had had no word or sign from her since, and was in some dread now lest she might bitterly resent the liberty he had taken in meddling so far with her affairs.

However, like it or not, there was no avoiding the meeting now, and so he went on—somewhat feverishly—with his writing.

The squalid meal entitled tea came on, and he had to move his papers. A grimy steward spread a dirty cloth, wetted it liberally with water, and shipped fiddles to try and induce the table ware to keep in place despite the rolling. The steward mentioned that none of the officers would be down, that the two passengers would meal together, and in fact did his best to be affable; but Kettle listened with cold inattention, and the steward began to wish him over the side, whence he had come.

The laying of the table was ended at last. The steward put on his jacket, clanged a bell in the alleyway, and then came back and stood swaying in the middle of the cabin, armed with a large tin teapot, all ready to commence business. So heavy was the roll that at times he had to put his hand on the floor for support.

Capt. Kettle watched the door with a haggard face. He was beginning to realize that an emotion was stirred within him that should have no place in his system. He told himself sternly that he was a married man with a family; that he had a deep affection for both his wife and children; that, in cold fact, he had seen Miss Carnegie in the flesh but once before. But there was no getting over the memory that she made poetry, a craft that he adored, and he could not forget that she had already lived in his mind for more months than he dared count.

His conscience took him by the ear, and sighed out the word love. On the instant, all his pride of manhood was up in arms, and he rejected the imputation with scorn; and then, after some thought, formulated his liking for the girl in the term interest. But he knew full well that his sentiment was something deeper than that. His chest heaved when he thought of her.

Then, in the distance he heard her approaching. He wiped the moisture from his face with the mate's pocket-handkerchief. Above the din of the seas and the noises from the crowded cattle-pens outside, he could make out the faint rustle of draperies, and the uncertain footsteps of someone painfully making a way along, hand over hand against the bulkhead. A bunch of fingers appeared round the jamb of a door, slender white fingers, one of them decked with a queer old ring, which he had seen just once before, and had pictured a thousand times since. And then the girl herself stepped out into the cabin, swaying to the roll of the ship.

She nodded to him with instant recognition. "It was you they picked up out of the boat? O, I am so glad you are safe."

Kettle strode out toward her on his steady sea legs, and stood before her, still not daring to take her hand. "You have forgiven me?" he murmured. "What I did was a liberty, I know, but if I had not liked you so well I should not have dared to do it."

She cast down her eyes and flushed. "You are the kindest man I ever met," she said. "The very kindest." She took his hand in both hers and gripped it with nervous force. "I shall never forget what you did for me, captain."

The grimy steward behind them coughed and rattled the teapot lid, and so they sat themselves at the table and the business of tea began. All of the ship's officers were either looking after the work entailed by the heavy weather on deck, or sleeping the sleep of utter exhaustion in their bunks; and so none joined them at the meal. But the steward incessantly hovered at their elbows, and it was only during his fitful absences that their talk was anything like unrestrained.

"You said you liked poetry," the girl whispered shyly when the first of these opportunities came. "I wrote the most heartfelt verses that ever came from me over that noble thing you tried to do for a poor stranger like me."

She shook her head sadly. "It was not published when I left England, and it had been sent back to me from four magazine offices. That was nothing new. They never would take any of my stuff."

Kettle's fingers twitched suggestively. "I'd like to talk a minute or so with some of those editors. I'd make them sit up."

The Oven That Ends Guesswork
Before you put the roast in an Imperial Oxford oven, let the draft bring the heat to the right point. You'll know when it gets there if you'll look at the oven thermometer. After the roast goes in, you can know (not guess) it will be cooked right in a certain definite time. There's no ups-and-downs to the oven-heat in a range built as this one is,—the diffusive oven-flue takes all the guess work out of cooking, all the drudgery out of oven-use
That Rack That Ends Bother
When the roast needs basting, pull forth the Imperial Oxford draw-out oven rack,—roast and all—slide it right out where you can get at it. Needn't reach in and scorch your fingers nor sear your wrists,—baste it in comfort. That one thing alone—the draw-out rack—ought to make you like this range above all ranges. And that's only one of the twelve better things about this range. Come and look.

"That wouldn't make them print my poems."

"Wouldn't it, miss? Well, perhaps you know best there. But I'd guarantee it'd hinder them from printing anything else for awhile, the inky-fingered brutes. The twaddling stories those editors set up a-type about low-down pirates and detective bugs are enough to make one sick."

It appeared that Miss Carnegie's father had died since she and Kettle had last met, and the girl had found herself left almost destitute. She had been lured out to Buenos Ayres by an advertisement, but without finding employment, and, sick at heart, had bought with the last of her scanty store of money a cheap passage home in this cattle-boat.

She would land in England entirely destitute; and although she did not say this—spoke cheerfully of the future, in fact, Kettle was torn with pity for her state. But what, he asked himself with fierce scorn, could he do. He was penniless himself; he had a wife and family depending on him; and who was he to take this young unmarried girl under his charge?

They talked long on that and other days, always avoiding vital questions; and meanwhile, the reeking cattle-boat wallowed north, carrying with her, as it seemed, a little charmed circle of evil weather as her constant accompaniment.

Between times when he was not in attendance on Miss Carnegie, Kettle watched the life of the steamer with professional interest, and all a strong man's contempt for a weak commander. The 'tween decks was an Aceldama. In the heavy weather the cattle pens smashed, the poor beasts broke their legs, gored one another and were surged about in horrible melees. The cattlemen were half incapable, wholly mutinous. They dealt out compressed hay and water when the gangways were cleared and held to it that this was the beginning and end of their duty. To pass down the winch chain and haul out the dead and wounded was a piece of employment that they flatly refused to tamper with. They said the deckhands could do it.

The deckhands, scenting a weak commander, said they had been hired as sailor men and also declined to meddle, and, as a consequence, this necessary sepulture business was by the mates.

In Kettle's first and only interview with the cattle boat's captain he saw this operation going on through a hatchway before his very face. The mate and the second mate clambered down by the battens and went along the filthy gangway below, dragging the winch chain after them. The place was cluttered with carcases and jammed with broken pens, all surging together to the roll of the ship. The lowings and the groans of the cattle were awful. But at last a bight of rope was made fast round a dead beast's horns and the word was given to haul. The FATAL SHOOTING AFFRAY.

John Collins Dies From Wound, But Circumstances Are Hazy.

Brockville, Sept. 20.—There was a shooting affair at Loon Lake, across the river from here, wherein, it is alleged, that several men, including John E. Collins, went into an Italian shanty and demanded drinks of a 15-year-old boy, who refused. Thereupon, the party fired several shots into the shack, one striking Jimmie, the Italian boy, in the foot.

Jimmie shot into the crowd, striking Collins, who died from the effects of the wound.

Another version of the story is to the effect that the shooting was accidental, and that one of Collins' own party shot him. A man giving the name of Eggleston is said to be the man.

The theory of accident is advanced very strongly, and in substantiation of it it is said the men were drinking, and that Collins' own recollection of the affray was hazy.

C. P. R. PAYS DAMAGES.

Agrees to Judgment for $3,000 in Favor of Man Injured.

Brockville, Sept. 20.—At the Assize Court yesterday judgment was entered by consent in the case of Forsythe vs. C. P. R. Co. A settlement between the parties was arrived at on the basis of a payment by the defendants of $3,000 and costs. The case was an action for damages brought by Mr. Forsythe of Kemptville for injuries sustained at a crossing of the C. P. R.

Mrs. Margaret Doyle was awarded $100 damages against Albert E. Shaver, one of Brockville's leading grocers, for the seduction of her daughter, Miss Mary Doyle, who was in his employ as clerk.

Taft and Cuban Revolution.

Havana, Sept. 20.—The presidents of both the Moderate and the Liberal parties yesterday afternoon submitted to U. S. Secretary of War Taft their respective statements of facts leading up to the revolution. After the hearing Secretary Taft said he had just begun his work, and that it was evident that the mission upon which he came would require more time than he had anticipated. He estimated that ten days would be required to complete his errand.

A QUEER EXCAVATION.

The "Ear of Dionysius" and Its Peculiar Use.

The most remarkable artificial cavern or excavation ever made was that which has been recorded in history as the "Ear of Dionysius." This queer excavation, which was adjoining the quarries near Syracuse, Sicily, was constructed by the slaves of the monarch by whose name it is known. In reality it was an exact model of a gigantic human ear, 250 feet long by 80 high, and was so scientifically constructed that the interior of the grotto became the finest "whispering gallery" the world has ever known. In a cave adjoining this acoustic wonder the prisoners of the tyrant were kept, and every word they uttered came through an orifice to the "internal ear," where Dionysius passed whole days listening to the plots that were being laid by the enemies of his government. The prisoners were, of course, chained in that portion of the underground dungeon most favorable for reflection of all sounds to the secret chamber. By this admirable system of espionage Dionysius managed to thwart every conspiracy against his government which rose during his thirty-nine years' reign. The "ear," the prison dungeons and even the staples of iron in the floors to which prisoners were chained may still be seen. It is said that the tyrant put to death the architect of the "ear" and the slaves who excavated it in order that its purpose might never be known.

CUNNING OF THE FOX.

Its Skill When Running For Life From the Hounds.

No other still hunter can travel so quietly as a fox, and mighty few men are as crafty as the four legged hunter when it comes to a matter of getting meat. Foxes have been seen in England slipping from bush to bush, crawling and creeping after a feeding hare, for all the world like a man stalking a deer. The fox cannot catch a rabbit in a fair chase, but its food is mostly rabbits in spite of their fleetness. But at no time does it display its skill so well as when running for life with a pack of hounds on its trail.

Olaus Magnus, archbishop of Upsala, wrote a book called "Historia de Gentibus Septentrionalibus," of which an English translation exists. This book tells of a fox that leaped from back to back of a herd of goats. As the dogs could not follow, the fox escaped.

A curious trick of English foxes is to jump as high as possible, grasping a tree branch with their teeth, hold on till the hounds have gone on and then, dropping to the ground, escape. This is similar to the trick of the American fox which jumps into a tree and rests on a branch, but American dogs are not such fools as English dogs. They gather around the tree and howl till the hunter comes.

The Tumbleweed.

Tumbleweeds spread themselves in a wholesale fashion. Instead of sending the separate seeds out into the world with wings or hairs to carry them, the whole plant breaks off near the root, when these are ripe, and goes rolling along the ground before the wind. The bare, sun scorched deserts of the great west produce several tumbleweeds, and there are some in the prairie region. It is natural that they should be most abundant where there are no hills or trees to stop them in their course. But we have one tumbleweed in the east—the old witch grass, so called, maybe, because it rides the wind like an old beldame. In September this grass spreads its head or panicle, with hairlike, purple branches, in every sandy field. When the seeds are ripe the plants are blown across the field, often piling up in masses along fences and hedgerows. As might be expected, the hair grass, which has so effective a way of spreading itself, is found throughout the United States from ocean to ocean.

Turned the Tables.

Alexandre Dumas one day found in his mail a letter from a French count suggesting collaboration in the writing of a drama, Dumas to get the pecuniary benefits and the count to share in the glory. The author sent the following answer: "Sir, I am not in the habit of harnessing a horse and an ass to my carriage. I regret, therefore, that I cannot accept your amiable proposition." The count, in his turn, wrote: "Sir, your note refusing to join me in literary work is at hand. Of course you are at perfect liberty to refuse so advantageous an offer, but I forbid your calling me a horse in the future."

A Toothpick Town.

Only one characteristic distinguishes the little village of Strong, Me., from the thousands of others that are scattered all over New England. That is the peculiar industry which serves to support the entire community. Strong is famous for nothing but toothpicks, but it is known in the trade as the place from which come the majority of the toothpicks that are used in the United States.

[illegible] Worry.

"What was the matter?"

"Well, she had been worrying about something or other yesterday evening, and this morning she couldn't remember what it was."

Food For Reflection Only.

I am in a hideous pickle. Here I've got nothing to eat, and the only thing I've got to pawn are my false teeth, and if I pawn them and buy something to eat, then I can't eat it. I never was in such an awful fix in all my life.—Boston Globe.

RAIN IN PARIS.

It Does Not Dampen the Spirits of the Frenchman.

The sole effect rain seems to have on French spirit is to bring out its brightness by contrast with clouds. "Tiens! Il pleut!" ("Ah, it rains!") And monsieur, dressed with scrupulous care, ready to sally forth, does not stop for an umbrella, probably, but steps out jauntily into the street and makes no more unfriendly comment on the weather than "Il ne fait pas beau ce matin." ("It is not fine this morning.")

This is the French point of view. Discomfort of any sort is for them only the negative of something desirable, and so they keep their minds on what is pleasing, naming it to define the absence of it. La petite Helene and her little brother Henri, who go to school in the neighborhood, trot along in the rain, the bonne at their heels carrying their school bags. Henri wears a capuchon, a cape with the hood drawn up over his head. Helene holds over her head a minuscule umbrella, which she tilts in such fashion as to make the most of the rain. Unrebuked by any threat of something awful to result if a drop of water falls on them, both children dance along in the wet, letting the drops fall on their upturned faces and laughing in glee as if the rain were another playfellow. Even his royal highness the baby does not miss his accustomed outing on account of the weather. Nunu, the nurse, will shorten the great ribbon streamers of the white cap she wears, and she pins up her dress to escape the muddy streets. Le bebe himself is resplendent in the laces and feathers which are an inseparable feature of the magnificent devotion which the French bestow upon an infant; he is snugly tucked in his gocart, the hood is raised if it is a heavy downpour—anything less is thought to be good for him—and off he goes.

STRENGTH OF CHARACTER.

It Combines Power of Will and Power of Self Restraint.

Strength of character consists of two things—power of will and power of self restraint. It requires two things, therefore, for its existence—strong feelings and strong command over them. Now, it is here we make a great mistake. We mistake strong feelings for strong character.

A man who bears all before him, before whose frown domestics tremble and the children quake, because he has his will obeyed and his own way in all things, we call a strong man.

The truth is he is a weak man. It is his passions that are strong. He that is mastered by them is weak.

You must measure the strength of a man by the power of the feelings he subdues, not by the power of those which subdue him, and hence composure is often the result of strength.

Did we never see a man receive a flagrant insult only growing a little pale and then reply quietly? This is a man spiritually strong.

Or did we never see a man bearing a hopeless, daily trial remain silent and never tell the world what cankered his home peace? That is strength.

He who, keenly sensitive, with many powers of indignation in him, can be provoked and yet restrain himself and forgive—he is the strong man, the spiritual hero.

Pelted With Epithets.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the most famous temperance advocate in England, was the target of the political wits. During his last campaign for parliament Sir Wilfrid was greeted as a "peregrinating pump handle," "an old cracked teapot," "a confiscatory mollycoddle," "a washed out water party," "a pop bottle pump orator," "the apostle of slops," "a maudlin mountebank" and "a buffoon." The last epithet was so often hurled at Sir Wilfrid that he remarked it reminded him of "Selah" in the Psalms. His hatred of war and rum led to an epigram which has frequently been repeated. "The country," he said, "is governed by two heathen deities—Bacchus and Mars, or, in other words, by the god of bottles and the god of battles."

Painting and Drawing.

Sir Frederick Leighton once supplemented words of advice and encouragement to a struggling young artist by handing him an envelope containing a check for $250, with the remark, "One day, my friend, I do not doubt that you will be able to draw even better than this." This reminds one of the anecdote told of the visit of old Joseph Gillott, the pen man, to Turner. "I have come to swap some of my pictures for yours," he said. "What do you mean?" exclaimed Turner. "You don't paint!" "No, I don't, but I draw," said Gillott, unfolding a roll of Bank of England notes, "and here are some of my pictures."

Mutual Satisfaction.

"What's this I hear about the plumber and the paper hanger in the next block? Have they been trading houses?"

"Not exactly. They did a lot of work for each other and each had to take the other's house for his pay."

Willing to Compromise.

A young woman called at a house where a maid was wanted. She asked the mistress of the house if they had any children, to which she replied that they had five. "Then I can't work for you," said the girl. "Oh, do stay," said the woman. "We will kill the children!"

If a man has his board fence painted white it immediately suggests to the boy a piece of charcoal; if black, a piece of chalk.

Old French Bonfire.

Probably the strangest detail recorded of the old midsummer eve bonfires is one in connection with those that used to be lighted in the Palace de Greve in Paris. The main constituent of the bonfire was a tree, which the king was accustomed to fire with his own hands, the ashes being afterward carried home by the people for good luck. Louis XIV. was the last king who did his part. A mysterious item of earlier times was the burning in the bonfire of a barrel, bag or basket full of cats. The registers of Paris show that a hundred sous were paid to an official for having provided during three years (1571-73) "all the cats required, as usual, for the fire," and also in one year, when the king was present, "a fox, to give pleasure to his majesty and for having provided a great bag of linen in which the said cats were."—London Chronicle.

Sixteen Miles Underground.

The most remarkable canal in the world is the one between Worsley and St. Helens, in the north of England. It is sixteen miles long and underground from end to end. In Lancashire the coal mines are very extensive, half the county being undermined. Many years ago the managers of the Duke of Bridgeport's estates thought they could save money by transporting the coal underground instead of on the surface; therefore the canal was constructed and the mines connected and drained at the same time.

A Wise Son.

"A dislike," said the gentle philosopher, "should not lead us to any active demonstration. We should merely seek to avoid its object."

"Maybe my boy Josh has more sense than I gave him credit for," rejoined Farmer Corntossel. "That's exactly the way he feels about work of all kinds."

An Expert Statement.

"Is there any sure way of knowing when a man is meaning to propose?" asked the bud.

"You needn't worry about that," said the belle. "The knowledge comes by nature. The most important thing is to know when he isn't going to."

Politeness of Childhood.

"What kind of pie will you have, Willie—mince or apple?"

"I'll take two pieces of each, please."

"Two pieces!"

"Yes'm. Mamma told me not to ask twice."

To do a kindness to a bad man is like sowing seed in the sea.—Phocylides.

Minnesota.

Minnesota has been designated the North Star State, of which two or three explanations have been given, one on account of its geographical position, another that the north star appears in its coat of arms. It has also been called the Lake State from the great number of small lakes within its limits and the Gopher State because the early settlers found gophers there in such abundance that they proved a serious nuisance. Even a careful rider passing over a plain where gophers abounded was in danger of being thrown by his horse accidentally stepping in a gopher hole.

His Eloquence.

The curate of a country parish lately preached a charity sermon, and the collection which followed amounted to £20 7s. 4½d. In the vestry after the service the church wardens counted it out and mentioned the result. "Well," said the reverend preacher, "I must have preached pretty well to get all that." "No doubt you did, sir," replied one of the church wardens who had been collecting, "but the squire put in a £20 note, and he's deaf."—London Mail.

Too Full For Utterance.

"How was it I saw Footlites in town this week?"

"He isn't playing."

"Why, I thought he was the star in that tank drama."

"So he was, but he wanted to be the tank too."

Test Your Washing Blue.

Many rust spots of seemingly unaccountable origin may be traced to the bluing used in washing. Prussian blue, the constituent of some of the bluings on the market, is a compound of iron, which, in the presence of an alkali, deposits the rust spot. If you suspect the bluing you use take a little of the compound in a vessel with soap, or, better, caustic potash, and bring to a boil. If iron separates, the compound is prussian blue, and you will have to be very careful in rinsing to get out all the soap.

KILLING DUMB ANIMALS.

Cases Where the Use of Chloroform Is Positively Cruel.

"Why will so many people cling to the idea that chloroforming is the most merciful means of death possible for dumb animals?" asked a veterinarian recently. 'Only the other day I was called upon to perform the trying and almost impossible task of killing an old horse in this way.

"The horse, it seems, had been the pet of a wealthy woman who left provision for him in her will and decreed that if ever the family to whose care she intrusted him should deem it necessary to end his life this should be done with chloroform, so that he might be assured a painless death. Then the horse became blind and otherwise disabled, and the family decided that death would be a mercy.

"Of course the provision of the will had to be carried out, but no greater case of mistaken kindness could have been possible. It is impossible to administer sufficient chloroform at one time to kill an animal the size of a horse, so dose after dose had to be given, the poor brute slowly and painfully smothering to death.

"Chloroform is all right for cats or dogs, but for larger animals it is a positive cruelty, whereas a pistol, well aimed at the head of any beast, will send it out of life so quickly that it has not time to feel the shot or realize what has happened."

THROWING THE DISCUS.

Methods of the Grecian Athletes In Homeric Times.

Discus throwing was a refined form of hurling the stone. In Homeric times, and even at Olympia, a stone or mass of iron was first used for the purpose. This was held by a leathern thong, swung in a circle and hurled as far as possible. A circular or lenticular disk of bronze was used at least as early as the beginning of the fifth century.

A standard weight must, of course, be assumed for the great games. A discus now in the British museum, which seems to have been used, weighs 11 pounds 9 ounces, but whether this was the standard weight or not is not definitely known.

The thrower took his stand upon a slight elevation of limited circumference, where he could have a secure foothold and was prevented from running. Then, with a swing of the arm and a corresponding movement of the whole body, he hurled the discus as far as possible.

The value of the body movement was recognized by the sculptor Myorn in his famous statue, "The Discobolus," and is understood by the modern athlete when he swings the hammer or even when he makes a drive at golf.

A Lesson In Economy.

The son was about to enter upon the sea of matrimony. The father called him to his side and for the last time gave him a lesson in economy.

"Economy," said the father, "is the source of all wealth, and extravagance is the ruination of genius.

"Now," continued the parent, "a woman can take a piece of straw, trim it, and it will be a ten dollar hat. On the woman's part that is"—

"Genius," the son answered.

"A wealthy man can expend $10,000 a year and live no better than the man that spends only $400. On the wealthy man's part that's"—

"Extravagance."

"Now to the point. A married man can live on one half the money that a single man requires. On the married man's part that's"— "Compulsory."

Gemelli Rings.

A quaint custom of the long ago was that of breaking a ring for betrothal. Such rings were fashioned for the purpose, being made of two twin circles, and were called gimmal rings, from the word gemelli, meaning twins.

A ring of pure gold she from her finger took,
And just in the middle the same there she broke.
Quoth she, "As a token of love you this take,
And this as a pledge I will keep for your sake."

The gimmal was also a favorite wedding ring for many years.

Really a Vegetarian.

"I hope the Bible I gave you last week," said the missionary, "will teach you something"—

"It has taught me something already," replied the cannibal chief. "I find that I'm really a vegetarian."

"Er—how's that?"

"Why, you know, it says 'all flesh is grass.'"

A Costly Collection.

"What a lovely collection of odd cups!" exclaimed a guest, peering into the china cabinet. "Did it take you long to get so many?"

"Oh, no!" said the hostess. "Those are samples of the sets we have had in the last two years!"

SHARPENING A PENCIL.

In This Act, It Is Said, You May Read a Man's Character.

No woman should marry a man till she has seen him sharpen a lead pencil. She can tell by the way he does it whether he is suited to her or not. Here are a few infallible rules for her guidance in the matter:

The man who holds the point toward him and close up against his shirt front is slow and likes to have secrets. He is the kind of man who when the dearest girl in the world finds out that there are "others" and asks him who they are and what he means by calling on them will assume an air of excessive dignity.

The man who holds the pencil out at arm's length and whittles away at it, hit or miss, is impulsive, jolly, good natured and generous.

He who leaves a blunt point is dull and plodding and will never amount to much. He is really good hearted, but finds his chief pleasure in the commonplace things of life.

He who sharpens his pencil an inch or more from the point is high strung and imaginative and subject to exuberant flights of fancy. He will always be seeking to mount upward and accomplish things in the higher regions of business and art, and his wife's greatest trouble will be to hold him down to earth and prevent his flying off altogether on a tangent.

The man who sharpens his pencil all around smoothly and evenly, as though it were planed off in an automatic sharpener, is systematic and slow to anger, but he is so undeviating from a fixed principle that he would drive a woman with a sensitive temperament to distraction in less than six months. On the contrary, he who jumps in and leaves the sharpened wood as jagged as saw teeth around the top has a nasty temper and will spank the baby on the slightest provocation. There are certain women who can manage that kind of man beautifully, however, and if he gets a wife with a calm, persuasive eye he will come down from his high horse in a few minutes and be as meek as a lamb.

The man who doesn't stop to polish the point of lead once the wood is cut away has a streak of coarseness in his nature.

He who shaves off the lead till the point is like a needle is refined, delicate and sensitive. He will not be likely to accomplish so much as his more common brother, but he will never shock you and is without doubt a good man to tie to.—New York Press.

A NOBLE ENEMY.

The Fate of Mokrani, a Moslem Chief of Africa.

France was never in greater danger of losing her colonies in Africa than during the war with Germany in 1870. The troops were recalled from Africa to take part in the conflict that was going on against France, and Algeria was left almost defenseless.

The hour for which the conquered races had long waited had come, and if a holy war had been proclaimed it is probable that the French would have been driven from northern Africa.

But the tribes did not rise while the French had their hands full on the other side of the Mediterranean, and the fact was due to their fidelity to a solemn pledge.

When the war broke out a chief of great influence among the tribes, Mokrani, gave his word to the governor general of Algeria that there should be no insurrection while the war lasted. That word was faithfully kept. Disaster after disaster followed the French arms. The defeats of the war culminated in the surrender of Paris. But not a man of the tribes of Kabylia stirred. The Moslem's faith was plighted; the Moslem's faith was kept.

When, however, the last battle had been fought and the treaty of peace signed, Mokrani, then released from his word, gave the governor general notice that in forty-eight hours he would declare war. The French armies, released from duty at home, hurried across the Mediterranean. The end was inevitable. Mokrani, seeing that all was lost, put himself at the head of his warriors and fell fighting in the front rank. The French erected a monument to mark the spot where their noble enemy perished.

"What a splendid woman she is!"

"I am glad to think you have got such a wife."

WORSHIP OF SPRINGS.

How It Prevailed Among Early Peoples In the Southwest.

Springs are rarely found in the southwestern part of the United States, and for this reason they have been from ancient times prized as a most valued possession. The people who dwelt in this region, says Walter Hough in "Records of the Past," saw in these sources of life giving water the founts of continuance and well being, and near them they located their pueblos. Save air, no elements of nature are nearer to human life than those combined into the primitive fluid which must always be within reach of men who put themselves into the grasp of the desert. The primary knowledge of the tribes who were the pioneers and of every human being who has since made his home in the great American desert was complete as to the location, distribution and idiosyncrasies of the water supply.

Spring water is naturally more prized by the inhabitants of those desert solitudes than that from living streams, because it is always drinkable and always at hand, while the watercourses, which for the greater part of the year are sinuous reaches of dry sand, furnish at flood a quickly disappearing supply of thinned mud which will not be touched by man or beast except in the distress of thirst.

One is not surprised, therefore, that a primitive people will regard these springs as sacred. In fact, the Indians of the southwest are not peculiar in the worship of springs. The sentiment is worldwide, has had a vast range of time, perpetuates itself in the folklore of the highest civilizations and presents in its manifestations a most interesting body of myth and fancy. But in the southwest the arid environment has so intensified this feature of primitive culture that no spring in the region is without evidence of many offerings to the deities of water.

It is small wonder then that the Pueblo Indians came to regard springs with special veneration; that they wove around them myth and tradition and made them objects of religious worship. To one acquainted with the environment and its radical needs this seems to have been a natural, even though unconscious, generalization. Perhaps offerings to springs will not admit of such simple explanation. Perhaps the mystery of the underground source of water welling up from unknown depths, impressive always even to the observer who believes himself free from the trammels of superstition, has also had a powerful effect on the mind of the Indian, leading, like many other natural phenomena, to an attitude of worship of unseen powers behind these masks.

Wisdom of the Ancients.

To the ancients for wisdom! Dr. Pinches at the University college in London brought out in a lecture some advice of general interest given by a certain little known king of the Assyrians. On one of the monuments in the British museum is the following inscription: "The eggs of an owl given for three days in wine bring on a drunkard's weariness. The dried lung of sheep taken beforehand drives away drunkenness. The ashes of a swallow's beak ground up with myrrh and sprinkled in the wine which is drunk will make secure from drunkenness. Horus, king of the Assyrians, found this out." The convivial monarch did not drink in vain if he "found these things out."

Putting Out a Fire.

When trying to put out a fire remember that one gallon of water at the bottom of the blaze will do more to put it out than ten gallons at the top. "Play low" is the motto to follow while fighting fire. A few gallons at the bottom of the flames will rise in clouds of steam when the fire is rising and quench it. A big blaze on the leeward side looks fearful, but play low with the water on the bottom of the fire on the windward side and you have the speediest way to quench the flames and will not require a river.

To Students

Many students with really superior minds fancy themselves dull because they fail to remember what they read in their text books. The reason is simply that they are afflicted with so much eye-strain that it requires nearly all the nerve force they possess to fix the eyes upon the book, and there is not sufficient left for the process of ideation and thought. Many students sacrifice their health in attaining an education because of the large amount of brain-strain sustained in the close use of their eyes, though vision seems excellent. This form of brain-strain is detected by an expert and remedied by the proper glasses directed to the nerve centres controlling the function of vision. For further particulars call on

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

THE BLACK DIKE BAND.

A vast number of empty seats met the gaze of the above aggregation last night when the curtain went up for the beginning of their concert. The audience was a very small one—painfully small, in fact, and the receipts could not have met expenses. This is very much to be regretted, for the famous band lived right up to its advance notices, and showed that it has good cause to claim the distinction of being one of the finest brass bands in the world. Belleville was fortunate in getting the opportunity to hear this celebrated organization, and the small audience last night reflects little credit on music-lovers in this city. Some day these really good musical attractions may "cut us out," and then the opera house management will be cheerfully abused for not securing them. Such is life. However, the Black Dike Band gave their concert, and played just as well as though the house had been full, responding to half a dozen encores into the bargain. To say that it pleased those who heard it is putting it mildly. This was the programme:

March from Tannhauser ......Wagner
Overture—Bohemian Girl ...... Balfe
Cornet Solo—Cleopatra ...... Damare
Selection—William Tell ...... Rossini
Overture to Zampa .... Herold
Operatic selection—The Orchid
.... Monkton
Waltz—Blue Danube ....Strauss
Scotch Fantasia .... Hare

With the exception of the drums, the instrumentation was all brass, and to say that everybody liked the effects produced as well as those produced by a mixed brass and reed band would not be to tell the truth. To be sure the Black Dikers have delightful tone color, but they lack the soft and brilliant effects produced by a sprinkling of reeds. In attack, retreat, phrasing and responsiveness to the conductor the band is perfection—to attempt to criticize those features of the splendid organization would be to write oneself an ass. The way the Black Dikers attacked the Zampa selection, and the brilliant and most inspiring way they played the William Tell number will probably never be forgotten by those who heard the Band last night. The last selection has been played by many first-class bands in this city in recent years, but never, within the memory of the writer, has it been so well played as by that bunch of Yorkshiremen last night. The Rossini number was probably the Band's best number, but the Scotch fantasia undoubtedly pleased the audience the most. One could hardly ever hope to hear a better rendering of the dear old Scotch airs. In the words of the boy on the street, "The Black Dikers didn't do a thing to 'The Campbells are Coming.'" There was dash and fire enough to make Piper McIntosh sit up, and the volume in "The Garb of Old Gaul" was something to be remembered. One thing which struck a listener most was the admirable tone brought out by all the musicians. The four trombonists brought out a round, full, velvety sound, altogether different from the brassy blare which makes the "slide" a thing to dread when in the hands of an indifferent player. The euphonium soloist brought a sweet, silvery tone which fell delightfully on one's ears—it was like a perfect human male voice. The equal of the cornet soloist, Mr. Ceres Jackson, has never been heard in this city. His double and triple tongueing was perfect, and as to triplets and chromatic runs—well, as the boys would say, "he just eats them." He has a most phenomenal range for a B flat cornet, while his tone left nothing to be asked for. The balance of the great Band, of course, was perfect, and their accompaniment, as it rose and fell in wave-like cadences, sounded like some grand church organ. In fact, the Band, for a good part of the time, sounded like one great instrument. Their rendering of the "Blue Danube" was a revelation as to what brass instruments are capable of—in the hands of masters. It is doubtful if more delightful effects could be produced even by strings. So the great "Brass Band" has come and gone. They didn't carry away a great accumulation of worldly wealth from Belleville, but they left many delightful memories, and, perhaps, fixed the standards of many ambitious musicians a bit higher.

"KING RICHARD THE THIRD."

The eminent tragedian, Mr. John Griffith, wil appear at the Carman to-morrow evening. Mr. Griffith is just now one of the most interesting personalities of stage life, and every season he grows in the esteem of intelligent theatre-goers. He represents all that is strenuous, combined with an intellectuality that is rare, thoroughly understanding and appreciating all the glorious lines of Shakespeare, and giving to them an interpretation that is most convincing. His management has this season provided him with a splendid company and equipment. His coming engagement here is looked forward to with unusual interest.

"THE GINGERBREAD MAN."

The bugbear "dull care," will find it a hard task to inflict his presence on those who witness "The Gingerbread Man," the brilliant, fanciful, fairyesque that comes to the Carman on Tuesday evening next. Scintillating with wit, humor and repartee, brilliant in its scenic appointments, dazzling in its electrical effects it is in one big kaleidoscopic vision of light and color. Edward A. Braden Company who are responsible for the production have been lavish in their expenditures and given to the theatre-going public the most gorgeous musical show of the decade. It must be seen to be appreciated.

Queer Mail Matter

Mr. Sills, whose business it is to gather the mail matter from the various street boxes, on Tuesday night found in two of the boxes something the destination of which was not inscribed. In a box on Alexander street a live snake about a foot long was pulled out and from a box near the wharf a live toad was extracted. The parties who deposited them in the boxes, if found out, will no doubt be severely dealt with.

NOTES OF INSPECTION OF GENERAL HOSPITAL, BELLEVILLE.

Found much improvement, but there are still many improvements needed at this hospital, and it is hoped that when the portion hitherto used as wards for contagious diseases can be taken over for proper hospital cases, that some of the long delayed improvements may be carried out.

The County grant to this hospital should be increased, and surely if the matter is placed before the County Council more assistance will be secured REMARKS.

The institution deserves much more liberal support. The records show that excellent work is being done.

The management is certainly economical and it is difficult to understand why the hospital is not more liberally supported by the people in whose interest it is conducted.

An urgent appeal should be made to place the finances in such a condition, that many of the improvements so much needed can be carried out.

Fire Near Trenton

A fire occurred last night, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock, and as a result a residence, drive-house and woodshed were burned to the ground. The buildings were situated on the Trenton road, about a mile and a half from the town of Trenton. Mr. Manson Wannamaker was the occupant of the premises, and Mr Jerome Cronk the owner. The buildings were of frame, and, owing to the continued dry weather, burned rapidly. Some furniture was saved, but in a damaged condition. How the fire originated is not known. It had considerable start when discovered. There was some insurance, but the amount we were unable to ascertain.

Boy's Narrow Escape

Harold Morrison, aged nine years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Morrison, Wharf street, last evening met with a painful accident. The lad was climbing up on a wagon, laden with apples, when he fell and a wheel of the conveyance passed over his left shoulder, bruising it severely, but apparently no bones were broken. The lad's escape from a more serious, if not fatal, accident was miraculous.

Boy Sprained Wrist.

At noon yesterday a number of boys were scuffling on Octavia St., when one of the number, Lorimer Mason, fell, and the result was that his left wrist was badly sprained.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Things Are Looking Bright for a Federal League Team.

Lovers of hockey are invited to a meeting to be held in Hotel Quinte at 8 o'clock to-morrow evening. We are told that the chances of Belleville's admittance to the Federal League this coming winter are of the brightest, and that a crack-a-jack team is in prospect. The names of some of the coming players would make your eyes stick out like a couple of doorknobs, but wait. There'll be something doing this winter, sure, and the team which wallops Belleville's Red and White Boys will have to beat Dan Patch's time. Go to the meeting to-morrow night if you are interested in Canada's great winter sport.

Prize-Winning Cantons

THOSE WHO CARRIED OFF THE BIG MONEY OFFERED FOR COMPETITION AMONG THE CANTONS MILITANT.

Toronto, Sept. 20. — Though most of the prize canton drills at Camp Wright were held earlier in the week, the awards were not made till last night. In the competition for 24 chevaliers and 3 officers Canton Washington, D. C., won first prize, $750, and Canton Lucas, from Toledo, Ohio, obtained second, worth $350.

In the competition for 18 chevaliers and 3 officers Canton Victoria, from St. Thomas, was first, the prize being $300, and Canton Rochester, from Rochester, N.Y., second, worth, $150. Canton Malden of Malden, Mass., had no competitors in the degree competition, where prizes worth $300 were offered.

In the parade yesterday prizes were offered for cantons having the most men in line, the finest military bearing and general appearance. For the latter two points 50 marks were given, divided equally between military bearing and appearance, and each man counted one mark. Akron, Ohio, in this way obtained 114 marks. City of the Straits, Detroit, 100; Allegheny, Pennsylvania, 99; Baltimore, Maryland, 91; Toronto, 89; Washington, D.C., 86; Toledo, 85; Baldwin, Mo., 80; Niagara Falls, N. Y., 78; Plainfield, N.J., 75; Rochester, N.Y., 75; Victoria, St. Thomas, 74; St. Thomas 74.

The latter two and Washington were the only three that obtained total marks for military bearing and general appearance. Officials declined to give the results of other competitions last night, and the canton parade contest has yet to pass through the hands of the committee. The judges were Lieut.-Col. Galloway, Lieut.-Col. Graveley, Lieut.-Col. Robertson and Lieut.-Col. W. Wallace.

Died In Michigan

Dr. Valleau, well-known to many in this city, died on Monday at Carson City, Mich. Deceased was at one time a resident of this city and vicinity, but had been away from here for some time. He was about 70 years of age. The deceased's wife is a Belleville woman, being a daughter of the late Mr. Stephen Garrett, who resided on Church street. She survives, but has no family. The remains were interred at Carson City yesterday.

I. O. F. BRIBERY CHARGE

Australian Commission Put the Blame on Montague.

Was Organizer For the Order — Dr. Oronhyatekha Says Scandal Injured the Foresters and Retarded Business — Insurance Commission Goes Into the Cost of the Foreign Business of the Order.

Toronto, Sept. 20.—The visit to Australia in the interests of the I. O. F. made by Hon. Dr. Montague and the incident of his "contribution" of $250 to a political party there were reviewed before the Royal Insurance Commission yesterday. It also developed that as a result of Supt. Fitzgerald's constant objections as to the way funds of the order were borrowed, changes by which expenditure was decreased were made.

The first item taken up when the examination resumed in the morning was the receipts in foreign countries. For five years in France and Belgium the mortuary receipts were $7,230, sick and funeral benefit $182 and general receipts $389. In all about $6,800. In Australia the receipts netted $121,442. In 1903 they began to fall off and when asked the reason Dr. Oronhyatekha told the commission that the check on the work in Australia was due chiefly to the Montague incident.

"I knew," said the witness, "for Dr. Montague informed me of it, that he had subscribed £50 to the Government party represented by Sir Alexander Peacock—to acknowledge Sir Alexander's kindness and consideration for Dr. Montague, which very largely helped our work by giving him introductions to prominent men in Australia and having him invited to state functions. When I arrived in Australia Dr. Montague straight away told me of this subscription. I informed the doctor that this could not be allowed to be done out of the funds of the order. He replied at once that he never intended to charge it against the order, but to pay it out of his own funds, because of the personal kindness of the Premier."

Mr. Shepley: "Tell me if this indicates that the Premier or members of the party had interested themselves in a Governmental way on behalf of the order?"

"Oh, no; I won't say that. A commission was asked for by a member of Parliament to enquire into the I. O. F." Sir Alexander, from his seat in the House, refused such commission for the reason that, after enquiry in Canada, the United States and Great Britain, the order was found all O. K., but the high commission was appointed.

Why Doctor Didn't Go.

Mr. Shepley read an article published in The Monetary Times saying that the royal commission appointed to investigate the bribery charge against Dr. Montague had concluded its inquiries, and the finding was all the more important because of its mildness. It looked as if the royal commission were trying to hush up things. During the enquiry Dr. Montague had not been called, as he did not go to Australia.

Mr. Shepley: "Dr. Montague, then, did not go to Australia"

Witness: "No."

"He didn't approve the allegations, then?"

"Affidavits were sent from here to Australia, I think."

"Was it owing to your advice that he stayed away?"

"No."

"Why, then?"

"Well, you know, that it costs something to go to Australia."

"Yes, but a man's character is worth something."

"Well, as far as I can remember. I tried to impress upon him that the charge that he had paid money to any party with bribery as an end in view couldn't possibly amount to anything."

"Dr. Montague intended to benefit the I. O. F. by any action he took?"

"Yes, that was his ulterior purposes."

"No, direct. Being a stranger in the colony he couldn't possibly be familiar with the different parties. The report found that Dr. Montague did offer money to Mr. Mitchell and also to Sir Alexander Peacock with the intent of bribery."

"Yes, but he didn't have a title of evidence to show that the I. O. F. was in any way connected with that."

"Except that Montague was their general agent, and at the head of affairs there, Dr. Montague was appointed to get a commission to help the I. O. F. to secure a foothold in Australia," said Mr. Shepley.

Mr. Shepley asked that the copies of all affidavits that were sent from here to Australia on Dr. Montague's behalf, and other correspondence be produced, and the witness acquiesced.

Contract Under Scrutiny.

The contract between Dr. Montague and the I. O. F. was dissected.

"It would not have been a far cry to show that Dr. Montague was acting for the order in Australia?"

"There is no denying that he represented us there. Nobody disputes that. but we do deny that he acted for the order in regard to the paying of that £50. If he stole sheep in Australia, surely you would not hold the I. O. F. responsible for that, and no more so for the paying of the £50."

Going back to the published criticism from Australia, Mr. Shepley went on to say:

"It states that the order's business was almost paralyzed, if not destroyed, by this affair. Is that true?"

"It certainly had a bad effect."

"Probably it would not be a very wild prophecy to say that the order in Australia will never recover," said the counsel.

"Yes, that would be wild."

Policy of Retrenchment.

Mr. Shepley read a statement of disbursements for mortuary claims in Australia from 1900 to 1905. The total was $28,474.

"Would these figures, taken by themselves, bear out your views on special medical selection?"

"I think so. They are not disastrous."

"The total is $441,000 odd. It took," remarked Mr. Shepley, "about $470,000 to get $140,000."

The witness pointed out that a retrenchment is now being made.

Mr. Shepley read from the minutes to show that expenditure was curtailed in foreign fields on recommendation of Dr. Oronhyatekha, heartily endorsed by the executive. He had thought the work would be dropped in France, but otherwise had not agreed with the others.

Upon the resuming of the examination at the afternoon session Mr. Shepley put in the drafts of the reports of the Australian high commissioner in reference to the Montague "bribery" case, as exhibits.

The encroachment into the mortuary fund by the general expenses was examined closely. Since 1893 there has been a deficit in the general fund, and each year was larger than the year before. The insurance department pressure on this feature commenced in 1896.

Wiping Out Deficits.

The attitude of the department was outlined by Mr. Shepley from the blue book of 1904. The total receipts for that year were $464,909, net expense $523,543, excess of expense over receipts $58,634. The deficit in 1903 was $348,947, making a total deficit of $407,582. The mortuary fund income was $8,315,612 and $218,514 was derived from the sick benefit and funeral fund, which after the $407,582 was taken left a net balance on hand of $8,126,504. The $407,582 was treated as a loss from the mortuary and sick and funeral funds.

Witness said, at this point, that this year they would be no deficit and next year the deficits up to date would commence to be wiped out.

The executive resolved to curtail expenses, in accordance with the wish of the superintendent.

What Fitzgerald Asked.

Mr. Shepley asked witness to put in a nutshell what Mr. Fitzgerald wanted.

"He wanted the lapses to be part of the mortuary fund, and that the mortuary funds be undisturbed, and I don't know but what Mr. Fitzgerald was right, although I think it would have been better for the order to allow us to go on as before."

Three new bank accounts were established for the mortuary fund, the sick and funeral fund, and the general fund, on the recommendation of the superintendent of insurance.

As to Salaries.

The subject of salaries was the most important item.

Oronhyatekha's salary is now $15,000 per year. For several years after 1896 he received $10,000 per annum. Last year at Atlantic City it was raised to $15,000. For ten years he refused a raise, until the general fund became in the present first-class condition.

Supreme Secretary McGillivray got $6,000 a year up to last year, when it was made $7,000 per annum. Harry Collins commenced with $2,000 a year in 1896-7. In 1898, $2,249.94; in 1899, $2,500, which remained until 1904; but in 1905 it was raised to $7,000. Witness said he now gave the position his whole time.

Dr. Millman received in 1896, $3,000; in 1897, $6,500, up to the Atlantic City meeting, when he was raised to $7,000.

The English actuary, Mr. Ray, was to receive $5,000 per year. He had charge for some time of the London head office.

Large sums were paid out for actuarial work. One year ran up to $2,000. This work was done in England.

For ten years, 1896 to 1905, the total officers' salaries amounted to $300,223; wages of office employes, $600,504; organizing staff, $945,549; organization expenses, $771,496.

Piles Cured

A FREE TRIAL PACKAGE SENT TO ALL TO PROVE ITS REMARKABLE POWER.

Now that the Pyramid Pile Cure has been discovered and has been proven to be a quick and certain means of relief and lasting cure, there is no excuse for undergoing an operation.

Does the Pyramid Pile Cure give immediate relief? Does it cure? Try a sample and prove it to yourself, as thousands have done before you. Then go to your druggist and get a 50-cent box and complete the cure.

The Pyramid Pile Cure acts with a certainty and a rapidity that is both pleasing and astonishing.

Take, for example, the case of Mr. Geo. B. Bender, 28 Diversey St., Chicago. We quote his own words:

"I have been a sufferer for 14 years from internal and external piles. I have bought all kinds of pile cures to get relief, but it was all in vain until I read your ad. in the American, and I sent for a sample, which you sent me. I used it. I have bought one 50c box of Pyramid Pile Cure and one box of Pyramid Ointment. I have used them as you directed and to-day I bought another 50c box. Gentlemen, candidly speaking, I must tell you the truth that I am feeling fine after using one 50c box and I am free from pain at present. I sincerely believe it is one of the best and grandest pile cures in the world. I would advise all sufferers to try the Pyramid Pile Cure for it is the best remedy ever used. It is a sure cure. I am very thankful for the sample you sent me.

"The Pyramid Pile Cure is a Godsend to the sufferer of piles and I know it."

The Pyramid Pile Cure has quickly and easily cured the worst cases of piles. The Pyramid Pile Cure heals ulcers and sores, reduces inflammation and takes away all itching and pain.

Prove it to yourself at our own expense. That is all we ask you to do.

Send your name and address to the Pyramid Drug Co., 53 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Michigan, and get a free sample package by return mail.

SCRIP-ISSUING PARTY

Reported to Have Met Disaster on Buffalo Lake, Keewatin.

Vague Report That Members of the Expedition to Settle With the Indians of the North Land Are Drowned—Hudson Bay Commissioner at Winnipeg Has Only Vague Press Reports—Carried $250,000 Cash.

Ottawa, Sept. 20.—Reports have reached Ottawa from Prince Albert to the effect that J. A. J. McKenna, Indian treaty party, had met disaster on Buffalo Lake, in Keewatin.

One story has it that the party were in a canoe, which upset, and three lives were lost.

Enquiry at the Indian Department yesterday, however, elicited the information that no corroboration of the disaster had been received.

Immediately upon hearing the rumor the Department communicated with the Hudson Bay commissioner at Winnipeg, who set his agents at work, and he reports that he has no information beyond vague press reports.

Had $250,000 in Cash.

The party number in all about 25 men, but these included nearly 20 speculators, who accompanied Inspector McKenna for the purpose of buying up the land scrip, as it was handed over to the half-breeds. The inspector also carried a large sum of money for payment to the Indians, and in all the party is said to have had about $250,000 in cash when it left Prince Albert for the north.

The farther point to be reached was about 500 miles north of that place, and the party were returning, and had considerable business to transact during the journey.

Enveloped in Flames.

Toronto, Sept. 20.—Mrs. William Hunter, age about 50, residing at 718 Spadina avenue, was badly burned last night. She was housecleaning and using gasoline on the beds. Her clothes had become saturated with the vapors and when she struck a match she was enveloped in flames in a moment. Her husband threw a blanket around her and dragged her to the bathroom. Most of her clothing was burned off her. She was then taken to Grace Hospital. Mrs. Hunter's condition is critical. She has a family of seven children.

Falls Into Dam.

London, Sept. 20.—Francis Beechy, a 14-year-old lad, who resides in West London, was drowned while playing on a raft below Blackfriar's dam yesterday afternoon. The lad was subjected to epileptic fits.

Freights Crash on Siding.

Galt, Sept. 20.—In a collision between two C. P. R. freight trains, Nos. 59 and 64, at the Dumfries siding early yesterday, Engineer Coleman of Toronto Junction was so seriously injured that his recovery is doubtful. He is in Woodstock Hospital.

Woman Caught Fire From Gas Stove.

Windsor, Sept. 20.—Mrs. Morris Kovinsky was probably fatally burned at her home Tuesday evening. Her dress caught fire from gas plates. She ran screaming from the house, but the fire was not extinguished until the clothing had been burned almost off her body.

Fatally Burned.

Stratford, Sept. 20.—Mrs. Jean Armstrong McGirr of Stratford was fatally burned while preparing dinner at Nanaimo, B. C., where she has been staying some time.

Drinks Poison by Mistake.

Owen Sound, Sept. 20.—A young man, aged about 21, a son of William McLellan, Amabel Township, died Tuesday from poison.

Not feeling well upon rising in the morning, his mother gave him a dose from a bottle, which she supposed contained cascara, and also took a dose herself. Shortly afterwards she discovered that in mistake they had taken from a bottle which contained aconite.

The father took the son in to a doctor at Allenford, who did not anticipate any danger, and they returned home. The young man grew worse and expired shortly after reaching home.

The mother is still very ill.

NEW ONTARIO TRAGEDY.

David Craig While Cleaning His Gun Was Accidentally Shot.

Cobalt, Sept. 20.—The body of David Craig, a former resident in Calabogie, Renfrew County, passed through here yesterday, for burial in his old home. Deceased had been prospecting a few miles north of Long Lake, forty miles north of Cobalt, and last Saturday, while cleaning his gun, was shot in the hand, the ball passing up the hand through the wrist, tearing the arteries terribly, and up into the forearm, coming out near the shoulder.

Blood poisoning set in and Tuesday at noon he died.

Killed Instantly.

Thessalon, Sept. 20.—Milton Leach, aged 22, was accidentally shot near his home Monday evening. He had borrowed a gun from a neighbor and was on his way to return it. He must have passed through an opening in the fence and drawn the gun after him, as he was found by the fence with the gun still in his hand, and the whole charge had penetrated the forehead, causing instant death.

SCOTCH EXPRESS WRECKED.

Ten Killed and Sixteen Injured at Grantham, England.

London, Sept. 20.—The crowded Scotch Express train on the Great Northern Railway, leaving London Tuesday night, was wrecked outside of Grantham at midnight. At least ten persons were killed and 16 injured.

The train should have stopped at Grantham, but failed to do so. Shortly after passing the station, the train left the rails and jumped a bridge. The engine and several coaches were dashed over the embankment, the engine turning turtle. Several coaches immediately took fire.

There are many passengers beneath the debris.

The brakes failed to act.

Quebec, Sept. 21.—The first cargo, comprising 600 tons of 80-pound steel rails for the new transcontinental railway, have arrived from Sydney, N. S., by steamer.

Death of A. J. MacKenzie.

Hamilton, Sept. 21.—Yesterday afternoon A. J. MacKenzie, surveyor of customs, died at his residence. He was born in Scotland in 1828, and came to Canada just 50 years ago. He located in Brantford first and afterwards came to Hamilton. He had been in the customs house for nearly a quarter of a century. A widow and three sons and three daughters survive him.

Voliva is General Overseer.

Chicago, Sept. 21.—Judge Landis in the Federal Court decided yesterday that there were no irregularities in the recent election of Wilbur G. Voliva as general overseer of the Zion Church, and that he would hereafter recognize Voliva as the head of the church, and he directed that the receiver appointed by the court do likewise.

Hundreds of Men Leave City.

Winnipeg, Sept. 21.—One of the most serious questions which has developed out of Winnipeg building strike is that hundreds of men are leaving the city daily. If the strike was ended to-morrow it would be impossible to secure men to go ahead with the work. At present operations are completely tied up.

Arson Charge Fails.

Beamsville, Sept. 21.—John A. Graham, who was accused of setting fire to an old blacksmith shop owned by Linus Woolverton, was acquitted by the magistrate. It was shown that he had uninsured furniture in the building.

Cuba's Life As a Nation.

Hangs In the Balance and Taft Warns of Annexation.

U.S. Secretary of War, However, Believes That When Patriotic Cubans Are Brought Face to Face With the Danger of Losing Independence Forever They Will Agree to Concessions—Fighting Men are Quiet.

Havana, Sept. 21.—The leaders of the revolutionary movement have called all the generals in the field to a conference in Havana. They are safe from molestation during the truce.

The taking of testimony was continued yesterday, but a second day of conference with the leaders of the factions in the Cuban conflict has not enable Secretary of War Taft and Assistant Secretary Bacon to announce any plan for compromising the difficulty.

So strenuous are the appeals of both the Liberal and Moderate party leaders that the situation becomes increasingly complicated as the negotiations proceed. However, Secretary Taft said last night that he believed that when they are brought face to face with the danger of losing independence forever all patriotic Cubans will be willing to make concessions.

Mr. Taft has made it clear that the United States is not seeking to exercise control over the island or any of its affairs; but he has quoted President Roosevelt's letter to Minister Quesada to the effect that the United States has a duty which it cannot shirk. To those whom he has met in conference Mr. Taft has said that now is the time to decide whether they would have Cuba live as a nation.

No reports of disturbances anywhere on the island were received yesterday. Cienfuegos is suffering from a water famine on account of destruction of the waterworks at Jicotea by the insurgents.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

Montreal, Sept. 21.—Helen Dobouch, a Polish woman, was found guilty of manslaughter yesterday by the Court of King's Bench. Sentence will be pronounced in a few days. Mrs. Dobouch fled after the death of her four-year-old stepson, who died as the result of ill-treatment.

NOTICE OF WAR IMPERATIVE.

Congress At Ghent Debates Questions of International Law.

Ghent, Belgium, Sept. 21.—The congress of the Institute of the international law yesterday debated questions arising out of the Russo-Japanese war. On the subject of the necessity for formal declaration of war the following was adopted:

1. Hostilities cannot commenve without an unequivocal preliminary notice.
2. Notice must take the form either of a declaration of war pure and simple or of an ultimatum duly notified to the adversary by the state intending to commence war.
3. Hostilities cannot commence until after expiration of a delay sufficient to establish the rule to have been complied with.

COMMANDER SPAIN SUED.

His Wife Claims Allowance Not Paid Since Separation.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—Commander Spain of the Dominion service, will be a defendant in the high court here before Judge Anglin next week. W. Almon, barrister, Halifax, on behalf of Mary Beatrice Spain, the defandant's wife, understood to be living in New York, is suing for $1,260.

She asserts that since their separation, in January, 1906, she was to get an annual allowance of $840. She also further claims $4,250 alleged to be owing, as she paid insurance permiums for her husband and lent him money. She asserts that the latter transaction meant $6,000, and that only $1,750 was paid. She wants the balance with interest.

BURGLAR FIRES TWO SHOTS.

Bank of Commerce Branch In Northwest Is Robbed.

Kinistino, Sask., Sept. 21.—At eight o'clock Tuesday evening the Bank of Commerce was robbed in the absence of the manager. The assistant, Hickman, thought he heard a noise and came quickly downstairs, making for the safe.

Immediately he was fired upon, by a man in the shadow. Hickman made a plunge to grab the assailant, but received another shot, just grazing his left temple.

The robber escaped with about $3.700.

7,000 DROWNED.

Governor of Hong Kong Report of Typhoon Victims.

London, Sept. 21.—Sir Matthew Nathan, Governor of Hong Kong, has sent the following cablegram to the Colonial Office:—"There is strong evidence that Bishop Hoare of Hong Kong was drowned. The loss of life among the Chinese will probably amount to seven thousand."

Sloop a Total Wreck.

Hong Kong, Sept. 21.—The British reserve sloop Phoenix, which was reported ashore Wednesday, is a total wreck.

INSURANCE SWINDLE.

Body of Mexican Peon Passed as That of Insured.

Mexico City, Sept. 21.—Great crowds are attending the trial of the 17 men charged with swindling New York insurance companies out of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In one case the body of a peon was secured, it was alleged, dressed in good clothing and publicly buried, everyone supposing it to be the body of a man named Mendez, insured for $15,000.

The money was paid over to Mendez's brother.

CONFERENCE OF PREMIERS.

Hon. Mr. Whitney and Attorney-General Foy Will Attend.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—There was a protracted Cabinet meeting yesterday, principally devoted to discussing increased provincial subsidies and other matters likely to come up at the interprovincial conference to be held at Ottawa on Oct. 8.

It was decided that the province should be represented by Premier Whitney and Attorney-General Foy One or two other Ministers may also attend.

Express Package Stolen.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—The disappearance of a package containing $1,000 from a safe of a Dominion Express car en route from Owen Sound to Toronto, on Wednesday night, is the cause of considerable excitement among the officials. Fred Girvin, aged about 25, who lives at 685 Markham street, the messenger on the train, has been temporarily laid off until investigation has been made.

"Business Propositions."

Were the Laurier Government to go on with their wharves and breakwaters as simply "business propositions," there would be no need for complaint. But this is not done.

It is chiefly at election times that these "improvements" are trotted out as a bid for votes. The thing is consequently very much overdone. To satisfy the ridings a great deal more money has to be spent than is called for on "business" grounds. The Disraeli wharf in Quebec is a case in point. It was built across a meadow where no navigation ever comes.

The coasts of the Maritime Provinces are dotted with such unnecessary works, to which the Hon. Mr. Prevost, of the Provincial Government in Quebec drew attention in a late speech at Lachute. He said "he had seen on the Baie des Chaleurs, on his voyage down there, places where $20,000 and more had been spent on wharves that were not in use, where breakwaters had been built for three or four fishermen."

A sample of how these useless public works are apportioned is given in a letter from Ottawa.

When Mr. Marcil, the member for Bonaventure, was last seeking election, he circulated among the voters along the Baie des Chaleurs a statement showing the amount of money he had caused to be spent for breakwaters and other works along that coast. Nobody on his behalf claimed that these outlays were needed or useful. The basis of Mr. Marcil's demand for re-election was the amount of money that he had circulated among the people. At the same time he pleaded that as he had done so much in his first term he might be expected to bring into the county a great deal more public money in the next four or five years.

Probably the wharves of which Mr. Prevost complains include the Grande Vallee structure, which has cost $57,488 and serves no other purpose than the convenience and profit of a single private lumbering firm.

It is refreshing to find these expenditures, which were condemned, by Conservatives in Parliament, and which were defended by Ministers and their supporters by speech and vote, now placed in their true light by a leading Liberal politician.

Just now the Minister of Public Works, Hon. Mr. Hyman, is in East Elgin peddling out wharves and breakwaters as the price of votes. He says it is "business." Yes, the business of the Laurier politician to thus traffic in the popular franchise with the public money.

Let the voters in East Elgin take the Minister at his word, and treat it as "business" only, in which no political compliments are due.

A Wonderful Old man.

General Booth, of the Salvation Army, is one of the men of the hour. To a greater extent than any of his contemporaries he has apparently mastered the problem of remaining a young old man. His amazing activity at the age of seventy-seven is exciting constant admiration. The Montreal Witness notes that the other day the General was at Bath, where he spoke in the aggregate for nearly four hours, and thence he drove to Weston-super-Mare and repeated the performance. A day or two before he drove in his motor-car to the birthplace of Shakespeare at Stratford-on-Avon, wrote his name in the visitors' book and outside of the house waved a small Salvation Army flag and gave the place his blessing. The mode of life of all men who live in good health beyond the Psalmist's span is naturally peculiarly interesting to their fellows. What do they eat and drink, how long do they sleep and when, what exercise do they take, and so forth? These are questions in the answers to which we all feel concerned. General Booth's latest motor tour began at Inverness, and continued southward. In the course of it he dined with many hosts, including the Mayor of Hanley. Every host received the following instructions regarding the preparation of the Salvationist leader's vegetarian dinner: "Take two small carrots, one turnip, and a small Spanish onion, cut up fine; add heaped tablespoonful of pearl barley, and boil till tender before serving. Add little chopped parsley and piece of butter size of walnut. Serve with crisp toast. A few green peas added to this soup is an improvement. The instructions continue that the General takes a little rest after his midday meal, and would, if convenient, retire to his bedroom for that purpose. A room from which the light can be shut is preferred for the nap, together with a soft bed." It is interesting to recall that Maltby, who did his greatest work at a very old age, preferred a hard bed—a soldier's pallet. He was as sparing in his fare as is General Booth. It would seem that, with extremely few exceptions, given a sound constitution to start with, a frugal, virtuous life is the secret of longevity. There are many notable cases of weaklings in youth who have lived to a happy old age through choosing the simple life.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Really, you know, we feel like moving a vote of censure on the opera house management for not having seats outside for the people who were there to hear the Black Dike Band — for nothing. It's a poor way to encourage musical tastes in people — to make 'em stand up for a couple of hours on a hot night. Of course there was plenty of room inside, but you wouldn't expect father to bust open the baby's bank to pay for a seat, would you?

Port Hope Teachers Signed Round Robin

Port Hope, Sept. 20. — Owing to dissatisfaction among certain lady teachers on the staff of the public schools here Port Hope was threatened with a strike and the consequent temporary demoralization of its educational institutions. Three of the ladies recently received an increase in salary, and the Assistant Principal, Mr. Robert Gillies, also received an increase. Dissatisfaction on the part of the remainder of the staff culminated in a round robin being addressed to the trustee board yesterday, stating their grievances and asking for similar recognition. The demand for an answer, favorable or otherwise, before Monday morning next led to an emergency meeting of the Board this evening, at which the demand of the fair petitioners was recognized by an increase of twenty-five dollars per annum, commencing October 1st.

A Ratepayer Complains,

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly favor me by allowing a small space in your daily paper? In the early part of this spring a petition was handed in to His Worship the Mayor, asking the Council to take into their kind consideration the grading and putting stone on it so as to make it possible for the daily traffic on Meyers St., commencing at Bettes St. to Lingham St. Today the Street Surveyor makes a start to comply with the petition. No grading done; the stone is dumped on the street, with orders to the two men to spread it 12 feet wide. This means that the surface water from the fall rains will lay at the front of the ratepayers' doors, as it has done previously.

Yours respectfully,
M. D. J. HAY.

What Part ?

What particular part of the nerve centres should we expect to have the greatest influence in affecting and controlling the general nervous system?

Reasonably it would be the largest and most sensitive. Well now, of all the centres in the nervous system, the largest most delicate sense, the sense most constantly in use, the largest brain "gray-matter" area is that of SIGHT.

For an average of 16 hours daily continuously, the feeling in the visual centres is constant. No other sense in the nerve centres is capable of such continued endurance.

With the proper glasses this severe drain upon the brain and nerves is prevented from causing a breakdown in the general health.

Historic Isle Of St. Helena

BRITISH GARRISON, KEPT THERE SINCE NAPOLEON'S TIME, TO BE WITHDRAWN.

One of the most widely known of the smaller islands of the world is famous St. Helena. For six years the great Napoleon was a prisoner on this lonely rock in the mid-Atlantic, and there the Little Corporal of Corsica, the First Consul of France, the Emperor of the French, the indomitable man who made the march to Moscow, and who led the eagles of the French nation to defeat at Waterloo, laid down his life in weary exile. There his body was afterward removed to the tomb in Paris, which is yearly visited by all the tourists who throng the streets of the gay capital of France, still stands, almost the only memorial of the man who changed the face of Europe.

When St. Helena was on the route of vessels bound for India, as well as those for South Africa, it was visited by many persons, drawn thither by the glamor of a mighty name. But since the opening of the Suez Canal changed the sea route to India and China and fast steamships to Cape Town found it not worth while to halt where there are few good harbor facilities, St. Helena has become more and more neglected. The last use to which it was put was as a place of imprisonment for several thousand of the followers of Oom Paul when the British-Boer war in South Africa was in progress, just as others were sent to Bermuda and to India, but now it is proposed to withdraw the British garrison, and when this is done even the use of the island as a prison station will cease. The garrison is to go away next month.

HISTORY OF THE ISLAND.

St. Helena lies 1,200 miles off the coast of Portuguese West Africa, and 1,800 miles east of South America, and there is no land above water nearer to it than Ascension Island, which is 800 miles away. It lies 15 degrees south of the equator and the climate is modified by sea breezes and is moderate and equable. The island takes its name from the fact that it was discovered on St. Helena's Day, 1501, by a Portuguese navigator, Joao do Nova, but he did not make his discovery known until it had been rediscovered a quarter of a century later. The Dutch made the first settlement thereon in 1645, but it was taken from them by the English and granted to the British East India Company in 1657, but the possession passed again to the Dutch later and again to the English, and this was thrice repeated. Finally the English gained permanent possession of it and there were several thousand colonists who went thither. They replaced the indigenous flora with many exotic plants which flourish there. The great variety of indigenous plants, many of them peculiar to the island, practically have disappeared. As a Crown colony, St. Helena is an apanage of the British sovereign, but its value has so decreased since it was taken out of the tide of travel to India, China and Japan that it is practically worthless. The fine forests which once covered the hills have been in the main cut off and the farms are chiefly sheep pastures.

St. Helena is of volcanic origin and the high hills are about 2,800 feet above the sea. The island is about ten and a half miles long and six broad. It contains an area of forty-seven square miles. The coast is mostly rocky and precipitous, some of the cliffs being 2,000 feet high, on which the ocean surges and strikes with a tremendous roar in time of storms. There is only one good harbor—in the northwest—and here the capital, Jamestown, a place of about 2,500 inhabitants, is built.

HOUSE WHERE NAPOLEON LIVED

Three miles from Jamestown, in Longwood, where in a farm house Napoleon passed his years of exile, far from France and his loved troops, guarded by English soldiers and living in practical solitude from 1815 to May 5, 1821, when death ended his glittering and sombre career. When first made a prisoner by the allied forces in 1814, he was sent to Elba, off the coast of Sardinia, but he managed to elude the vigilance of his guards and escape, to again lead the forces of France, but not to victory, for Wellington and Blucher defeated him in that fatal fight in Belgium in 1815, about which so much has been written.

One of the most famous of palindromes, or lines which read forward and backward the same, like the names of Hannah or Anna is this referring to Napoleon Bonaparte, "Able was I ere I saw Elba."

The result of his escape from Elba was that the English decided to take their world-famed prisoner so far away that he could not again escape to cause trouble in Europe, and he was placed on the African isle.

A Governor and a council control St. Helena, with the 4,000 people, but the majority of those able to get away have gone in recent years, and with the withdrawal of the British garrison many more are expected to go, as much of the interest in the place will be gone. Those who go to Cape Colony, the nearest British possession, must have at least $500 apiece, or they will not be allowed to land, and as there is little ready money in St. Helena, it is thought that many will be deterred from going to South Africa from this cause. There is a cable station at St. Helena, connecting with both London and Cape Town, and it is a coaling station for the English war fleets. In the days of the whaling industry it was much resorted to for wood and water.

Since the time of Napoleon the most distinguished person living on St. Helena was the Boer General Cronje, who was seen last year at Coney Island in the mimic representation of the Boer war. He was released at the close of hostilities and came to this country at the time of the St. Louis Exposition.

While the name of St. Helena has the accent in the penultimate or syllable before the last, the city of Helena, capital of Montana, has the accent on the antepenul and is pronounced Hel'ena.

VISITED BY THOUSANDS.

The last home of Napoleon and his tomb in St. Helena were visited by many thousands of persons every year when vessels were in the habit of calling at Jamestown. After Napoleon had been defeated at Waterloo and all hope to his re-establishing the glory of his empire had faded, he sought to escape to this country, but he found the French ports so well guarded that when he reached La Rochelle to embark he decided to surrender to Captain Maitland, of the British warship Bellerophon, on whose vessel he was received with high honors. He wrote to the Prince Regent of France, that he had "committed himself to the protection of the laws of the most powerful, the most persevering and the most generous of his foes."

He was taken to England, but his request to be allowed to remain in that country was denied, and he was taken to St. Helena, accompanied by his faithful friend, Bertrand, and a few others, who refused to desert him in his captivity. The following year Sir Hudson Lowe, a British soldier, was made governor of the Island, and there were almost constant disputes between him and Napoleon, who was morose and moody most of the time, and could not be roused out of himself by his companions. Cancer of the stomach, which killed his father and afterward two of his sisters, attacked him and he had much physical suffering until death set him free. His will disposed of his fortune among his relatives and friends, and expressed the wish that his body might "repose on the banks of the Seine, among the people he had loved so well." This desire remained ungratified for nearly a score of years, but in 1840, by consent of the British Government and under the direction of Louis Philippe, of France, the faithful Bertrand had the tomb under a willow tree at Longwood opened, the winding sheet unrolled and the face of the hero of Austerlitz and Jena exposed to view. The body had been embalmed so well that the features were perfectly preserved, the countenance was serene, and there was the semblance of a smile on the lips, as since depicted in world-famous statues. On December 15, 1840, the body was reinterred, in the presence of hundreds of thousands of spectators, in the great sarcophagus beneath the dome of the Hotel des Invalides, in Paris, where it now lies. But the solitary rock in the South Atlantic, nearly midway between the two hemispheres, is inseparably connected with the name of the mighty conqueror and the modern master in the art of war.

What Children's Curiosity Did.

Port Arthur, Sept. 20. — Idle curiosity of a boy and girl caused a serious accident here this afternoon by the premature explosion of a charge of dynamite in a sewer trench on Wilson street. The dynamite had been placed and wires from a battery attached. Logs were placed over the hole, and it was while the men were adjusting the tie chains around these that the children happened to pass the battery. The girl raised the lever, and her companion thoughtlessly shoved it down. Then a terrible explosion followed, sending the logs and fragments of rock in all directions. One of the men had his arm shattered and another man and two children standing near by were painfully but not seriously hurt by being struck by flying debris.

Fromer Resident Dead

Brockville Times; After suffering for a period of fifteen years from the effects of a stroke of paralysis, Mrs. John Leacock died yesterday afternoon about five o'clock at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ezekiel Shipman, Blake St., aged 69 years.

Deceased was born in Belleville, her maiden name being Miss Marion McColl. She married John Leacock, a blacksmith who died eight years ago in Arnprior. Mrs. Leacock, after her husband's death settled in Jasper and in 1901 came to Brockville and made her home with her daughter. She leaves three children, Mrs. E. Shipman, Brockville; Mrs. Huffman, Jasper, and Arthur H. Leacock, Smith's Falls. Also two sisters, Mrs. Leeming, of Norwood, Ont., and Mrs. Parker, of Cass City, Mich. In religion she was a Methodist.

The body will be taken to Smith's Falls to-morrow afternoon for interment.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

BASEBALL.

Maple Leafs Lost.

The Picton Times thus chortles over the recent defeat of a local team in that town:

"Six consecutive wins and no defeats! That's the way to sum up in a word the history of Picton's baseball team for the season of 1906. And don't you think yourself it's worth mentioning?

"It's a long time since we could boast a team that has achieved such a notable lot of successes and the town should feel proud that its name has floated on the banner of victory in so many well contested games.

"The latest seekers after the Pets' scalps were the "Maple Leafs," of Belleville. They came down on Saturday, with Pitcher Draycott, to make our fellows look like "make-believers," but unfortunately their ambitions failed to attain success for them. Currie's invincibles were averse to losing a game so late in the season, so they went in and hammered Draycott harder than he's been hit all season. This, coupled with excellent fielding on the part of the locals, enabled the latter to make the score read 6-3, at the finish of the ninth.

"Collier pitched a very clever game and, except in the ninth, was never in serious trouble. In that innings Belleville collected three safeties and a couple of runs resulted, but Bobbie was equal to the occasion and saved any further scoring by fanning the fourth man up.

"The features of the game were Gordon's pick-up of a sizzling grounder between first and second; young George Williamson's catch of a long fly, which would have been dangerous otherwise; and the fielding of Belleville's second baseman.

"It was a fast, clean game and except for a few raw decisions of the excited umpire, there was nothing but excellent sport for the large crowd of spectators who availed themselves of the chance to see a good exhibition of baseball.

"Picton intends going to Belleville next Tuesday for the return match."

ORONHYATEKHA.

TORONTO PAPER PRINTS A MORE OR LESS CLEVER PEN PICTURE OF A FORMER RESIDENT OF THIS CITY.

Toronto News; To begin with, he has a notable, a distinguished appearance. Rather above middle height, with a fine up-standing, well-proportioned big body, a large and well-shaped head, Oronhyatekha has an air of commanding dignity which fits him well. His head is crowned with a wealth of lustreless iron grey hair, wavy and rather long. The forehead is square and broad, and with a few wrinkles. The eyes are deep-set, large and possess some peculiar quality which at once attracts. In repose Dr. Oronhyatekha has the calm benevolent eye which pertained to the Brothers Cheeryble, and as he glances at you over the top of his gold-rimmed "specs" you feel as though you were in the presence of one of the Elder Statesmen or of some philanthropic old soul who endows soup kitchens. But, let him be roused by insinuation, or statement reflecting on the I. O. F., and there comes a look of puzzled reproach and of immense compassion for the wonderful ignorance of all who do not belong to the Order. Then he gently, firmly, but again and always gently, chides the inquisitive counsel and proceeds to read statements which show that the I.O.F. has all the virtues of the Canada Life and many more to which the Senator's well-beloved company can never attain. Mark you, these are only to convince the doubting Thomas. He, Oronhyatekha, never had a doubt in his life. He is of the type of man who, having made up his mind, is certain his course is right because it is his course.

Knowing his record as a man who does things, one would naturally have high expectations of Oronhyatekha's nose. It ought to be of the early Roman type, with a pronounced hump and of large and noteworthy appearance. Well, it is no such thing. It is an ungracious thing to complain, but we were really disappointed in the genial doctor's nose. It might belong to anybody. It might belong even to Mr. Fleming, but it might not be safe to say so. We feel inclined to enter a mild protest against this organ.

Another quarrel we have. Oronhyatekha's upper lip is absurdly unmistakably Milesian. Shure it must 'av come sthraight from Cork's own town. It is long, lengthy, drawn out, and is bounded on the east and west by two deep wrinkles, which only emphasize the character of what lies between. One encounters just such a lip on a leader of th' bhoys in de Sixt." As every wise man's son doth know, there are some qualities which are common to the Irishman and the Indian. Under some circumstances, we have heard Irishmen called Indians. And if Oronhyatekha has stolen the silver speech, the bold and fearless view and qualities which make other men glad to follow where he leads, it is not odd that he should acquire the upper lip which is a common product of County Clare or Tipperary.

The mouth is firm and clear cut, as of one who is accustomed to making many and momentous decisions, and who is accustomed to obedience. But it turns up at the corners, for with all his work and responsibility the big doctor is a genial soul who loveth a good story, after a good dinner.

His voice is low and quiet, and his speech is deliberate. You could hardly imagine him excited. The ancestors of the noble red man whose littlest finger swayeth the I.O.F., were not incapable of elevation of the spirit. If Oronhyatekha had lived in those stirring days, he would have reclined on a deerskin nearby the victim's stake. While the young braves, toyed with the Huron spy, Oronhyatekha would be enjoying a pemmican sandwich and meditating on his next big speech in the council of the tribe.

The copper-hued epidermis which was his heritage from his race has faded to the pleasant tan which the summer girl acquires on the second day's treatment of sun on a wet arm. The cheek bones are high. Altogether there is a touch of the kind of face Phidias would have drawn had he been a Mohawk.

Oronhyatekha affects the clerical choker and the white tie inseparable from the "hard shell" Baptist parson of the South. His index finger rises and falls with the cadence of his speech, and is just as active as when it pulled triggers on the first Wimbledon rifle team in 1871.

Oronhyatekha is to the I. O. F. what Senator Cox is to the Canada Life—its best asset. He is so convinced of the virtues of his Order that unconsciously he sways the mind of his auditor. He has the peculiar force and power which inheres in the man who believes in himself and his mission. But if he sees a little joke, not all the solemnity which doth hedge about a Royal Commission can restrain a wholesome twinkle and a twitch of that Irish upper lip. While Mr. Foster sits back with basilisk gaze fixed on Mr. Shepley, Oronhyatekha sits unruffled and unmoved, save mayhap a flutter of an eyelid at his solicitor when he has scored a point.

LICENSE DISTRICT OF WEST HASTINGS.

Notice is hereby given that Emery Cooley, of the Town of Trenton, has made application for permission to transfer his tavern license for the premises known as the Aberdeen Hotel in Trenton to Mr. T. H. Gall, of the City of Toronto, and that the application will be considered at a meeting of the Board of License Commissioners, to be held at the Town of Trenton on the 5th day of October, 1906, at the hour of two o'clock p.m.

All persons interested will govern themselves accordingly.

The "Shivaree."

A Western paper thinks it high time that the "charivari" was being relegated to the past as a relic of "barbarism." The very idea! Perhaps the "charivari" should go, but surely not the "shiveree!" To be sure, according to the dictionary, the "charivari is not altogether a thing of joy—"a burlesque or mocking serenade, produced by the beating of cans and kettles, mingled with groans and hisses, and expressive of pleasure toward those to whom it is directed." In France, it is said, during the middle ages, persons contracting second nuptials were assailed by the "charivari" in token of popular disapproval. But however it may have been in France during the middle ages, and however it may be with the "charivari," everyone who has ever lived in a small town knows that the "shiveree" is a highly respected institution, conferring pleasure on both the shiveree-ers and the shiverees. If a bride and groom were not shivereed, they would not be considered properly "launched on the broad sea of life." In fact, the more shivering the "shiveree," the more popular is the happy pair shown to be. The "shiveree" is the way the small town has of showing its affection and esteem for the newly wedded.

Joker Nearly Died.

Cincinnati, Sept. 19. — It became known to-day that Millionaire John J. Ryan, former plunger, in an attempt to frighten his wife at the fall festival a few nights ago, came near suffocating in a coffin.

In the Chateau des Mortes, a restaurant, coffins serve as tables and skulls as sugar bowls. The lights are always turned low, and occasionally out altogether. It was during one of the periods when the lights were out that Ryan conceived the joke of crawling into one of the coffins.

Just after Ryan had laid himself out one of the waiters passed and, seeing the lid of the coffin disarranged screwed it down. Ryan soon began kicking for want of air, and the patrons of the chateau, hearing strange noises in the coffin, fled, all but Mrs. Ryan, who was seeking her husband.

Finally Ryan poked his fist through the glass top and followed with his head. Mrs. Ryan fainted and became so ill she had to be taken home in a carriage.

The Piano Strike

All hope, says a Toronto paper, of a friendly settlement of the piano makers' strike has been abandoned. Even makers of musical instruments now and then prove to be a discordant element. It would be well, however, to note that harmony exists among the large number of strikers in the present movement, even if the employers are a little out of tune. If the latter manipulate enough wires to get outsiders on the string, they can make selections therefrom and play a waiting game. This may be the key to the whole situation. No one has been instrumental, however, in satisfactorily sounding the bosses on this score. The strikers claim they have sharp grievances, and that all overtures have fallen flat, so they just waltzed out. They will not march back this time until those who hold the upper hand yield to their touch for more bank notes. The treble (trouble) is not likely to reach a melodious finale, nor end in sonorous expressions of gratitude. At present things are in a rather staccato state. The piano workers are after a crescendo scale—not a heavy one. They do not desire treble the pay formerly ac-chored them, nor is their demand equal to a forte per cent. advance. They will not work for solo wages as they cannot duet and sing the song of good times — a composition, which, in the present passage, would be entirely out of rhythm. This is the tone of their action in this case, and they air not going to be so soft as to yield. What else could they then do but two-step out.

Little Baby Five Days Without Food

New York, Sept. 20. — Weak and emaciated from starvation, Johnny Boyle, 14 months old, was found today beside the corpse of his mother, Mrs. Catharine Bynam, a widow, in the kitchen of her small apartments in the rear of a Brooklyn building. Evidently she had been dead five days. The baby evidently had spent hours of intense suffering, as, having eaten all the food in the room that he could reach, he had been forced by the gnawings of hunger to chew the sawdust contained in a toy horse. The floor was strewn with broken dishes, and with kitchen utensils, and panes in the kitchen windows within striking distance of his arms were shattered in his struggles for food. The little one was taken to a hospital at once. It is believed he will recover.

Mrs. Bynam's body and the child were found by her sister, who came by chance to make a visit. Mrs. Bynam had probably dropped dead from heart disease. The baby had been an inmate of a charitable institution and had been adopted by her.

TIMELY TOPICS.

WHEN COMP'NY COMES.

Sometimes my sister Mabel, who's Grown up, looks almost like a fright,
She wears a pair of ma's old shoes
Because her own are always tight.
She does her hair up in a knot
No bigger than a chicken's egg,
And doesn't call it "limb" when what
She means is nothing but a leg.
But, jim-mun-nee! you ought to see
How she can change! She's pretty near
As sweet as any girl could be
When comp'ny's here.

Pa often growls about the way
The meat is cooked, and kicks because
He has so many bills to pay;
And when the coffee's cold he jaws,
And if he has to hunt his socks,
Or some one's used his brush or comb,
It's horrible the way he knocks
And darkens our once happy home.
But, jim-mun-nee! you ought to see
How quick his grouches disappear,
And how dee-lightful he can be,
When comp'ny's here.

Sometimes, when ma is feelin' glum
And her and me have had a spat,
She slaps my ears and makes things hum,
And says that I'm a little brat.
One day she told me to my face
I'd drive her ravin' crazy yet,
And chased me all around the place
Because a pitcher got upset.
But, gee! how lovely she can be!
I'ts "Willie, pet," and "Willie, dear,"
And not a pinch or slap for me—
When comp'ny's here.

I s'pose some time I'll have to die,
Because all people must, they say,
And have a home up in the sky,
And get a golden harp to play.
There won't be no cold coffee then
And Mabel's shoes won't hurt her feet;
And even in the mornings, when
She has no switch on, she'll be sweet.
Oh, gee! how long it seems to me
"Forever" is! But I won't care,
Because they'll always probably
Be comp'ny there.

The deplorable prevalence of rascality in American financial circles reveals deep-seated moral disease. If the old ideals are passing society must have other means of self-defence. Honesty is essential to the existence of the modern commercial mechanism, and it must be maintained in its fit and proper place. We must expel the dishonest as some birds expel the diseased member of the flock.

A fountain of soap bubbles is proving a great attraction in England, says Technical World Magazine for September. A machine is arranged so that 20,000 soap bubbles a minute may be blown with coal gas and sent up into the air. The beautiful effect in colors when the sun shines on this fountain may well be imagined. At night artificial lightning and the use of colored fires add to the beauty and interest. The soap bubble is also suggested as a substitute for pigeons or glass balls in markmanship contests.

A Baltimore priest, as noted some days ago, has just received from the French Academy a gold medal for his invention of a detachable buckle, which he says he invented "to obviate the bad habit of cursing," which he had observed in people when manipulating buckles on their garments. He deserves that medal. Some day a benefactor of his kind will invent non-swear-atable cuff and collar buttons and an instrument wherewith a woman can do up her back hair and button her dress up to the back without danger of getting a kink in her neck or dislocating her arms and some of the commandments, and then the race will enjoy some happiness.

A correspondent of the New York World who recently left Japan is responsible for a somewhat startling guess regarding the danger to which Japan is exposed by the development of militarism. He says the army has become everything in Japan, the civil power nothing. He asserts: "The world need not be surprised to see Japan return to a military shogunate and the Emperor reduced again to the position of a powerless religious figurehead." Of course, the problem of disbanding a great army and returning it to the peaceful pursuits of civil life always involves certain perils. But a year and a half of war usually is enough to make any army quite willing to take a rest. Pending further developments, it will be safe to believe that the World's correspondent has drawn very heavily on his imagination. Nor do the reports of popular demonstrations in Tokio on account of the treaty afford sufficient justification for such a depressing prediction.

Ways of Scotch Justice.

One often hears comments passed upon the administration of the law by local magistrates, but while it may sometimes leave a little to be desired it is not so glaringly crude as it often was in earlier times.

It is on record that the Montrose bailie, after hearing the evidence in a breach of the peace case, fined both the accused and all the witnesses "half a croon."

The witnesses naturally resented this decision, but the bailie, with his mind made up, refused to budge from the position he had taken up and defended it with the remark:

"It disna matter; he had nae business there. Half a croon apaice."

The same bailie was trying another case in which a difficulty arose regarding the nonappearance of a witness. The court was informed that the witness was defunct. The magistrate, who was a self-made and highly successful business man and who had gained elevation to the bench solely on account of his command of "siller," had never heard that particular form applied to death and, thinking it was a legal phrase, called out in commanding tones, "Bring forward the defunct!" which brought down the house.

FREAKS OF THE LAVA.

At one house, which had been entirely surrounded by the flood, but not destroyed, one saw people, on top of the mass of lava, entering the upper windows with a ladder and bringing forth their household goods to transport them to a place of safety. One vineyard was surrounded on three sides by this dividing current, and it was possible to walk into it among the lines of trimmed vines and to perceive the fire still glowing in the towering walls of lava on each side. The people attributed this remarkable phenomenon to the miraculous intervention of their Madonna, "Our Lady of the Snows," with whose sacred image they had confronted the all devouring monster sweeping implacably down on their apparently doomed homes.

Step by step the priests and the faithful, singing the litany, retreated as the awful flood swept on, and still the sound of singing and prayer rose above the fearful roar of the torrent and the thunder of the mountain above, belching forth from the central crater fiery bombs and enormous swirls of cinder, sand and smoke, which rose to great heights. Yard by yard the lava swept onward. Now a palatial villa would be surrounded by the torrent, crushed down and disappear in smoke; now a weeping peasant would see his little cottage and vineyard, his all, go under in an instant.

One poor woman was thus watching the fate of her earthly belongings from a little eminence when a smaller crater came roaring forth at her very feet. She turned to flee, fell, rolled to the bottom of the little hill, and the next moment the lava flowed forth like the foam from a glass of beer and swept over the spot where she had been standing an instant before.—William P. Andrews in Century.

Gluttonous Eskimos.

The eating powers of the Eskimos, if the tales told in the books of northern explorations are to be believed, are most extraordinary. One writer tells of a young man scarcely full grown who ate four pounds and four ounces of frozen sea horse flesh, four pounds and four ounces of sea horse flesh broiled, one pound and twelve ounces of bread, one and one-fourth pounds or rich gravy in twelve hours. Besides eating the above he also drank one pint of grog, three glasses of raw spirits and nine pints of water.

Convalescence.

When a sick person is becoming convalescent, the rule of a quiet time between 2 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon should still be adhered to until complete strength is regained. Even if the patient cannot obtain sleep the fact of lying quietly in a darkened room will rest both eyes and brain, producing that feeling of wide awake brightness which invalids so often feel in the evening, to them the pleasantest time of the day in consequence.

Germany's Coal Production.

The official statement of the production of coal in Germany in 1905 gives the quantity as 121,298,167 metric tons, of the value of $262,000,000, an increase of less than 500,000 tons over 1904. The output of lignite was 52,498,307 tons, an increase of nearly 4,000,000 tons over 1904. The lignite produced was valued at $20,000,000.

Test For Ready Boiled Lobsters.

Should ready boiled lobsters be purchased, test them by gently drawing back the tail, which should rebound with a spring. If the tail is not curled up and will not spring back when straightened the lobster was dead when boiled and should not be eaten. Choose the smaller lobsters that are heavy for their size, as the larger ones are apt to be coarse and tough. Lobsters weighing from one and a half to three pounds are the best in size. All parts of the lobster are wholesome and may be used, except the stomach, which is a small hard sack and contains poisonous matter and lies directly under the head, and a little vein which runs the entire length of the tail.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

winch clattered and the chain drew. The two men below, jumping to this side and that for their lives, handspiked the carcass free of obstacles, and at last it came up the hatch, a battered, shapeless rag, almost unrecognizable.

A mob of men, sulky, sullen and afraid, stood round the hatch, and one of these, when the poor remains came up and swung to the roll of the ship over the side, cut the bowline with his knife and let the carcass plop into the racing seas. The chain clashed back again down between the iron coamings of the hatch, and the two mates below went on with their work. No one offered to help them. No one, as Kettle grimly noted, was made to do so.

"Do your three mates run this ship, captain?" asked Kettle at last.

"They are handy fellows."

"If you ask me, I should call them poor drivers. What for do they put in all the work themselves when there are that mob of deck hands and cattle-hands standing round doing the gentleman as though they were in the gallery of a theatre?"

"There was some misunderstanding when the crew were shipped. They say they never signed on to handle dead cattle."

"I've seen those kind of misunderstandings before, captain, and I've started in to smooth them away."

"Well?" said the captain of the cattle boat.

"O, with me!" said Kettle truculently, "they straightened out as soon as ever I began to hit. If your mates know their business, they'd soon have that crew in hand again."

"I don't allow my mates to knock the men about. To give them their due, they wanted to; they were brought up in a school which would probably suit you, captain, all three of them; but I don't permit that sort of thing—I am a Christian man, and I will not order my fellow-men to be struck. If the fellows refuse their duty, it lies between them and their conscience."

"As if an old sailor had a conscience!" murmured Kettle to himself. "Well, captain, I'm no small piece of a Christian myself, but I was taught that whatever my hand findeth to do, to do it with all my might, and I guess bashing a lazy crew comes under that head."

"I don't want either your advice or your theology."

"If I wasn't a passenger here," said Kettle. "I'd like to tell you what I thought of your seamanship and your notion of making a master's ticket respected. But I'll hold my tongue on that. As it is, I think I ought just to say I don't consider this ship safe, run the way she is."

The captain of the cattle boat flushed darkly. He jerked his head towards the ladder. "Get down off this bridge." he said.

"What!"

"You hear me. Get down off my bridge. If you've learnt anything about your profession you must know this is private up here, and no place for blooming passengers."

Kettle glared and hesitated. He was not used to receiving orders of this description, and the innovation did not please him. But for once in his life he submitted. Miss Carnegie was sitting under the lee of the deckhouse aft, watching him, and somehow or other he did not choose to have a scene before her. It was all part of this strange new feeling which had come over him.

He gripped his other impulses tight, and went and sat beside her. She welcomed him cordially. She made no secret of her pleasure at his presence. But her talk just now jarred upon him. Like other people who see the ocean and its traffic merely from the amateur's view, she was able to detect romance beneath her present discomforts, and she was pouring into his ear her scheme for making it the foundation of her most ambitious poem.

In Kettle's mind to build an epic on such a groundwork was nothing short of profanation. He viewed the sea, seamen and sea duties with an intimate eye; to him they were common and unclean to the furthest degree; no trick of language could elevate their meannesses. He pointed out how she would prostitute her talent by laying hold of such an unsavory subject, and extolled the beauty of his own ideal.

"Tackle a cornfield, miss," he would say again and again, "with its butter-yellow color and its blobs of red poppies, and the green hedges all round. You write poetry such as I know you can about a cornfield, and farmers, and farm buildings with thatched roofs, and you'll wake up one of these mornings (like all poets' hope to do some day) and find yourself famous. And because why, you want to know? Well, miss, it's because cornfields and the country and all that are what people want to hear about, and dream they've got handy to their own back doorstep. They're so peaceful, so restful. You take it from me, no one would even want to read four words about this beastly cruel sea, and the brutes of men who make their living by driving ships across it. No, by Ja— No, miss, you take it from a man who knows, they'd just despise it." And so they argued endlessly at the point, each keeping an unchanged opinion.

Perhaps with all the human freight that the cattle boat carried, Mr. McTodd was the only one person entirely happy. He had no watch to keep, no work to do; the mess-room was warm, stuffy, and entirely to his taste; liquor was plentiful; and the official engineers of the ship were Scotch and argumentative. He never came on deck for a whiff of fresh air, never knew a moment's tedium; he lived in a pleasant atmosphere of broad dialect, strong tobacco, and toasting oil, and thoroughly enjoyed himself; though when the moment of trial came, and his thews and energies were wanted for the saving of human life, he quickly showed that this Capua had in no way sapped his efficiency.

The steamer had, as has been said, carried foul weather with her all the way across the Atlantic from the River Plate, as though it were a curse inflicted for the cruelty of her stevedores. The crew forgot what it was like to wear dry clothes, the afterguard lived in a state of bone-weariness. A harder captain would have still contrived to keep them up to the mark; but the man who was in supreme command was feeble and undecided, and there is no doubt that vigilance was dangerously slackened.

A fog, too, which came down to cover the sea, stopped out all view of the sun, and compelled them for three days to depend on a dead reckoning; and (after the event) it was said a strong current set the steamer unduly to the westward.

Anyway, be the cause what it may, Kettle was pitched violently out of his bunk in the deep of one night, just after two bells, and from the symptoms which loudly advertised themselves, it required no expert knowledge to tell that the vessel was beating her bottom out on rocks, to the accompaniment of a murderously heavy sea. The engines stopped, steam began to blow off noisily from the escapes, and what with that, and the cries of the men, and the crashing of seas, and the beating of iron, and the beast cries from the cattle decks, the din was almost enough to split the ear. And then the steam syren burst out into one vast bellow of pain, which drowned all the other noises as though they had been children's whispers.

Kettle slid on coat and trousers over his pajamas, and went and thumped at a door at the other side of the alleyway.

"Miss Carnegie?"

"Yes."

"Dress quickly."

"I am dressing, captain."

"Get finished with it, and then wait. I'll come for you when it's time."

It is all very well to be cool on these occasions, but sometimes the race is to the prompt. Captain Kettle made his way up on deck against a green avalanche of water which was cascading down the companionway. No shore was in sight. The ship had backed off after she had struck, and was now rolling heavily in the deep trough. She was low in the water, and every second wave swept her.

No one seemed to be in command. The dim light showed Kettle one lifeboat wrecked in davits, and a disorderly mob of men trying to lower the other. But someone let go the stern first so that the boat shot down perpendicularly, and the next wave smashed the lower half of it into splinters. The frenzied crowd left it to try the port quarterboat, and Kettle raced them across the streaming decks, and got first to the davits. He plucked a greenheart belaying pin from the rail, and laid about him viciously. "Back, you scum!" he shouted; "get back, or I'll smash in every face amongst you. Good Lord, isn't there a mate or a man left on this stinking farmyard? Am I to keep off all this two-legged cattle by myself?"

That pain in the Back is Kidney Trouble

GIN PILLS WILL CURE IT

A strain or severe cold, or a dozen other causes may have started it—but the Kidneys are at the bottom of it. Backache (especially in the "small" of the back) means Kidney Disease. Plasters and liniments give some relief, but they never cure. Lots of people, with swollen hands and feet, are treating themselves for rheumatism, when, in fact, their sick kidneys are causing the pain and swelling. GIN PILLS cure that pain in the Back every time, because they cure the Kidneys.

OTTAWA, March 17th, 1905.

I had the honor of being appointed assistant artist to the chief artist of London "Black and White" to accompany him three years ago to China to help him get pictures of the Boxer Uprising. That is a hard country on the kidneys. I came back very much troubled, and have been so ever since. My attention was called to Gin Pills; I have taken two boxes, and can positively say that I have never felt better in my life.

THE BOLE DRUG CO. - WINNIPEG, MAN.

They fought on, the black water swirling waist deep among them with every roll, the syren bellowing for help overhead, and the ship sinking under their feet; and gradually, with the frenzy of despair, the men drove Kettle back against the rail, whilst others of them cast off the falls of the quarterboat's tackles preparatory to letting her drop. But then, out of the darkness, up came McTodd and the steamer's mate, both shrewd hitters, and men not afraid to use their skill, and once more the tables were turned.

The old quarter-boat had been lowered and swamped; this boat was the only one remaining.

"Now, Mac," said Kettle, "help the mate take charge, and murder every one that interferes. Get the boat in the water and fend off. I'll be off below and fetch up Miss Carnegie. We must put some hurry in it. The old box hasn't much longer to swim. Take the lady ashore and see she comes to no harm."

"O, aye," said McTodd, "and we'll keep a seat for yerself, skipper."

"You needn't bother," said Kettle. "I take no man's place in this sort of tea-party." He splashed off across the streaming decks, and found the cattle-boat's captain sheltering under the lee of the companion, wringing his hands. "Out, you blitherer," he shouted, "and save your mangy life. Your ship's gone now; you can't play hash with her any more." After which pleasant speech he worked his way below, half swimming, half wading, and once more beat against Miss Carnegie's door. Even in this moment of extremity he did not dream of going in unasked.

She came out to him in the half-swamped alleyway, fully dressed. "Is there any hope?" she asked.

"We'll get you ashore, don't you fear." He clapped an arm round her waist, and drew her strongly on through the dark and the swirling water toward the foot of the companion. "Excuse me, miss," he said. "This is not familiarity. But I have got the firmer sea-legs, and we must hurry."

They pressed up the stair, battling with great green cascades of water, and gained the dreadful turmoil on deck. A few weak stars gleamed out above the wind, and showed the black wave tops dimly. Already some of the cattle had been swept overboard, and were swimming about like the horned beasts of a nightmare. The din of surf came to them amongst the other noises, but no shore was visible. The steamer had backed off the reef on which she had struck, and was foundering in deep water. It was indeed a time for hurry. It was plain she had very few more minutes to swim.

Each sea now made a clean breach over her, and a passage about the decks was a thing of infinite danger. But Kettle was resourceful and strong, and he had a grip round Miss Carnegie and a hold on something solid when the waters drenched on him, and he contrived never to be wrenched entirely from his hold.

But when he had worked his way aft, a disappointment was there ready for him. The quarterboat was gone. McTodd stood against one of the davits, cool and philosophical as ever.

"You infernal Scotchman, you've let them take away the boat from you," Kettle snarled. "I should thought you could have kept your end up with a mangy crowd like that."

"Use your eyes," said the engineer. "The boat's in the wash below there at the end of the tackles with her side stove in. She drowned the three men that were lowered in her because they'd no' sense enough to fend her off."

"That comes of setting a lot of farmers to work a steamboat."

"Awell," said McTodd, "steamers have been lost before, and I have it in mind, captain, that you've helped."

"By James, if you don't carry a civil tongue, you drunken Geordie, I'll knock you some teeth down to cover it."

"O, I owe you that," said McTodd, "but now we're quits. I bided here, Capt. Kettle, because I thought you'd maybe like to swim the leddy off to the shore, and at that I can bear a useful hand."

"Mac," said Kettle, "I take back what I said about your being Scotch. You're a good soul." He turned to the girl, still shouting to make his voice carry above the clash of the seas and the bellow of the syren and the noises of the dying ship: "It's our only chance, Miss—swimming. The life buoys from the bridge are all gone—I looked. The hands will have taken them. There'll be a lot of timber floating about when she goes down, and we'll be best clear of that. Will you trust to us?"

"I trust you in everything," she said.

Deeper and deeper the steamer sank in her wallow. The lower decks were swamped by this, and the miserable cattle were either drowned in their stalls or washed out of her. There was no need for the three to jump—they just let go their hold, and the next incoming wave swept them clear of the steamer's spar deck, and spurned them 100 yards from her side.

They found themselves amongst a herd of floating cattle, some drowned, some swimming frenziedly; and with the inspiration of the moment laid hold of a couple of the beasts which were tangled together by a halter, and so supported themselves without further exertion. It was no use swimming for the present. They could not tell which way the shore lay. And it behooved them to reserve all their energies for the morning, so well as the numbing cold of the water would let them.

Of a sudden the bellow of the steamer's syren ceased, and a pang went through them as though they had lost a friend. Then came a dull, muffled explosion. And then, a huge ragged shape loomed up through the night like some vase monument, and sank swiftly straight downward out of sight beneath the black, tumbled sea.

"Poor old girl!" said McTodd, spitting out the sea water, "they'd a fine keg of whiskey down in her mess-room."

"Poor devil of a skipper!" said Kettle "it's to be hoped he's drowned out of harm's way, or it'll take lying to keep him any rags of his ticket."

The talk died out of them after that, and the miseries of the situation closed in. The water was cold, but the air was piercing, and so they kept their bodies submerged, each holding on to the bovine raft, and each man sparing a few fingers to keep a grip on the girl. One of the beasts they clung to quickly drowned; the other, strange to say, kept its nostrils above water, swimming strongly, and in the end came alive to the shore, the only four-footed occupant of the steamer to be saved.

At the end of each minute it seemed to them that they were too bruised and numbed to hang on another 60 seconds, and yet the next minute found them still alive and dreading its successor. The sea moaned around them, mourning the dead; the fleet of drowned cattle surged helplessly to this way and to that, bruising them with rude collisions; and the chill bit them to the bone, mercifully numbing their pain and anxiety. Long before the dawn the girl had sunken into a stupor, and was only held from sinking by the nervous fingers of the men; and the men themselves were merely automata, completing their task with a legacy of will.

When from somewhere out of the morning mists a fisher boat sailed up, manned by ragged, kindly Irish, all three were equally lost to consciousness, and all three were hauled over the gunwale in one continuous dripping string. The grip of the men's fingers had endured too long to be loosened for a sudden call such as that.

They were taken ashore and tended with all the care poor homes could give; and then men, used to hardships, recovered with a dose of warmth and sleep.

Miss Carnegie took longer to recover, and, in fact, for a week lay very near to death. Kettle stayed on in the village making almost hourly inquiries for her. He ought to have gone away to seek fresh employment. He ought to have gone back to his wife and children, and he upbraided himself bitterly for his neglect of these duties. But still he could not tear himself away. For the future—Well, he dreaded to think what might happen in the future.

But at last the girl was able to sit up and see him, and he visited her, showing all the deference an ambassador might offer to a queen. I may go so far as to say that he went into the cottage quite infatuated. He came out of it disillusioned.

She listened to his tale of the wreck with interest and surprise. She was almost startled to hear that others, including the captain and two of his mates, were saved from the disaster besides themselves, but at the same time unfeignedly pleased. And she was pleased also to hear that Kettle was subpoenaed to give evidence before the forthcoming inquiry.

"I am glad of that," she said, "because I know you will speak with a free mind. You have told me so many times how incompetent the captain was, and now you will be able to tell it to the proper authorities."

Kettle looked at her blankly. "But that was different," he said. "I can't say to them what I said to you."

"Why not? Look what misery and suffering and loss of life the man has caused. He isn't fit to command a ship."

"But, miss," said Kettle, "it's his living. He's been brought up to seafaring, and he isn't fit for anything else. You wouldn't have me send out the man to starve? Besides, I'm a shipmaster myself, and you wouldn't have me try to take away another master's ticket? The cleverest captain afloat might meet with misfortune, and he's always got to think of that when he's put up to give evidence against his fellows."

"Well, what are you going to do, then?"

"O, we've got together a tale, and when the old man is put up on his trial the mates and I will stick to it through thick and thin. You can bet that we are not going to swear away his ticket."

"His ticket?"

"Yes; his master certificate—his means of livelihood."

"I think it's wrong," she said excitedly; "criminally wrong. And, beside, you said you didn't like the man."

"I don't; I dislike him cordially. But that's nothing to do with the case. I've my own honor to think of, miss. How'd I feel if I went about knowing I'd done my best to ruin a brother captain for good and always?"

"You are wrong," she repeated vehemently.

"The man is incompetent by your own saying, and, therefore, he should suffer."

Kettle's heart chilled.

"Miss Carnegie," he said, "I am disappointed in you. I thought from your poetry that you had feelings: I thought you had charity, but I find you are cold."

"And you!" she retorted, "you that I have set up for myself as an ideal of most of the manly virtues, do you think I feel no disappointment when I hear that you are deliberately proposing to be a liar?"

"I am no liar," he said sullenly. "I have most faults, but not that. This is different; you do not understand. It is not lying to defend one's fellow shipmaster before an inquiry board."

The girl turned to the pillow in her chair and hid her face. "O, go!" she said, "go! I wish I had never met you. I thought you were so good, and so brave and so honest, and when it comes to the pinch, you are just like the rest! Go, go! I wish I thought I could ever forget you."

"You say you don't understand," said Kettle. "I think you deliberately won't understand, miss. You remember that I said I was disappointed in you, and I stick to that now. You make me remember that I have got a wife and family I am fond of. You make me ashamed I have not gone to them before."

He went to the door and opened it. "But I do not think I shall ever forget," he said, "how much I cared for you once. Good-by, miss."

"Good-by," she sobbed from her pillow, "I wish I could think you are right, but perhaps it is best as it is."

In the village street outside, was Mr. McTodd clothed in rasping serge, and inclined to be sententious. "They've whisky here," he said with a jerk of the thumb. "Irish whisky, that's got a smoky taste that's rather alluring when you've got over the first dislike. I'm out o' siller mysel' or I'd stand ye a glass, but if ye're in funds, I could guide ye to the place?"

Kettle was half tempted. But with a wrench he said, "No," adding that if he once started, he might not know when to stop.

"Quite right," said the engineer, "you're quite (hic) right, skipper. A man with an inclination to level himself with the beasts that perish, should always be abstemious." He sat against a wayside fence and prepared for sleep. "Like me," he added solemnly, and shut his eyes.

"No," said Kettle to himself; "I won't forget it that way. I guess I can manage without. She pretty well cured me herself. But a sight of the missis will do the rest."

And so Capt. Owen Kettle went home to where Mrs. Kettle kept house in the by-street in South Shields, that unlovely town on Tyneside; and a worrying time he had of it with that estimable woman, his wife, before the explanations which he saw fit to give were passed as entirely satisfactory. In fact, he was not quite forgiven for his escapade with Miss Carnegie or for that other involuntary excursion with Donna Clotilde La Touche till such time as he had acquired fortune from adventure on the seas and was able to take Mrs. Kettle away from her unsavory surroundings and settle down in comfort in a small farmstead on the Yorkshire moors with a hired maid to assist at the housework. But that was not until some considerable time after he was wrecked with Mr. McTodd on the Irish coast; and between the two dates he assisted to make a good deal more history which is (or will be) elsewhere related.

MR. GEDGE'S CATSPAW.

Capt. Owen Kettle folded the letter-card, put it in his pocket, and relit his cigar. He drew paper toward him, and took out a stub of pencil and tried to make verse, which was his habit when things were shaping themselves awry, but the rhymes refused to come. He changed the meter; he gave up laboring to fit the words to the air of "Swanee River," and started fresh lines which would go to the tune of "Greenland's Icy Mountains," a meter with which at other times he had been notoriously successful. But it failed him now. He could not get the jingle; spare feet bristled at every turn; and the field of poppies, on which his muse was engaged, became every moment more and more elusive.

It was no use. He put down the pencil and sighed, and then, frowing at himself for his indecision, took out the letter-card again, and deliberately re-read it, front and back.

Capt. Kettle was a man who made up his mind over most matters with the quickness of a pistol shot; and once settled, rightly or wrongly, he always stuck to his decision. But here, on the letter-card, was a matter he could not get the balance of at all; it refused to be dismissed, even temporarily, from his mind; it involved interests far too large to be hazarded by a hasty verdict either one way or the other; and the difficulty in coming to any satisfactory conclusion irritated him heavily.

The letter-card was anonymous, and seemed to present no clew to its authorship. It was typewritten; it was posted, as the stamp showed, in Newcastle; it committed its writer in no degree whatever. But it made statements which, if true, ought to have sent somebody to penal servitude; and it threw out hints which, true or untrue, made Capt. Kettle heir to a whole world of anxiety and trouble.

It is an excellent academic rule to entirely disregard anonymous letters, but it is by no means always an easy rule to follow. And there are times when a friendly warning must be conveyed anonymously or not at all. But Kettle did not worry his head about the ethics of anonymous letter writing as a profession; his attention was taken up by this type-written card from "Well-wisher," which he held in his hand:

"Your ship goes to sea never to reach port. There is an insurance robbery cleverly rigged. You think yourself very smart, I know, but this time you are being made a common gull of."

And the writer wound up by saying: "I can't give you any hint of how it's going to be done. Only I know the game's fixed. So keep your weather eye skinned and take the Sultan of Labuan safely out and back, and maybe you'll get something more solid than a drink. From Your Well-wisher."

Capt. Kettle was torn, as he read, by many conflicting sentiments. Loyalty to Mr. Gedge, his owner, was one of them. Gedge had sold him before, but that was in a way condoned by this present appointment to the Sultan of Labuan. And he wanted very much to know what were Mr. Gedge's wishes over the matter.

His own code of morality on this subject was peculiar. Ashore in South Shields he was as honest as a bishop; he was a strict chapel member; he did not even steal matches from the captain's room at Hallett's, his house of call, which has always been a recognized peculation. At sea he conceived himself to be bought, body and soul, by his owner for the time being, and was perfectly ready to risk body and soul in earning his pay.

But the question was, how was this pay to be earned?

Up till then he would have said: "By driving the Sultan of Labuan over the seas as fast as could be done on a given coal consumption, by ruthlessly keeping down expense; and, in fact, by making the steamer earn the largest possible dividend in the ordinary way of commerce." But this typewritten letter-card hinted at other purposes, which he knew were quite within the bounds of possibility, and if he was being made a catspaw—

He hit the unfinished poems on the table a blow with his fist. "By James!" he muttered, "a catspaw? I didn't think of it in that light before. Well, we'd better have a clear understanding about the matter."

He got up, crammed the blue letter card into his pocket, and took his cap.

"My dear," he called down to Mrs. Kettle, who was engaged on the family wash in the kitchen below, "I've got to run up to the office to see Mr. Gedge. I don't think I quite understand his wishes about running the boat. Get your tea when it's ready. I don't want to keep you and the youngsters waiting."

Capt. Kettle thought out many things as he journeyed from South Shield to the grimy office of his employer in Newcastle, but his data were insufficient, and he was unable to get hold of any scheme by which he could safely approach what was, to say the very least of it, a very delicate subject. Mr. Gedge had hired him as captain of the Sultan of Labuan, had said no word about losing her, and how was he to force the man's confidence? It looked the most unpromising enterprise in the world. Moreover, although in the outer world, he was as brave a fellow as ever lived, he had all a shipmaster's timidity at tackling a shipowner in his lair, and this, of course, handicapped him.

In this mood, then, he was ushered upon Gedge in his office, and saw him signing letters and casting occasional sentences to a young woman who flicked them down in shorthand.

The shipowner frowned. He was very busy. "Well, captain," he said, "what is it? Talk ahead. I can listen whilst I sign these letters."

"It's a private question I'd like to ask you about running the boat."

"Want Miss Payne to go out?"

"If I might trouble her so far."

Gedge jerked his head toward the door, "Type out what you've got," he said. The shorthand writer went out and closed the glass door after her. "Now, Kettle,"

Capt. Kettle hesitated. It was an awkward subject to begin upon.

"Now then, captain, out with it quick. I'm in the dickens of a hurry."

"I wish you'd let me know a little more exactly—in confidence, of course—how you wish me to run this steamboat. Do you want me to—I mean—"

"Well, get on, get on."

"When do you want her back?"

Gedge leaned back in his chair, tapped his teeth with the end of his pen. "Look here, captain," he said, "you didn't come here to talk rot like this. You've had your orders already. You aren't a drinking man, or I'd say you were screwed. So there's something else behind. Come, out with it."

"I hardly know how to begin."

"I don't want rhetoric. If you've got a tale tell it, if not—" Mr. Gedge leant over his desk again and went on signing his letters.

Capt. Kettle stood the rudeness without so much as a flush. He sighed a little, and then, after another few moments' thought, took the letter card from his pocket and laid it on his employer's table. After Gedge had conned through and signed a couple more sheets he took the card up in his fingers and skimmed it over.

As he read the color deepened in his face, and Kettle saw that he was moved, but said nothing. For a moment there was silence between them, and Gedge tapped at his teeth and was apparently lost in thought. Then he said: "Where did you get this?"

"Through the post."

"And why did you bring it to me?"

"I thought you might have something to say about it."

"Shown it to anyone else?"

"No, sir; I'm in your service, and earning your pay."

"Yes; I pulled you out of the gutter again quite recently, and you said you'd be able to get your wife's clothes out of pawn with your advance note."

"I'm very grateful to you for giving me the berth, sir, and I shall be a faithful servant to you as long as I'm in your employ. But if there's anything on, I'd like to be in your confidence. I know she isn't an old ship, but—"

"But what?"

"She's uneconomical. Her engines are old-fashioned. It wouldn't pay to fit her with triple expansions and new boilers."

"I see. You appear to know a lot about the ship, captain—more than I do myself, in fact. I know you're a small tin saint when you're within hail of that Ebenezer, or Bethel, or whatever you call it here ashore, but at sea you've got the name for not being over particular."

"At sea," said the little sailor with a sigh, "I am what I have to be. But I couldn't do that. I'm a poor man sir; I'm pretty nearly a desperate man, but there are some kinds of things that are beyond me. I know it's done often enough, but—you'll have to excuse me. I can't lose her for you."

"Who's asking you?" said Gedge cheerily. "I'm not. Don't jump at conclusions, man. I don't want the Sultan of Labuan lost. She's not my best ship, I'll grant; but I can run her at a profit for all that; and even if I couldn't I am not the sort of man to try and make my dividends out of Lloyd's. No, not by any means, captain; I've got my name to keep up."

Capt. Kettle brought up a sigh of relief. "Glad to hear it, sir; I'm glad to hear it. But I thought it best to have it out with you. That beastly letter upset me."

Gedge laughed silly. "Well, if you want to know who wrote the letter, I did it myself."

Kettle started. He was obviously incredulous.

"Well, to be accurate, I did it by deputy. You hae yer doots, eh? Hang it man; what an unbelieving Jew you are." He pressed one of the electric pushes by the side of his desk, and the shorthand writer came in and stood at the doorway.

"Miss Payne, you typed this letter-card, didn't you?" he asked, and Miss Payne dutifully answered, "Yes."

"Thank you. That'll do. Well, Kettle, I hope you're satisfied now? I sent this blessed card because I wanted to see how deep this shore-going honesty of yours went, which I've heard so much about and now I know, and you may take it from me that you'll profit by it financially in the very near future. The shipmasters I've had to do with have been mostly rogues, and when I get hold of a straight man I know how to appreciate him. Now, good-by, captain, and a prosperous voyage to you. If you catch the midnight mail from here, you'll just get down to Newport tomorrow in time to see her come into dock. Take her over at once, you know; we can't have any time wasted. Here, good-by. I'm frantically busy."

But busy though he might be, Mr. Gedge did not immediately return to signing his letters after Capt. Kettle's departure. Instead, he took out a handkerchief and wiped his forehead and wiped his hands, which for some reason seemed to have grown unaccountably clammy; and for awhile he lay back in his writing chair like a man who feels physically sick.

You have No Reason for Not Using

Zutoo

Some people think that all headache cures are alike—that they all undermine the health, even if not perceived at the time of taking them.

Well, we'll admit that the drug cures do this, but that is no reason why you should not take Zutoo.

Zutoo is a harmless vegetable remedy. One ingredient is soda—just old-fashioned soda that our grandmothers used to take to settle the stomach, when they had sick headache. And there is nothing better.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient imported for us from Japan. It won't hurt you any more than will the soda.

There is absolutely no reason why you should not use Zutoo.

If you suffer from headache there is every reason why you should.

Taken in time, two tablets will ward off a headache. Taken later, they will stop it in twenty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time.

If you are using a drug remedy, why not discard it?

Zutoo will cure just as quickly and will save you the penalty, that all must sometime pay, who take the drugs which these cures contain.

If you will give Zutoo one trial, you will never take any other headache remedy again.

Capt. Kettle, however, went his ways humming a cheerful air, and as the 12 o'clock mail roared out that night across the high-level bridge, he settled himself to sleep in his corner of a third-class carriage and to dream the dreams of a man who, after many vicissitudes, has at last found righteous employment. It was a new experience for him, and he permitted himself the luxury of enjoying it to the full.

A train clattered him into Monmouthshire some 12 hours later, and he stepped out on Newport platform into a fog raw and fresh from the Bristol channel. His small, worn portmanteau he could easily have carried in his hand, but there is an etiquette about these matters which even hard-up shipmasters, to whom a shilling is a financial rarity, must observe; and so he took a four-wheeler down to the agent's office, and made himself known. The Sultan of Labuan, it seemed, had come up the Usk and gone into dock barely an hour before, and so Kettle, obedient to his orders, went down at once to take her over.

It was not a pleasant operation, this ousting another man from his livelihood, and as Kettle had been supplanted a weary number of times himself he thought he knew pretty well the feelings of the man whom he had come to replace. His reception, however, surprised him. Williams, the former master of the Sultan of Labuan, handed over his charge with an air of obvious and sincere relief, and Kettle felt that he was being eyed with a certain embarrassing curiosity. The man was not disposed to be verbally communicative.

"You look knocked up," said Kettle.

"Might well be," retorted Capt. Williams. "I haven't had a blessed wink of sleep since I pulled my anchors out of Thames mud."

"Not had bad weather, have you?"

"No, weather's been right enough. Bit thickish, that's all."

"What's kept you from having a watch below, then?"

"'Fraid of losing the ship, captain. I never been up before the board of trade yet and don't want to try what is feels like."

"O!" said Kettle with a sigh, "it's horrible; they're brutes. I know. I have been there."

"So I might have guessed," said Williams drily.

"Look here," said Kettle, "what are you driving at?"

"No offence, captain, no offence. I'll just shut my head now. Guess I've been talking too much already. Result of being overtired, I suppose. Let's get on with the ship's papers. They are all in this tin box."

"But I'd rather you said out what you got to say."

"Thanks, captain, but no. This is the first time we've met, I think?"

"So far as I remember."

"Well, there you are then; personally you no doubt are a very nice pleasant gentleman, but still there's no getting over the fact that you're a stranger to me; and anyway, you're in Gedge's employ, and I'm not; and there's a law of Captain Shoots First Mate.

Amherst, N. S., Sept. 21.—A shooting affray occurred at Amherst dock last night, when, during an altercation between the captain of the ship Anna L. Lockwood and first mate, the captain drew his revolver, shooting the mate in the breast, narrowly missing the heart. The wound is not likely to prove serious. No action was taken.

Greasy Kitchen Floors.

Grease stains on a kitchen floor are difficult to remove by ordinary means, but they will generally come out with a hot solution of potash. If one application is not enough, use a second or even a third. Sometimes the solution, if the wood is very white, will leave a yellowish stain. To avoid this, mix some lime with the solution, until a thick paste is formed. Let the paste remain on the floor at least twelve hours. It is better to use a weak solution of sal soda and fuller's earth on very nice floors.

MISTRESS OF SEAS.

BRITISH SHIPYARDS TURN OUT THREE MORE MONSTERS OF THE DEEP — BEST OF THIS KIND.

London, Sept. 20.—Three leviathans are to be launched from various shipyards in Great Britain to-day. They are the H.M.S. Shannon, the longest armored cruiser in the world; the Mauretania, the new Cunarder, a sister ship and identical to the turbine steamer Lusitania and the White Star liner Adriatic, which, next to the two huge Cunarders, is the largest ship afloat.

The Adriatic will be the first of the trio to take the water. She is the largest vessel ever built at Belfast. Her displacement is 40,000 tons. She is 710 feet long, 75 feet 6 inches beam, and 59 feet 6 inches deep. Her gross tonnage is nearly 25,000. The general lines of this vessel are similar to the Baltic, and she has all the improvements seen in the Amerika, of the Hamburg-American line. The Adriatic has nine decks and seven cargo holds and has been constructed more for regard of the comfort of trans-Atlantic passengers than for speed.

The Adriatic cost $3,750,000.

The Shannon is the longest British armoured cruiser afloat, having a total length of 490 feet. She will carry four 9.2 inch guns, 10 7.5 guns in her main battery, and will have five torpedo tubes. Her tonnage is 14,600 and her contract speed 23 knots. The Shannon is the eighth of her name in the British navy. The seventh Shannon recently went to the scrap heap.

The Mauretenia, the second of the Cunard turbine flyers, and sister ship to the Lusitania, is 770 feet long with a breadth of 85 feet. She will be propelled by turbine engines of 70,000 indicated horse-power, driving four shafts each of which is fitted with one three-bladed propeller of manganese bronze. The Maurentania complies with the admiralty requirements as an armored cruiser, and will be fitted for an armament of twelve six inch guns.

READ ABOUT INDIANS AND OUTDOOR LIFE

in a little book that costs nothing. The book describes the Northwest, the land of the future. It is printed on the best paper, is interesting, profusely illustrated and full of information. It is suitable for your own home, for schools or libraries. It describes the wonderful Yellowstone Park, the Wild Bitterroot Mountains in Montana, the Queniut Indians—almost unknown — on the North Pacific Coast, the grand Columbia River scenery, the marvellous Puget Sound region, and Alaska. It costs but the postage required to mail it. It will be sent to any address for six cents. The book is "Wonderland 1906," published by the Northern Pacific Railway, and is for general distribution. Send six cents to A. M. Cleland, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minnesota, or as many times six cents as you wish copies, with proper addresses, and the little volume will be promptly forwarded by that gentleman. Don't wait! The book has an object—to educate and inform the public about the Northwest, the region that Lewis and Clark explored and made known to us. Help it perform its mission. 21-3t

AT TORONTO ISLAND.

How Editor of The Haileyburish Enjoyed Himself There.

The editor of The Haileyburian has been telling his readers of his visit to Toronto Island in this breezy style: "We again visited Hanlan's Island, and tried most of the sensations there. Amongst others we shot the chute. We boarded a car, which, after reaching impossible heights comes down with a rush. We met the rush cheerfully, for we have run worse rapids than that. The descent of that decline might take away the breath of an innocent, but we, being somewhat above proof, were not disturbed in the least. We saw the same old 'merry-go-round' with clinging enthusiasts struck by the tune of "Beneath the Old Apple Tree.' We would cut that old apple tree down if we owned it, but it seems to be a public affair, and hence, like little Washington, we dare not do it and tell a little lie. We saw many games of chance, which if played in Haileybury would draw down anathemas from the representatives of a prurient press. We saw semi-nude figures on the beach, and we rejoiced in that Haileybury had gone one better, and allowed the human form divine to be exposed to view without a vestige of clothing upon it. It proved to us how advanced we are • • • We saw a thing where you slide on a bag, and it seemed to have an exhilarating effect, for those who had slid down were ready to go up again, provided that they were possessed of the necessary five cents. We were sufficiently an ass to go into the chamber of mysteries, which, by experience, we found to consist of a lot of mirrors set up, purely, for the purpose of distorting features that Nature had made ugly enough, without distortion. We watched our own cadaverous countenance with curiosity, and were shocked by the complications of the concave and convex."

Mental Discoveries.

Dr. A. H. Abbott of the University recently gave a lecture on "Experimental Investigation of Complex Mental Discoveries." At the outset the professor said that experimental investigation of the complex facts of man's existence was in its youth, particularly in Canada and the United States. The science of experimental psychology began as a serious science only between the years 1860 and 1870. So far as the sciences were concerned psychology was behind the times.

The professor discussed the complex elements of psychology, thinking, emotion and volition. He said psychology was attempting to discover how complex the complex mental states really were. In order to do this one essential factor was time, and he pictured on a screen some results from this method. He mentioned one general point; that from the psychology of elements it was reasonably clear that there were qualities, sensations, which were not dependent on physical or physiological conditions. Every mental state was not produced by brain processes. He used illustrations of lines and color to show that the task he set had something to do with the audience's experiences, and that if a task be set it would control the associations or imagination. Imagination gave the meaning to what was called real objects.

Dr. Abbott further illustrated his lecture to show that as in the investigation of thinking, so in the investigation of evidence, the task controlled the associations or imagination, and emotions were controlled by imagination.

Drowning Season Lessons.

The drowning season is now in full swing. In every paper one picks up, can be found pitiful stories of accidents to pleasure-seekers. Boys go out in sailing boats; they have not the slightest knowledge of the art of sailing. Many of them cannot swim. Of course, in case of an accident few of them manage to come home alive. There is one lesson to be learned,—don't go sailing until you can sail a boat. Even if you can sail a boat, it is reckless unless you can swim. Very often, of course, an athlete who can swim perfectly well is taken with cramps and loses his life, as easily as if he had no knowledge of the art of swimming whatever.

A sad accident happened recently when young Twombly of a very well-known Boston family, lost his life in New York, says The Montreal Standard, in illustration of the question discussed. His elders had done their full duty to him, for he was both an athlete and a good swimmer. But even good swimmers should not presume upon their knowledge. It is said that he had a cramp. Death from cramps very often means death from heart disease, or death from going into deadly peril in over-confidence.

There are several great truths to be remembered at this season of the year, and here are some of them: Learn to swim, teach your children to swim; and, above all, teach them caution in taking chances with any of the forces of nature. Be bold, boys, but not too bold.

About Caterpillars.

Do any of the youngsters ever wonder why caterpillars have such a funny name? If they do, they decide, no doubt, that it has something to do with cats; and almost certainly they are right. The common explanation of "caterpillar" is that it is the old French "Chatepelose," which means literally "hairy cat," and is very like our "woolly bear." The last two syllables suggested the English "piller," a plunderer, and "caterpiller" was the regular spelling until the seventeenth century. Dr. Murray's Dictionary suggests that the word may have come straight from "cat" and "piller." It is noteworthy that a Lombard word for a caterpillar is "gatta" (cat), and a Swiss word "teufelskatz" (devil's cat), while a "catkin" is the vegetable imitation of the caterpillar.

An Every-Day Lesson.

"To thine own self be true." If the street-car conductor overlooks you hand him your nickel. If the grocery man undercharges you, call his attention to the fact. A feeling of strict honor and honesty is better than any amount of cash. If you know yourself to be a gentleman you can carry yourself as such and you can prove yourself to be such to your neighbors. If to your own self you are true you "cannot then be false to any man."

BIRTH OF THE MOON

LUNA WAS FLUNG OUT OF THE EARTH INTO SPACE.

She Once Filled, Perhaps, the Great Basin Now Occupied by the Pacific Ocean—Latest Ideas of Science as to Conditions on Our Satellite.

Millions of years ago the earth was not the land bound, sea swept globe so familiar to us, but a liquid mass on which floated crust some thirty-five miles thick. At that period, says the Strand Magazine, it turned on its axis at a constantly increasing speed that finally shortened the day to three hours. When that terrific velocity was obtained 5,000 cubic million miles of matter were hurled off by the enormous centrifugal force, and our moon was born. The cleaving of so large a body must have left some scar on the earth's surface. It has accordingly been suggested that the great basin now occupied by the Pacific ocean was once filled by what is now the moon.

Our moon has the distinction of being the largest of all planetary satellites—so large, indeed, that to the inhabitants of Mars it must appear with the earth as a wonderfully beautiful twin planet.

Because the moon rotates on its axis in exactly the same time that it revolves around the earth we are destined to see little more than one hemisphere. So slow is this rotation that the lunar day is equal to fifteen of our days. For half a month the moon is exposed to the fierce heat of the sun; for half a month it spins through space in the densest gloom.

Smaller in mass than the earth is, the moon's attraction for bodies must be correspondingly less. A good terrestrial athlete could cover about 120 feet on the moon in a running broad jump, and leaping over a barn would be a very commonplace feat. A man in the moon could carry six times as much and run six times as fast as he could on the earth.

Although separated from us by a distance that at times reaches 253,000 miles and is never less than 222,000 miles, we know more of the physical formation of the single pallid face that the moon ever turns toward us than we know of certain parts of Asia and the heart of Africa. Powerful telescopes have brought our satellite within a distance of forty miles of the earth. Physicists have mathematically weighed it and fixed its mass at one-eighth of the earth, or 73,000,000,000,000 tons.

The moon presents aspects without any terrestrial parallel. Rent by fires long since dead, its honeycombed crust seems like a great globe of chilled slag. Craters are not uncommon on the earth, but in number, size and structure they bear for the most part little resemblance to those of the moon.

A lunar crater is not the mouth of a volcano having a diameter of a few hundred feet, but a great circular plain twenty, fifty, even a hundred miles in diameter, surrounded by a precipice rising to a height of 5,000 or 10,000 feet, with a central hill or two about half as high.

Water cannot possibly exist as a liquid, for the temperature of the moon's surface during the long lunar night is probably not far from 400 degrees below the zero mark of a Fahrenheit thermometer, and the atmospheric pressure is so low that a gas under pressure would solidify as it escaped. Ice and snow are the forms, then, which lunar water must assume.

Because of the present paucity of water the moon's atmosphere is so exceedingly rare that startling effects are produced. Perhaps the most striking is that of the sunrise. Dawn and the soft golden glow that ushers in terrestrial day there cannot be. The sun leaps from the horizon a flaming sickle, and the loftier peaks immediately flash into light.

There is no azure sky to relieve the monotonous effects of inky black shadows and dazzling white expanses. The sun gleams in fierce splendor, with no clouds to diffuse its blinding light. All day long it is accompanied by the weird zodiacal light that we behold at rare intervals.

Even in midday the heavens are pitch black, so that, despite the sunlight, the stars and planets gleam with a brightness that they never exhibit to us even on the clearest of moonless nights at sea. They shine steadily, too, for it is the earth's atmosphere that causes them to twinkle to our eyes.

In the line of sight it is impossible to estimate distances, for there is no such phenomenon as aerial perspective. Objects are seen only when the rays of the sun strike them.

At times there may be observed spots which darken after sunrise and gradually disappear toward sunset. They cannot be caused by shadows, for shadows would be least visible when the sun is directly overhead.

They appear most quickly at the equator and invade the higher altitudes after a lapse of a few days. In the polar regions they have never been seen. What are they? Organic life resembling vegetation, answers Professor Pickering of Harvard university, vegetation that flourishes luxuriantly while the sun shines and withers at night.

A single day, it may be urged, is not sufficiently long for the development and decay of vegetation, but sixteen hours on the moon is little more than half an hour on the earth; a day lasts half a month and may be regarded as a miniature season.

The expressions "Hallelujah" and "Amen" are said to have been introduced into Christian worship by St. Jerome about A. D. 390.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

PIERCING A NICKEL.

An Odd Little Experiment With a Needle and a Coin.

We know that steel is much harder than nickel or silver, but a steel needle is so very slender that it seems impossible to force it through a coin. The feat, however, is very simple and may easily be accomplished.

The first thing is to insert a needle in a cork so that the point barely comes through. If the larger end of the needle projects at the upper end of the cork snap it off with a pair of shears so that it may be flush with the surface of the cork.

FORCING THE NEEDLE THROUGH.

Place a nickel upon two blocks of wood, as shown in the cut, and put the cork on it, with the sharp end of the needle down, of course. Give the cork a quick, sharp blow with a hammer, and the needle, being unable to bend owing to the support given it by the cork, will easily go through the nickel. A silver quarter may be readily used in place of the nickel.

A MODEST LITTLE FLOWER.

The Legend of the Angel and the Purple Pansy.

A modest little purple flower once sought the most secluded spot in a large garden for its home. It crept in under some tall leaves and thought that no one would ever find it.

But the little flower had forgotten that besides being exquisitely beautiful it had a rare fragrance.

One day an angel, fluttering over the garden, inhaled this charming fragrance, and as it was a new odor to her she searched the garden for the flower which had produced it.

At last the angel discovered the little flower, and, brushing aside the tall leaves, she bent down eagerly to look and smell. So long she stayed there gazing that the sun, which now had an opportunity to shine upon the modest little flower, photographed the angel's face upon the tender purple leaves.

Recognizing her own likeness, the lovely angel at last left the flower, with a kiss and a blessing. "Hereafter," she said to the flower, "you shall bloom in every land, and the splendor of your varied dress shall be a marvel to all who behold you. And to every one who can see my face upon your leaves you shall carry a message of love and happiness."

Spouting Springs.

Most persons have heard of the spouting springs, commonly called geysers, but perhaps they do not know what makes the spouting. The action is similar to that of a volcano. Subterranean water comes in contact with heated rocks, and this produces steam, the expansive force of which throws the hot water up and through any convenient outlet. The action varies in violence as the subterranean force varies in intensity. There is a famous geyser in Iceland, near the Hecla volcano, called the Strokr. It is generally safe to look down into the opening, where water may be seen working, or boiling, about twenty feet below. If enough turf be thrown to choke the passage, the geyser may be set in action, for the obstruction confines the steam so that it gathers force and soon bursts forth, sending a stream of hot water sixty feet up into the air and a volume of steam all around. There are several geysers in the Yellowstone region.

Fabricius, the Roman.

When you are a little further advanced in your studies you will hear if you have not already heard of Fabricius, the Roman statesman and soldier who has been held up for centuries as a model of incorruptible honesty and patriotism. It is well for us all to know about such men. The story is that when Fabricius was sent to King Pyrrhus of Epirus to negotiate the exchange of some Roman prisoners the king offered him all sorts of alluring bribes to enter his service and subjected him to both temptations and threats, but Fabricius in spite of his poverty, which was well known to Pyrrhus, refused everything and remained loyal to his country. Pyrrhus said of him, "It is easier to turn the sun from its career than Fabricius from his honesty."

Just a Starter.

A small boy who happened to be hoarse was asked how he had caught such a cold. With an indignant look he replied:

"I haven't got any cold. I've only got cold in my talk."

Sally Ann Simple.

Quoth Sally Ann Simple: "You never can tell;
The water might all dry up in the well,
I'll put a lot by till a rainy day."
So she gathered her buckets and pails with a will,
And she dug a deep hole with water to fill,
And day after day she lugged it away.
She emptied the well with many a sigh,
But the water leaked out and left the hole dry.
And poor Sally Ann sat down to cry.

To Students

Many students with really superior minds fancy themselves dull because they fail to remember what they read in their text books. The reason is simply that they are afflicted with so much eye-strain that it requires nearly all the nerve force they possess to fix the eyes upon the book, and there is not sufficient left for the process of ideation and thought. Many students sacrifice their health in attaining an education because of the large amount of brain-strain sustained in the close use of their eyes, though vision seems excellent. This form of brain-strain is detected by an expert and remedied by the proper glasses directed to the nerve centres controlling the function of vision. For further particulars call on

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"RICHARD THE THIRD" TO-NIGHT.

Shakespeare's works are the highest ideals of the classic drama,—the drama that the intellectual world adores. The most actable and satisfactory of the Shakespeare plays is King Richard the Third —the Colley Cibber version—as used by the famous David Garrick, Edmund Kean, Edwin Forrest, and other actors who were really kings themselves by the divine right of intellect. This is the version than John Griffith uses on his present tour. It is strenuous and intellectual, not wasting time on the immaterial passages that are better fitted for the study, but coming right down to action and interest, concise and convincing. John Griffith and his most excellent company are booked for a performance of "King Richard the Third" at the Carman opera house, in this city, to-night.

"THE GINGERBREAD MAN."

Scenically "The Gingerbread Man," which comes to the Carman next Tuesday, in two acts and four scenes, is a chromo of Fairyland and it is brimful of novel business. At a day when the wells of novelty were supposed to be run dry, its management, the Edward A. Braden Company, a wealthy and new theatrical firm, has dispensed money with a judicious but lavish hand in all that concerned this, their first venture. The costumes are peerless and so is the scenic investiture. The cast is a big and notable one. Something of a mild sensation is promised every performance as Kris Kringle, silver shimmering reins in hand, drives his golden sleigh and team of beautiful antlered reindeer, selected from the prettiest girls in an exceptionally beautiful chorus. They are in snow white tight fitting costumes, and make an engaging picture. "The Gingerbread Man," like "Babes in Toyland," "Humpty Dumpty" and "The Wizard of Oz," it is needless to say, especially caters to the little folks. There is at present on tour no musical company that may boast a better cast, or more attractive ensemble of girls, who were christened by a New York dramatic writer, 'The American Beauty Chorus."

CHARGED WITH ANNOYING.

Mrs. Sarah Smith accused a lad named Callaghan with annoying her and also with calling her names. Whilst the Magistrate dismissed the charge he cautioned the boy not to interfere in any way with Mrs. Smith in the future.

Chief Gunyou Will Move to Sudbury.

Fatal Smash-up Near Napanee.

NO. 2 EXPRESS, FROM THE WEST, RAN INTO ENGINE OF FREIGHT TRAIN — EXPRESS ENGINEER WAS KILLED.

A fatal smashup occurred about 2 o'clock this morning, at a point known as the Belleville crossing, about half a mile from Napanee, by which the engineer of No. 2 express, Frank Blaine, lost his life.

It appears that a long freight train from the east was on the siding, and, as it was unwieldy, the intention was to divide the train in two. It is said that the siding on which the freight train was, was not long enough to take in all the train, and, as a consequence, the engine was "foul" of the main line.

Along came No. 2 express from the west, which was making up time (she was 26 minutes late on leaving Belleville), and the express engine crashed into the engine of the freight, No. 751, on which Charles Orrill was engineer, and a man named Young was fireman. Orrill and Young both jumped and escaped. The engineer of the express was Frank Blaine, a man about 55 years of age, whose home is in Montreal, but who boarded at Mr. Gordon's, near the station, in this city. He was killed, his body being horribly mutilated. It is said that he saw the accident was inevitable, and told his fireman, Ed. Miron, of this city, to jump. In jumping, Mr. Miron sustained a bad injury to one of his legs, his knee being cut severely, and he was also severely bruised. The dead engineer was cut in two, an iron bar also being driven through his body.

The conductor of the freight train was Mr. W. Main whose home is in the east.

An inquest will be held.

The track was not cleared till about 7 o'clock.

The dead engineer was one of the most popular men on the G.T.R.

Some of the passengers in the smoking car of the express were rudely shaken up, but none were hurt.

The weather was very foggy and thick at the time of the accident.

Peterboro Hockeyist Leaves For the States

The Examiner has this to say of a hockey player who has several times been seen in action in this city;

To-night Mr. W. H. Cavanah will leave for Richford, Vt., to take the position of assistant superintendent of the mills of the Quaker-Oats Company in that city. The departure of Mr. Cavanagh from this city will be learned with deep regret by his many friends, who will however, most heartily congratulate him on his deserved promotion. During his residence in Peterboro he has been active in his support of, and participation in, almost every line of sport. He is, perhaps, better known in this line as a member of the hockey team which won the intermediate championship of the O. H. A. He played wing on this team, and it is no reflection on the work of the other players to state that it was in no small degree due to his excellent work that the cup is today reposing in this city. Mr. Cavanah is Color-Sergt. of No. 8 Co. of the 57th Regiment, and in this line of activity, as well as in any other in which he engaged, he was successful. He will leave Peterboro with the very best wishes of his many warm friends, who are confident that he will "make good" in the larger responsibilities which he will take up in his new position.

FREEDOM OF RELIGION

Dissident Faiths in Russia to Have Disabilities Removed.

Second Point In Stolypin Program Soon to Be Promulgated—Will Next Take Up Enlarging Rights of Jews—Premier Satisfied That Siedlce Will End History of Anti-Jewish Disorders—Odessa Has No Disorders.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 21.—The Associated Press has been informed by a member of the Cabinet that within a few days laws of religious freedom, removing practically every restriction and disability under which the dissident faiths in Russia have labored, will be promulgated.

This is the second point in the Stolypin program. The first, including measures, for the distribution of land, already has been published. The new laws are in effect, an amplification and confirmation of the Emperor's Easter ukase of April 4, 1905.

The Cabinet will next take up the project of law enlarging the rights of Jews, which has just been elaborated by a commission. This measure has been somewhat restricted, the administration believing that full equality, in the present state of public opinion in Russia, can and should be given by Parliament.

The administration, after several months' consideration, has determined against granting compensation for the foreign property destroyed during the Moscow revolt. The claims arising from this cause amounted to $825,000.

Last Anti-Jew Affair.

A deputation of Jews, who visited M Stolypin and referred to the predictions of an anti-Jewish attack at Warsaw, which are being circulated in the Russian and foreign press, was informed by the Premier that according to reports from Gen. Skallon, there was not the slightest reason to anticipate excesses or disorders, nevertheless, he ordered that all necessary measures be taken to prevent an outbreak.

The Premier expressed the hope, and said he was confident, that Siedlce would end the history of anti-Jewish disorders.

Cry For Revenge.

In revenge for the execution of Zenadie Konopolianikovo, the assassin of Gen. Min, the Social Revolutionists are sending broadcast this violent manifesto:

"The die has been cast. One thing remains; annihilate mercilessly all enemies of the people. There must be life for life, death for death, cent for cent. With the illuminating memory of Konoplianikovo to guide them, all true Russians must strike terror to the hearts of the executioners."

No Disorders to Be Permitted.

Odessa, Sept. 21.—The Governor-General and prefect of Odessa have assured the chief rabbi here that they will not permit disorders, and that attempt to bring about an anti-Jewish attack will be quelled without mercy. Jews are assured that they may gather in their synagogues without misgiving, as the synagogues will be guarded by the military.

In spite of these official assurances, however, a gang composed of members of the "Union of Russian People" tried to provoke an anti-Jewish outbreak yesterday by firing on a crowd of Jews. They met with energetic resistence, however, and were dispersed.

Famine In Russia.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 21.—The official report just issued gives but little ground for expectation that the famine, which has already a grip on many provinces in Russia, will be less this winter.

CHEAPER SCHOOL BOOKS.

Premier Whitney Says Government Owned Ones Are Justified.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—Premier Whitney stated yesterday that when the report of the text book commission was received that its recommendations would be dealt with promptly, and, he hoped, effectually. The testimony so far adduced would seem to justify the Government in publishing the books itself and selling them at cost to the public.

The publishing houses are understood to be standing together.

Ex-Premier George W. Ross explained that the contracts in question were revised by the King's printer and then submitted to a commission consisting of Judge Morgan, James Bain, the librarian, and R. Brown of Brown Bros. They reported in favor of some reductions; the fifth reader was reduced from 60 cents to 50 cents and the geography from one dollar to 75 cents. In the main, however, they found prices reasonable and proper. At no time was there any tender to do the work any cheaper, nor were there any complaints, said Mr. Ross, except the ante-election cries during the campaign of 1902.

Aylmer, Que., Has $100,000 Fire.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—Aylmer, Quebec, was visited by a $100,000 fire yesterday morning. Fortunately, the property destroyed was largely lumber, and, consequently, few people are homeless. There was, in fact, only one house burned, the Presbyterian manse. The heaviest loser is the estate of the late Robert Hurdman.

McINTOSH BROS.

THREE KILLED BY DYNAMITE.

Eight Other G. T. R. Laborers Are Badly Hurt by Explosion.

Fort William, Ont., Sept. 21.—Three men are dead and eight are injured as a result of the inadvertent explosion of a dynamite cap, which occurred Wednesday in the Grand Trunk Pacific tunnel at Finmark.

The dead are: Peter Vantilamen, 33 years; Henry Parvianen, 22 years; Nestor Rajala, 48 years.

The injured men who survived the shock have been taken to the private hospital of Foley Bros. at Kaministiquia. All will recover.

At the time of the explosion the laborers employed at the tunnel were engaged in removing debris that had been blasted from the cut on the previous day.

Charles J. Johnston, a foreman, had his left arm blown completely from his body.

Children Hurt by Dynamite.

Port Arthur, Sept. 21.—A premature explosion of dynamite occurred through the curiosity of a boy and girl. Two men and two children were injured. One of the men suffered badly from a lacerated and broken arm.

Killed by Falling Tree.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—George Hansen, aged 23, formerly a member of the Ottawa fire brigade, was killed by a falling tree at Wanipitae.

Succumbs to Burns.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—Mrs. Wm. Hunter, 718 Spadina avenue, who was badly burned Wednesday night, died from her injuries at Grace Hospital yesterday morning.

Horses Trampled Him.

Lakefield, Sept. 21.—Isaac Manning, a prominent farmer of Smith Township, died yesterday afternoon from injuries received by his team running away in the morning. He fell between the horses, which took fright and ran away. The horses trampled on him and the wagon passed over him severely crushing him. He died in four hours. Four doctors attended him.

Isaac Caswell Dead.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—After three days' lingering in the balance Isaac Caswell died in the West Hospital last night. An inquest will be held. Mr. Caswell was struck by a car on Dundas street early on Monday night. He was 70 years of age and a brother of the late Thos. Caswell, city solicitor.

Collides With Street Car.

Kingston, Sept. 21.—In a collision with a street car the rig of Charles Boyd of Glenvale was smashed and Mr. Boyd seriously cut and bruised.

Child Dies From Burns.

Winnipeg, Sept. 21.—Playing near a gas stove, a little 5-year-old daughter of Thomas Goddard caught fire, and as the result of burns, died yesterday afternoon.

Child Crushed By Car.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—The two and one-half-year-old daughter of Michael Goldfeld a Hebrew, was caught in the fender of a St. Patrick street car last evening, from which she folled under the wheels, and one of her legs was severed from her body at the thigh.

AT GOVERNMENT HOUSE.

His Honor and Mrs. Clark Cordially Receive Visiting Oddfellows.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—The reception by the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Clark to the visiting Oddfellows at Government House grounds yesterday afternoon was a pleasant and informal affair. Despite the uncertain weather, several hundred Oddfellows and ladies of Rebekah Lodge, including a number of grand lodge officers, presented their cards and were cordially received by His Honor and Mrs. Clark, who were attended by Capt. Macdonald, A. D. C. A refreshment marquee had been erected on the lawn and the Grenadiers' band dispensed music.

The withdrawal of Denver, left St. Paul an easy winner in the competition for next year's place of meeting of the Oddfellows.

Last night a banquet to the press was given at the Walker House.

Akron, Ohio, was deemed by the judges to present the best appearance of any of the cantons on parade, and was awarded the prize, $150 in cash. Canton City secured second honors and $75, while the Allegheny canton ranked third with a cash award of like amount. Baltimore was fourth, receiving $25.

Regret is expressed at the death of John Brown, a visiting Oddfellow from Brooklyn, N. Y., who was stricken with apoplexy, and passed away Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Brown, who was 68 years old, was formerly of Toronto. The remains left for Brooklyn last night.

AGREEMENT REACHED.

After Two Hours' Discussion Principle of Report Is Not Changed.

Montreal, Sept. 21.—After two hours' discussion last night in committee of the Methodist conference, an agreement was arrived at, Dr. Sutherland seconding the proposal. There is no change in the principle of the committee's report. Two departments will be created by the conference, and two general secretaries elected, with equal authority; but instead of their duties being assigned by the conference, they will be settled by the board.

The election of officers is called for this afternoon. There will be no session on Saturday afternoon. This means that church union goes over till next week.

The evening meeting was occupied with the reception of delegations from the Lord's Day Alliance, the Congregational Union and the Baptist Union.

To Contest Sage Will.

New York, Sept. 21.—A contest for the millions of Russell Sage, who died last July, will, The Herald states yesterday, be begun in the local courts Friday. Among the grounds mentioned on which the validity of the instrument will be attacked are mental incompetency, the exercise of undue influence, and the improper drawing of the document itself.

Due to Defective Brake.

Sudbury, Sept. 21.—The jury investigating the Azilda wreck returned a verdict Wednesday night that the collision was due to a defective air brake service on No. 2 train, the defect being a closed angle cock on the rear end of the mail car; and that the crew took the usual precautions in handling the train.

CATTLE MARKETS.

British Markets Steady—Hogs Firmer Again at Chicago.

London, Sept. 20.—Canadian cattle in the British markets are quoted at 10c to 11½c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8¾c per lb.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, Sept. 20.—Receipts were large, 120 carloads being reported since last Tuesday, composed of 1805 cattle, 938 hogs, 2715 sheep and lambs and 150 calves.

Exporters.

None were offered unless they were mixed in with butchers' loads, and then they did not sell for more than $4.30 per cwt.

Butchers.

The best butchers' animal, 1200 lbs., was sold by McDonald & Maybee to William McClelland at $5 per cwt.; the next two or three cattle sold at $4.75. We give these to show how scarce good cattle were. It is safe to say that there was not 100 cattle out of the 1800 that could be classed as good, and selling over $4 per cwt. The bulk sold under $4. One load sold at $4.50; medium butchers' sold at $3.50 to $3.75; common at $3 to $3.25; cows at $2.25 to $3.25 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

There was a large number, principally eastern stockers and feeders, and the best of them could be only classed as fair quality. Harry Murby reports only a limited demand, with prices easier. Mr. Murby bought 350 since Tuesday, at following quotations: Best feeders, 900 to 1050 lbs. each, at $3.40 to $3.75; feeders, 800 to 900 lbs. each, at $3.10 to $3.40; best stockers, 600 to 700 lbs., at $2.90 to $3.10; common to medium stockers, $2.25 to $2.75 per cwt.

Milkers and Springers.

The market was strong at steady prices, for milkers, and springers of good quality, at $40 to $60 each for the best, and $30 to $37 each for common to medium cows, inferior cows were slow of sale at $25 each.

Veal Calves.

The market for good veal calves remains strong. And it may be said that the buttermilk and bob classes don't go begging for a market, either. Prices range from $3.50 to $6.50, and prime new-milk-fed calves are worth $7 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Considering the heavy run of sheep and lambs, there was a good trade, altho prices for lambs were easier. The quality of the bulk of the lambs was not good, many of them having little or no fat on them, and fully 90 per cent. of them were bucks, which goes to show the indolence and carelessness of a large number of the Ontario farmers. Prices ranged from $4 to $4.50 for export ewes, and $3 to $3.75 per cwt. for bucks; lambs sold from $5 to $5.80, the latter price being paid for a few select lots, the bulk selling at $5 to $5.60 per cwt. Ewes for breeding purposes are in extra demand, selling at $4.25 to $4.50 per cwt; lambs for feeding purposes sold at $5 to $5.50 per cwt., and the bulk of them were bucks at that.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris bought about 1000 hogs at unchanged quotations. Selects, $6.40 and lights and fats $6.15 per cwt.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

Veals—Receipts, 175 head; active and 25c higher, $4.50 to $8.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 2600 head; fairly active and about steady; heavy, $6.25 to $6.75; mixed and Yorkers, $6.80 to $6.85; roughs, $5.25 to $6.00; dairies, $6 to $6.75.

Twelve Are Dead.

London, Sept. 21.—Twelve persons are known to be dead and seventeen injured in the wreck of the Scotch express on the Great Northern Railway at Grantham yesterday morning, but it was stated late last night that there are other bodies under the wreckage which has not yet been cleared.

Edward's Lose Stock.

Rockland, Sept. 21.—Fire Wednesday destroyed the stock farm of W. C. Edwards & Co., and the loss is estimated at $64,000; partly covered by insurance. The main building and the annexs were destroyed, including some imported pedigreed cattle. Six head of prize winners were lost.

Mrs. Pentecost Improved.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—Mrs. Pentecost, of Toronto, who was so severely injured in the Gilmour Hotel fire, is reported as doing favorably, and it as now expected that she will commer.

INTERESTING FACTS

FOR NEARLY EVERY MAN, WOMAN OR CHILD.

A short time ago we published an article recommending to our readers the new discovery for the cure of Dyspepsia, called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and the claim then made regarding the wonderful curative properties of the remedy have been abundantly sustained by the facts. People who were cautious about trying new remedies advertised in the newspapers and were finally induced to give Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets a trial were surprised and delighted at the results. In many cases a single package costing but 50 cents at any drug store made a complete cure and in every instance the most beneficial results were reported. From a hundred or more received we have space to publish only a few of the latest, but assure our readers we receive so many commendatory letters that we shall publish each week a fresh list of genuine, unsolicited testimonials and never publish the same one twice.

From James Yemmeisler, LaCrosse, Wis.: Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are doing me more good than anything I ever tried and I was so pleased at results that I gave away several boxes to my friends who have also had the same benefits.

From Jacob Anthony, Portmurray, New Jersey: I have taken Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets with the best results. I had Dyspepsia for 6 years, and had taken a great deal of medicine, but the Tablets seem to take right a hold and I feel good. I am a farmer and lime burner and I heartily recommend to everyone who has any trouble with his stomach to use these Tablets.

From Mrs. M. K. West, Preston, Minn.: I have received surprisingly good effects from using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I gave one-half of my last box to a friend, who also suffered from indigestion, and she had the same good results.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a certain cure for all forms of indigestion. They are not claimed to be a cure-all, but are prepared for stomach troubles only, and physicians and druggists everywhere recommend them to all persons suffering from nervous dyspepsia, sour or acid stomach, heartburn, bloating or wind on stomach and similar disorders.

UNION TRUST COMPANY

Formed to Make Investments For the Foresters.

Dr. Oronhyatekha Says Counsel Advised New Company Instead of Purchasing Control of Provincial Trust Co. — Witness Admits Foresters' Money Could Go Into Channels Through Trust Co. Not Authorized by Insurance Act.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—Yesterday morning Dr. Oronhyatekha, Supreme Chief Ranger of the I. O. F., was again on the stand before the Royal Insurance Commission.

The increase in rates in 1899 over the old schedule of 1881 was shown by a statement filed by witness to have been from 26 to 110 per cent., the greater percentage being on advanced ages.

$1,000 For Dr. Montague.

From another statement filed it appeared that Dr. Montague received a special allowance of £200 in addition to his salary and expenses while in Australia representing the Foresters. It also transpired that, although the expenditure under the heading of "Organizing Work" was materially reduced in 1903 and 1904, the reduction was offset by a new item for "bonuses and commissions" which amounted to $36,000 and $40,000 respectively for the years named.

The expenditures on the publication of the official organ, for legal expenses and the loss sustained by the operation of a cafe in the Temple building were also dealt with.

A further loan from the sick and funeral benefit fund of $150,000 to the Orphans' Home, which also borrowed an additional $50,000 from the Traders' Bank, was also disclosed by the evidence.

Genesis of Union Trust Co.

Dr. Oronhyatekha next related the genesis of the formation of the Union Trust Co., established for the purpose of investing the surplus funds of the I. O. F. The Supreme Executive, in December, 1898, declined an invitation to take a larger interest in the Provincial Trust Co. Subsequently representations were made to him by prominent members of the order of the advisability of making some better provision for investing the surplus funds of the order, and in January, 1900, a resolution was passed by the Executive authorizing the purchase from time to time of stock in the Provincial Trust Co. until a controlling interest was acquired. Mr. Wm. Laidlaw, K. C., to whom the task of securing the stock was entrusted, advised that a new company be formed, and the Union Trust Co. was the result.

Board of Management.

The composition of the board of management was to include Messrs. Foster, Stevenson, Wilson, McGillivray and the witness.

The Union Trust Co. was incorporated on Aug. 7, 1902, and the capital stock was placed at $1,000,000. This was afterwards raised to $2,000,000.

The agreement between the Supreme Court and the Union Trust Co. was read by Mr. Shepley. The Union Trust Co. was appointed the investing agent of the I. O. F. which was to provide the funds of the order for investment. The Trust Co. guaranteed the security, and annual rate of 4 per cent. per annum and its dealings were to be subjected to an inspection made by the Supreme Court as well as the Department of Insurance.

Mr. Shepley then read a report prepared by Mr. Laidlaw of the taking over of the Provincial by the Union Co. The Provincial had total assets amounting to $99,540.42 and liabilities of $26,324, giving a surplus of $73,215.93. The stock was bought for 65 cents in the dollar.

His Inscrutable Smile.

"As far as we can make out," said Mr. Shepley, "the Foresters paid out $82,654.50 for Provincial stock for the Union Trust and received from that company $50,000 and no more.

The witness smiled.

Mr. Shepley found another item which brought the amount down to $28,607.60. Apparently at the end of 1903 this was still being carried by the Foresters.

The witness couldn't explain.

"Well the Foresters are out that money and are not getting a copper of interest on it." On Dec. 31, '05, the same asset appears amounting to over $20,000. The Union Trust should carry this instead of the Foresters. It is an unproductive asset," said counsel.

"I would not be surprised," said the witness.

$110 For Every $100.

In addition to the monies handed over as surplus funds, the Union Trust Co. were paid $110 for every $100 worth of stock held by the Foresters. Subsequently the capital stock of the Union Trust was increased another half million and the Foresters took it all at $110 per share.

"You have now a very large sum of money at stake in the Union Trust Co.?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"Oh, yes."

Mr. Shepley could find no minute showing any authority given by the I. O. F. to the executive to take stock in the Union Trust Co. The matter was entered upon without a shred of written authority from the executive.

"You put your money into the Union Trust Co. where it may go into channels which are not authorized by the Insurance Act," asked counsel.

"Sure," said the witness.

The Commission adjourned to meet to-day at 10.30.

Sinks In Red River.

Winnipeg, Sept. 21.—The only steamer Winnipeg boasts, the Alexandra, which has been plying the river for years, was sunk yesterday afternoon and the crew had a narrow escape from drowning. She was ordinarily used as an excursion boat, but between seasons was used for general purposes. A barge she was towing swung against her and stove her in. She sank in a few minutes.

Typhoid of Ottawa.

Ottawa, Sept. 21.—There are fifty cases of typhoid in the city. The low water is blamed.

BY ACCLAMATION.

Alex. Ferguson Elected For Ontario Vacancy In Cardwell.

Beeton, Sept. 22.—The nomination for filling the vacancy in the local Legislature caused by the resignation of E. A. Little was held in the Town Hall, Beeton, yesterday afternoon, by Wm. McDermott, returning officer.

Alexander Ferguson was nominated by Harry Grofe, seconded by Thomas Hammell, and the statutory hour for receiving nominations having passed, and no other nominations having been received, Mr. Ferguson was declared elected by acclamation.

George Christal was then voted to the chair and short speeches were made by H. Lennox, M. P.; Jas. Duff, M. P. P., and W. J. Bell.

Mr. Ferguson then went to the platform and in a neat speech thanked the electors for the honor conferred on him.

Tolmie In Bruce.

Tara, Sept. 22.—The convention of the Liberal Association of North Bruce was held yesterday for the purpose of nominating a standard-bearer for the bye-election to fill the vacancy caused by the death of L. T. Bland. There was a full representation from every part of the riding, and John Tolmie's was the only name to go before the convention. Among the speakers was Hon. Charles Hyman, who made a speech of half an hour.

The meeting broke up with cheers for the candidate.

Railway Plans Approved.

Ottawa, Sept. 22.—The Railway Commission has approved of the location plans of the Georgian Bay to the seaboard branch of the C. P. R. This line, which connects Victoria Harbor with Peterboro, will be about 98 1-2 miles long. The Commission has also approved the location plans of the Canadian Northern from Montreal to nearly as far as Ottawa.

Sage Heirs Compromise.

New York, Sept. 22.—By a settlement arrived at here yesterday, the legatees under the will of Russell Sage are to receive from the executors of the estate double the amount of the legacies upon condition that the will be not contested. The will was admitted to probate without a contest.

It is wise to save the first dollar that one makes in business, but wiser to save the last.

THE CUBAN SITUATION.

Secretary Taft Cables Its Gravity to the Man With the Big Stick at Washington.

Havana, Sept. 22.—Secretary Taft has cabled to President Roosevelt regarding the gravity of the situation and Mr. Roosevelt is expected to dictate the future program of his commissioners.

A demonstration was made yesterday by armed revolutionists within a mile of the scene of the peace conference. Gen. Acosta with 300 insurgents, encamped west of Minister Morgan's villa at Mariano, and a half mile eastward were rural guards, militia and mounted police.

Pino Guerra's augmented force is only a short distance away.

Cannot Come to the Bush.

The arrival here of three of the largest United States battleships and two cruisers, besides those already here, has had little effect on the insurgents in the child, and when the leaders of the revolution were apprised of the big squadron now in Cuban waters, the greeted the information with Spanish expressions to the effect that "They cannot come to the bush."

Palma May Resign.

The rumor was abroad last night that President Palma, the members of his Cabinet and the representatives and Senators elected last December will resign to-day, thus conceding practically all the insurgents have been contending for, and opening a way for the settlement of the difficulty without American intervention.

President Palma declined to be interviewed on the subject, and other members of the Government stoutly denied the rumor.

Overseas Mail Makes Record.

Quebec, Sept. 22.—The overseas train left Vancouver on Monday night at 7 o'clock, six hours behind its schedule, and arrived here yesterday at 2 o'clock, having crossed the continent in 83 hours, allowing three hours for difference in time, or at an average speed of 35 miles an hour. This is a long-distance record for an unbroken trip by one continuous train.

Claims Land In Guelph.

Hamilton, Sept. 22.—John Connor says that 200 acres in Guelph, upon which the Sleeman Brewery, the cotton mills and other large buildings stand, belong to him. He says that his father a veteran of the war of 1812, was given a patent of these lands, and he has placed his case in the hands of a lawyer.

Newspaper Tergiversation Aptly Described by the Premier.

Big Stick In the Hands of the Government to Secure Cheaper Power For the People—Powers Of Expropriation and Operation Relied Upon in Default of Other Means If Found Necessary In People's Interest.

Toronto, Sept. 22.—The Prime Minister of Ontario has sounded no uncertain note as to the position of the Ontario Government respecting the power question. A published interview, not properly expressing his position, Mr. Whitney yesterday dictated the following statement:

"A proper understanding of the powers and duties of the hydro-electric commission, which can be acquired by anybody who chooses to read the statute, would prevent any suggestion that the commission can be or will be ignored by the Government.

"The hydro-electric commission is in fact a sub-committee of the Cabinet with an engineer added for the purpose of making the work of the commission easier. The act itself is clear that all the powers given by its provisions to the commission are subject to, and are the subject of, Cabinet control.

"A glance at the act will also make it plain that the result would be the same whether the commission was given such control; and, in neither case, could the Government escape responsibility by giving such control to any body or commission.

Wolves In Sheep's Clothing.

"At a later period, I may have something to say regarding the efforts that are being made by means of letters paid for as advertisements, but with any intimation as to their being advertisements carefully suppressed, which have appeared in a number of newspapers. I wonder what the people of this province will say, when proofs are laid before them, that newspapers which in their editorial columns denounce the Government for alleged abandonment of its policy in the interests of the power companies, in another column publish statements (for which they are paid), made in the interest of the electric companies, denouncing the Government for exactly opposite reasons from those given in the editorial columns.

Cheap Power's Big Stick.

"The Government will see to it that municipalities, and other consumers of power, shall receive power at reasonable rates.

"The powers of expropriation and operation given in the act will be relied upon by the Government as a means, in default of others, of carrying out the intentions of the act.

"Time will show whether those interested in preventing the consumers from receiving power at reasonable rates will fare any better for the newspaper campaign which, were the subject not serious, would be ludicrous in the extreme."

His Grandfather With Wolfe.

Chatham, Sept. 22.—James Marquand died yesterday suddenly at his home in this city, aged 82. His grandfather on his mother's side, Col. James Alexander, was one of Gen. Wolfe's staff officers at the taking of Quebec.

A LAND SPECULATION.

$165,000 of Foresters' Funds Used to Buy Manitoba Wheat Lands—Temple Cafe a Loss.

Toronto, Sept. 22.—One particular bit of speculation on the part of Hon. George E. Foster, M. P., Hon. Dr. Montague, ex-M. P., John A. MacGillivray and Dr. Oronhyatekha with $165,000 of the Foresters' funds was examined by Mr. Shepley before the insurance commission yesterday afternoon. They formed the quartette syndicate to buy 44,000 acres of Manitoba wheat land and borrowed the money from the Foresters, Dr. Montague giving a mortgage in his own name for $133,000 as security. Up to the first of January, 1906, interest had been paid and the order was simply carrying the loan along, waiting for a boost in land prices to sell at a profit.

Dr. Oronhyatekha informed the commission that recently the land had been sold in such a way that the old Foresters' mortgage had been wiped out.

Temple Cafe Lost $41,387.

When the examination opened in the morning the first thing dealt with was the Temple Cafe financial statement. This showed a loss for the three years the cafe was in operation of $41,387. Dr. Oronhyatekha believed that the enterprise would have made money had the cafe been supplied with liquors, but this he would not consent to, but at the same time thought it was more or less an advertisement for the Temple itself.

The Temple Building.

The original purchase of the Temple Building was made in January, 1895, and the property at that time was made over to Miss Jessie Bailey, Oronhyatekha's private secretary. The order's broker had said that "someone unknown should be the principal in the transaction," and Miss Bailey lent her name, for which she afterwards received $1,000, because her interest in the affair had been talked about.

In March, 1895, the corner was bought and later the Bay street property. Miss Bailey mortgaged the property to the order for $200,000, to give the order a claim on the property. After the property was purchased it was managed by the solicitors of the order.

"Miss Bailey conveyed the property to the order in 1896."

"Yes."

Ontario Realty Company.

"The Ontario Realty Company was formed?"

"Yes. The act, instead of giving us what we wanted, only gave us half. We had $700,000 worth of property, and the act only allowed us to hold $350,000. We formed the company, not, as somebody has said, to evade the act, but to comply with it, to bring our holdings within the act."

"Was it your intention to have the company hold other land?"

"Oh, no. It was simply to give us a fighting position in case anyone should prosecute us for holding more land than we ought to have had."

CAR OF DYNAMITE EXPLODES

Eleven Persons Killed, More Than 50 Injured, and 500 Persons Homeless at Jellico, Kentucky.

Knoxville, Tenn., Sept. 22.—A terrific dynamite explosion yesterday caused the loss of eleven lives, and more or less seriously injured not less than 50 persons at Jellico, Ky. Property damage estimated at $1,000,000 was done, and the town was practically destroyed. At least 500 persons are homeless.

The Union Depot of the Southern Railway and the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, located about 100 yards from the place of the explosion, was shattered to splinters.

The explosion occurred upon the Kentucky side of Jellico, and in consequence every house on that side of the town is wrecked. As a result, it is estimated that one-seventh of the population of the two Jellicos is homeless.

A car loaded with dynamite, and consigned to the Rand Powder Co., was sidetracked in the yards used jointly by the Southern Railway and the Louisville and Nashville.

The explosion was caused by three men shooting at a mark on the car. The car contined 400 cases of high explosive.

The spot where the car stood is marked by a hole 20 feet deep and about 30 feet in diameter.

Clifford Liddycoat Shot Dead.

Thorold, Sept. 22.—Clifford Liddycoat, a boy of 12 years, son of George Liddycoat of this town, was shot in the face and instantly killed in Wilson's bush, near here, yesterday. He was in company with a boy named James Wilkie, about 16 years of age, the owner of the shotgun, who says that Liddycoat shot himself accidentally. Wilkie says it occurred during the morning, although he did not mention it until the afternoon, some hours after. A coroner's inquest will be held to-day.

Falls to Death From Window.

Arnprior, Sept. 22.—Mrs. Campbell, wife of the proprietor of the Campbell House, died yesterday from injuries received in falling from an upstairs window on Thursday night. She leaned out of the window to close the shutters and lost her balance.

Millions For Ships.

Buenos Ayres, Sept. 22.—According to The Nacion, the Government proposes to expend $29,500,000 of the $32,500,000 which it has asked for in purchasing three large iron-clads, nine torpedo-boat destroyers and 21 torpedo boats. The remaining $3,000,000, in addition to $2,000,000 voted last year, will be spent for mines, floating batteries, river gunboats and transports.

READ ABOUT INDIANS AND OUTDOOR LIFE

in a little book that costs nothing. The book describes the Northwest, the land of the future. It is printed on the best paper, is interesting, profusely illustrated and full of information. It is suitable for your own home, for schools or libraries. It describes the wonderful Yellowstone Park, the Wild Bitterroot Mountains in Montana, the Queniut Indians—almost unknown — on the North Pacific Coast, the grand Columbia River scenery, the marvellous Puget Sound region, and Alaska. It costs but the postage required to mail it. It will be sent to any address for six cents. The book is "Wonderland 1906," published by the Northern Pacific Railway, and is for general distribution. Send six cents to A. M. Cleland, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minnesota, or as many times six cents as you wish copies, with proper addresses, and the little volume will be promptly forwarded by that gentleman. Don't wait! The book has an object—to educate and inform the public about the Northwest, the region that Lewis and Clark explored and made known to us. Help it perform its mission. 21-3t

CITY OF BELLEVILLE

TREASURER'S SALE OF LANDS IN ARREARS FOR TAXES.

City of Belleville, Province of Ontario, To Wit;

By virtue of a warrant issued by the Mayor under the Corporate Seal of the City of Belleville, to me directed, bearing date the twenty-eighth day of August, 1906, commanding me to levy upon the lands in arrears for taxes, with the costs. Said list of lands for sale in the municipality for taxes has been prepared and copies may be had in my office, and the said advertisement empowering such list is being published in The ONTARIO GAZETTE on September 1st, 8th, 15th and 22nd, 1906.

I hereby give notice that unless such arrears and all costs are sooner paid I shall proceed to sell the said land, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the payment of the taxes and costs thereon, at the City Hall, in the said City of Belleville, on Tuesday, the 4th day of December, A.D. 1906, at the hour of eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

DAVID PRICE,
City Treasurer.

A Weak Cause.

Mr. Aylesworth, the new Minister of Justice, has been taking part in the parliamentary bye-election campaign. He spoke at Aylmer, in behalf of Mr. Hepburn, the Liberal nominee in East Elgin, and helped to strengthen the opinion, says the Montreal Gazette, that he waited to enter political life till he was too old to learn how to effectively play the game. He is a Government leader, a man who should strike a note of action when he appears before the voters to ask for their support. His speech appears to have been made up chiefly of a series of complaints against the Opposition. He sought for sympathy because of the way some Opposition papers had spoken of him. He was for years counsel for the Bell Telephone Company, and did something to render abortive the foolish idea that the Government should own the country's telephone and telegraph services, but he does not like to have the past recalled and complains when it is recalled. He had a long indictment to present against those who had been instrumental in the unseating of that apostle of narrowness, Mr. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance. Mr. Fielding has gone down because a friend who ran away rather than tell what he knew, was found guilty of having bribed voters to mark their ballots for him as the Liberal candidate in Shelburne and Queens. A law which has been on the Statute book for thirty years makes such bribery cause for annulling an election Many men have suffered because of it. There was no reason why, Mr. Fielding's campaign having been corrupt, he should not also suffer.. The Tories cannot prosecute him except under the law and where such is the case the guiltless man has no fear. Mr. Fielding, moreover, is a man utterly without mercy when dealing with his opponents, and so has no case for mercy for himself. If what Mr. Aylesworth said in East Elgin is the best a clever man can say for the Laurier Government, its case is rather bad. A ministry crying for sympathy because of an opposition's course puts itself out of court.

Ontario's Prosperity

Ontario has entered upon an era of prosperity that is remarkable, and almost bids fair to destroy the old pessimistic aphorism about the certainty of death and taxes, at least so far as the latter is concerned.

Big on the public horizon looms the mineral Eldorado of New Ontario, enough has been officially forthcoming from Prof. Miller to assure wonderful wealth in the Government-owned Gillies limit, and throughout the northern country many private mining speculations have been richly successful.

On the raising of the license fees this year it is estimated that the province will receive some $250,000 more than ever before. This, too, is only the Government's share; the municipalities individually also participate in the mammoth increase.

Last year the succession duties totalled $661,178.36. This year they will touch the million mark.

For the half year ending June 30 last the total net earnings of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, owned and operated by the Province, were $250,042. For the six months previous they were $26,476, and the freight traffic particularly is increasing by leaps and bounds.

The Agricultural Department reports that the present is the most successful in the agricultural history of the Province. Crops have yielded bountifully and prices have been good Timber dues have materially increased and the sale of the timber along the line of the T. and N. O. to prevent forest fires will materially swell the treasury bags.

The increase of taxation upon railways benefits both the Government and the municipalities, both sharing in the proceeds.

The banks are contributing more than heretofore. Under the new act they pay on all branches.

The mining licenses, from which $14,625.55 was realized last year, will double that amount this year.

The Provincial Secretary's Department is collecting monies owing to asylums and charitable institutions, and every legislative department reports similarly encouraging information concerning the minor matters of revenue.

The next annual financial statement of the province will be awaited with much interest. Yet Ontario is only on the threshold of her immense resources With sound, business-like and honest Government the possibilities of the future seems almost unlimited.

The Working-Man.

To the hard-working man health means everything. In the light of what Bu-Ju is doing for hard workers, Bu-Ju means everything. Arthur Owen, of Simcoe, Ontario, says:

"I have been greatly benefited by Bu-Ju. When I began, my back was very lame—my heart working badly. My work was very trying—but the lameness decreased—on the second or third day I could work as hard as I wished."

Why suffer, when fifty cents will bring back your old-time strength? Try a sample—free.

Once in a while, in a listless sort of way, people are beginning to talk about next January's municipal election. The impression seems to prevail that Mayor Sulman would not stand up and be shot before he would refuse to take the nomination for another term. As to the aldermen, it is not likely there will be more than twenty candidates in the field. The dog owners are hoping, with tears in their eyes, that there will be eleven candidates, anyhow, for they dearly want to hand one of the present City Fathers a lemon.

Dun's Review shows that the cost of living has increased nearly 50 per cent. in the last 10 years. The Grit Hamilton Times asks: "Have your earnings increased at that ratio in the ten years?" We doubt if many people's have. The Times is one of the papers which is continually prating about the "good Grit times," for which it credits Laurier but it doesn't throw any violets at him over the 50 per cent. increase in living expenses. Why not? He's as much responsible for one as the other.

This seems to be the limit in the matter of usury. A man and his wife in Montreal signed a note promising to pay the sum of nineteen dollars, with interest at the rate of five thousand two hundred per cent. No doubt there are some people in this city who would like to make a few loans at half that rate of interest. It it were possible that there should ever be another crucifixion, Montreal seems to contain people who could qualify for a position on either side of the gentle "Man of Sorrows," when they nailed him to the cruel cross.

A special meeting of the general conference would be summoned to change the constitution so that ladies can be admitted to all the privileges that laymen enjoy."

At a meeting of the police commissioners of St. Catharines, held recently, County Judge Carman (brother of Rev. Dr. Carman) made a few remarks for the benefit of members of the police force. The Judge's remarks are worthy the attention of policemen in many other places besides St. Catharines. Here they are:

"It seems to me," said his honor, emphatically, "that the policemen must be both deaf and blind. They don't seem to notice as they walk along the streets that many of the city by-laws are being broken constantly. I've seen a six-foot policeman duck in order to walk under awnings, when they know that the law says the awnings must be at least six feet high. I myself am by no means six feet high, and yet I have to duck my head sometimes. Yet, our policemen don't seem to notice these things. Then they see piles of merchandise left standing on the sidewalks in some cases from morning till night, and the bluecoats simply walk around them and make no complaint. It is the same way with the owners of horses who leave them tied on the business streets, which is against the law. A horse may only be left tied in front of a place of business for such reasonable time as it would take to transact some small business. It is the business of the police to lay complaints in such cases as I have mentioned. The business man or the average citizen should not be expected to do it. That's what we have the police for, and if we can't get them to do what we want them to, we simply have to clean them out and have other men put in their places."

Canadian Football Guide.

This month's issue of Spalding's Athletic Library is the Official Canadian Football Guide for 1906. The Guide has been edited by the Rev. A. F. Barr and Dr. W. B. Hendry, and is without doubt one of the most complete Football Guides ever published in the interest of Canadian sports. The book contains group photos of the leading teams of Canada, as well as full page pictures of R T. Shillington, E. M. O'Brien, John B. Hay, John Davidson, S. S. DuMoulin and W. A. Hewitt, as well as pictures of the Rev. A. F. Barr and Dr. W. B. Hendry. Interesting data is published in the volume; past officers and a list of the Canadian champions, as well as the official rules governing the game. The book will be sent postpaid by A. G Spalding & Bros., 443 St. James St., Montreal, Canada, upon receipt of the price, 10 cents.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Eastern Baseball league season ends to-day. Buffalo wins the pennant, and Toronto gets the booby prize.

The Chicago Nationals now have the pennant cinched, and it looks very much as though the Chicago team in the American league will take the rag, too.

Trotting at Columbus yesterday, Sweet Marie went a mile in 2.02, without a wind shield, lowering the track record.

Not much was done, we are told, at the hockey meeting held last night.

George Siler, referee of the Gans-Nelson affair, has sued Nelson and his manager, Nolan, for $50,000, alleging slander. The Dane and his manager have been saying that Siler favored the coon in the mix-up.

Harold Armstrong, star cover-point of the Smith's Falls Federal League champions, is in Winnipeg on his way westward. Should the inducements of the western country not prove sufficiently alluring he will return to Ontario. He expects to be transferred to Ottawa, in which case he will figure on the line-up of the former Stanley Cup holders this coming winter.

Blair Russell, the crack right wing man of the Montreal Victoria Hockey Club, whose brother was married in Peterboro this week, has been for some time out of the possibility of playing hockey there next season, for he has been residing in Toronto, and will likely turn out with the Argonauts this winter.

"Grindy" Forrester, a former O.H.A. star, point player of the champion Houghton team of the International Professional Hockey League, passed through the city yesterday on his way from his home in Fergus to Thessalon. Forrester has practically decided to quit hockey for one winter at least, owing to an injury to his knee sustained while playing Association football, which has laid him up at Fergus for over two months. "Grindy" can walk all right now, but the knee will hardly be strong enough to use in strenuous hockey games this winter. He has a nice position in Thessalon and likes the place.—Toronto Star.

BLOOD TROUBLES

CURED THROUGH THE RICH, RED BLOOD DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS ACTUALLY MAKE.

Thousands of women suffer from headaches, backaches, dizziness, languor and nervousness. Few realize that their misery all comes from the bad state of their blood. They take one thing for their head, and another for their stomach, a third for their nerves. And yet all the while it is simply their blood that is the cause of all their trouble. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure all these and other blood troubles because they actually make new, rich, red blood. Mrs J. H. McArthur, St. Thomas, Ont., says: "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done me a world of good. For about eighteen months I was a constant sufferer. I was terribly run down and the least exertion left me fagged out. I slept badly at night and this further weakened me, and finally I had to give up housekeeping and go boarding as I was quite unable to do any housework. I took doctor's medicine but it was of little or no benefit. One day a neighbor told me how much benefit she had derived from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and advised me to try them. I sent and got three boxes, and by the time I had used them I could feel a change for the better. Then I got four boxes more, and before they were all gone my health was fully restored. To see me now one would not think I had ever been sick for a day, and I can honestly say I owe my renewed health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the greatest cure there is for the weakness and backaches and sideaches of anaemia; all the distress of indigestion, all the pains and aches of rheumatism, sciatica and neuralgia, and the weakness and ill health that follows any disturbance of regularity in the blood supply. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Mark Twain Pleads For Simple Spelling.

New York, Sept. 21.—In the course of an after-dinner speech at a banquet held at the Waldorf Astoria in connection with the annual meeting of the Associated Press, Samuel L. Clemens discussed "Reformed Spelling" in characteristic vein. He said in part.

I am here to make an appeal to the nations in behalf of the simplified spelling. I have come here because they cannot all be reached except through you. There are only two forces that can carry light to all the corners of the globe — only two —the sun in the heavens and the Associated Press down here. I may seem to be flattering the sun, but I do not mean it so; I am meaning only to be just and fair all around. You speak with a million voices; no hearts and intellects as you, except Rudyard Kipling, and as you, except Rudyard Kipling, and he cannot do it without your help.

If the Associated Press will adopt and use our simplified forms and thus spread them to the ends of the earth, covering the whole spacious planet with them as with a garden of flowers, our difficulties are at an end. And we shall be rid of phthysis and phthistic and pneumonia and pneumatics and diphtheria and pteradactyl and all those other insane words which no man addicted to the simple Christian life can try to spell and not lose some of the bloom of his piety in the demoralizing attempt.

Died at Point Ann

Mrs. Geo. Pion, aged 26 years, died yesterday afternoon at Point Ann. Deceased was ill but a few days. A husband and two small children survive.

Skilful Operation

A Millbrook veterinary surgeon performed a very skilful operation recently on a horse belonging to Mr. George McDonald, Clarke, says a Peterboro paper. The animal was almost choking, the diaphram being closed with a disease of a diphtheretic nature. The operation is called tracheotomy, and consisted in cutting into the windpipe, and inserting a tube to enable the horse to breath. This tube was left in for a week, to breathe through, and in the end the animal fully recovered.

What Part ?

What particular part of the nerve-centres should we expect to have the greatest influence in affecting and controlling the general nervous system?

Reasonably it would be the largest and most sensitive. Well now, of all the centres in the nervous system, the largest most delicate sense, the sense most constantly in use, the largest brain "gray-matter" area is that of SIGHT.

For an average of 16 hours daily continuously, the feeling in the visual centres is constant. No other sense in the nerve centres is capable of such continued endurance.

With the proper glasses this severe drain upon the brain and nerves is prevented from causing a breakdown in the general health.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"KING RICHARD" LAST NIGHT.

That clever Canadian tragedian, John Griffith, did not get the audience last night that he and his supporting company deserved. There was not by any means a good house, and a good house was certainly what the play merited Mr. Griffith was seen here before in other Shakesperian characters: last night he took the title role in King Richard the Third, and acted the part with his usual ability. The character is a heavy strain on the physical and mental capacibities of any actor taking it, and Mr. Griffith more than fulfilled the requirements of his role. The development of Richard's character was a rare revelation of dramatic genius, and in Mr. Griffith's hands it did not suffer. He had his audience on the pinpoints of interest and expectation from the assassination scene in the Tower till the death throes of the Plantagenet dynasty on Bosworth field.

Charles Sutton, as King Henry VI., and William Lloyd, as Richmond and Buckingham, were capable supporters. Leo Kennedy had the role of Lord Stanley, and was well seconded by Jas. B. Linhart as Duke of Norfolk. Misses Mabel Standish and Katherine Roth adequately portrayed Lady Anne and Edward IV.'s Queen. Edward, Prince of Wales, and the youthful Duke of York were personated by two young ladies, Misses Ethel and Emily Clifton.

The costumes were gorgeous. From beginning to end there was a shimmer of armor and a lavish display of the silks and ermines wherein the dignitaries of these far-off times arrayed themselves when they wished to create an impression. The action of the play gave occasion to a blood-curdling ghost-scene in Richard's tent on the eve of the deciding battle, and a consequent vivid physical and mental display of the pangs of conscience. The battle of Bosworth was also introduced, with attendant sword-play.

In his make-up no less than in his histrionic ability, Mr. Griffith scored a hit, the deformed, ambition-mad and soured king being presented as a hunchback with a shortened leg. At times his eyes really possessed a madman's glare and his whole attitude was that of a crafty, cold and bloody schemer—a crown-crazed tyrant.

"THE GINGERBREAD MAN."

When Frederic Ranken and A. Baldwin Sloane created the new fanciful fairyesque, "The Gingerbread Man," they also created a new character in the mythical child-world, Mrs. Santa Claus. In the play, this character is portrayed in a spirit of delicious burlesque by Ross Snow, who has been seen as Fairy Queen, Dowager, and feminine absurdities for a number of years. He is an awkward, stumbling, good-natured, comical Mrs. Santa, backed by a chorus of pretty girls dressed as good fairies. Jack Horner, The Man From Our Town, Sallie Lunn, Margery Daw, Simple Simon, and other friends of our childhood help to round out one of the most beautiful, interesting and enjoyable entertainments seen in years. The stage pictures are marvels of splendor, while the mechanical and electrical effects are simply wonderful. "The Gingerbread Man" will be the attraction at thee Carman on Tuesday next, Sept. 25.

AN IDEAL WOMAN.

The "Typical American Lady" and Her Home Influence.

The home life of a typical American lady is the sincerest index of her ego. In it she indelibly expresses herself. Here it is that she exercises to the maximum her potentiality and that her personality scores. Presumably she is a wife and mother. Her age? Pouf! A lady of cleverness nonpluses time.

She is her son's best girl, her daughter's chum, a hostess sans reproche. She rules her home with thrift and skill. Her husband safely trusts in her, and her price is above her birth stone.

Pretense never finds a foothold in a lady's menage. Display seems to her well poised mind not only belittling, but savage. She never confounds litter with furnishing or junk with art.

Her house is beautiful, its atmosphere fine and clear. She is never too busy to listen to her "boy" or advise her "girl" or read to their father. Young people en masse delight in her. She is their ideal mother and friend. Laughter is never hushed in her home. Music is welcomed, and budding merit of whatever sort finds in her an earnest and sympathetic ear. —Minna Thomas Antrim in Lippincott's.

THE LATE DR. SNODGRASS.

Man Who Contributed Largely to Certain Important Elements in Canadian National Life.

The Rev. Dr. Snodgrass, who died the other day in Scotland at an advanced age, spent less than a third of his life in Canada, and yet contributed largely to certain important elements of Canadian national life, says The Toronto News. The Established Church of Scotland sent him to Prince Edward Island as a missionary, his high qualities at once asserted themselves, and soon he was a leader of the Old Kirk in British North America. A typical Lowland Scot, of heavy exterior, of somewhat ponderous methods of speech, and giving a first impression of being somewhat keenly alive to the main chance, he possessed a remarkably sound, half humorous judgment, great force, an iron will and withal a keenness of vision, an unselfish regard for the wider outlook, which served his adopted country well. About 1863 he left St. Andrew's Church in Montreal to become Principal of Queen's College. The little University College was a cherished possession of the Church, had flourished not long before, but was in difficulties, chiefly owing to a quarrel in the ranks of its faculty.

Principal Snodgrass was at once the head of Queen's and the virtual leader of the Old Kirk during the critical period which preceded the union of Canadian Presbyterianism. His tenure of the principalship was singularly troubled. Scarcely had the institution pulled itself together under his guidance than two severe financial blows halved its income and threatened it with absolute ruin. A bank in which part of its capital was invested failed, and then the newly-established Provincial Government of Ontario withdrew the grant which formed more than a third of its income. So sanguine a man as Prof. MacKerras, the principal's right hand, despaired. But Snodgrass set his teeth, and by sheer force and work saved the situation. A meeting "pro re nata" of the Synod—the chief court of the Old Kirk—was held at Kingston, and it was determined to raise by subscription what seemed the enormous endowment of $100,000 to replace the lost resources. With incredible toil Snodgrass and MacKerras secured the money. They visited, delivered addresses and canvassed in eighty-six pastoral charges of the Church; the endowment when raised came from 5,200 individual givers. So painful was it to raise funds for educational purposes thirty or forty years ago in Ontario. But the university was saved, and Principal Snodgrass was the one man responsible for the success.

To the endowment trouble succeeded the movement for Presbyterian union. Snodgrass' position was peculiar. The existence of Queen's was an obstacle, for the Voluntary section of the far more numerous Canada Presbyterian Church had formulated a policy of direct antagonism to the control or maintenance of universities by religious denominations. They would not enter a union if Queen's was to be retained as a "child of the Church"; while the Old Kirk was profoundly attached to the college for which it had made many sacrifices. Snodgrass was at once Principal of the university and clerk and virtual leader of the Synod of the Church; in the critical final year he was its moderator or titular leader as well. He had given proof of his loyalty to the college and yet as a statesman of the Church he was zealous for union. In the end he effected the singular compromise by which Queen's continued under the auspices of the united Church, but was given almost boundless autonomy—and, unfortunately, a measure of church support which was anything but boundless. This done, he had to provide a new constitution for the university thus partially cut adrift. In this work he displayed remarkable constructive power and insight. In particular he had the insight and prevision to turn to the alumni as the real constituency of the institution. The system has worked admirably and each successive change has been but a natural expansion of the constitution which Dr. Snodgrass devised.

With church union and the re-constitution of Queen's the Principal's services to Canada terminated. His strength was shaken, a new canvass for funds was inevitable, and he could not face it. An opportunity opened to retire to the parish of Canoble in his native Scotland, and he gave place to Principal Grant. He was a layer of foundations. How well he did his university work his brilliant successor was ever foremost to acknowledge. He bore a principal part, too, in the statesmanlike union of the several Presbyterian branches into the great Canadian Church of to-day; and his was one of the four hands whose clasp, at the memorable meeting in the skating rink in Montreal on June 15th, 1875, consummated the union.

Alberta's Youngest M. P. P.

Mr. James B. Holden, of Vegreville, who has been elected by acclamation to represent the Vermillion district in the Alberta Legislature, has the distinction of being the youngest member of the Legislature, being only 29 years of age. He was born in Singhampton, Simcoe County, Ont., being educated in the Public Schools of that village. When but a lad he was apprenticed to the milling trade. In 1905 he went West to try his fortune. He worked for a time in the flour mills of the Hon. Thomas Greenway in Crystal City, Man. Later he went to Alberta, and settled in Strathcona, and afterwards removed to Leduc, where he purchased grain. About one year ago he was appointed homestead inspector for the eastern part of the province. He settled on a homestead near Vegreville.

Honor For a Canadian.

Mr. H. F. Dawes, University of Toronto, who has been elected to the Wollaston research scholarship in physics at the Conville and Caius College, is a native of Woodstock, this province. He graduated from the university in 1904, and has since filled the post of assistant demonstrator in the department of physics. Mr. Dawes has been consistently carrying on research work, and this has been of such merit as to win him the distinction mentioned. The scholarship is valued at £120 a year. It is held for one year, and for a second year if the work is approved of, and is open to all British, colonial and American students.

ADV. RESPONSIBILITY.

Toronto Paper Discusses Rider of Verdict of Coroner's Jury in the Bridant Murder Case.

The coroner's jury in the Bridant case added this rider to their verdict: "We deprecate the publicity of certain advertisements in certain daily and other papers, which lead to these results." The responsibility of the newspapers might have been expressed in stronger language, says The Toronto Star. A newspaper ought to be held responsible for an advertisement which is an invitation to the commission of a crime, or which is published with fraudulent intent, if that intent is clear from the language, or is otherwise conveyed to the managers of the paper.

Further, there is no reason why a newspaper which knowingly assists in the commission of a crime, should be exempt from the law that punishes the criminal; and if the law does not already cover this case, legislation of that kind should be placed on the statute book.

Some of the magazines published in the United States adopt the policy of guaranteeing the good faith of their advertisements. It is commonly said that this could not be done in the case of a newspaper, which receives every day hundreds of small advertisements over the counter. An examination of the purpose of all these, it is contended, would be impossible. It is true that in the rapid handling of a great mass of business some advertisement of an improper or fraudulent kind might slip in unawares.

But if perfection is not attainable, that is no reason why a great deal should not be done. Many newspaper advertisements are similar to those appearing in the magazines. They are so extensive that they cannot escape notice and supervision; and in the negotiations which precede the contract there are opportunities for becoming acquainted with the character and standing of the advertiser. Many advertisements also appear repeatedly and regularly, and an impropriety which escapes the eye the first time may be detected afterwards. Facts showing fraud may be brought to the notice of the newspaper. In such cases the proprietors and managers of newspapers cannot divest themselves of responsibility.

Even without such a guarantee as is given by the American magazines to which we have referred the newspaper owes to its readers the duty of not lending itself to any plan for deceiving them, and this duty applies as well to advertisements as to any other part of the contents of the paper. It owes also to the community at large the duty of not furthering any crime or criminal practice, and this duty applies as well to the advertising columns as to any other part of the paper.

Alberta's Coat of Arms.

Conscious of their importance as an entity in the unity of the Dominion, the people of Alberta are puzzling their heads as to the best coat of arms for the new province. The Lethbridge News, recalling the fact that the old Territorial shield contains an animal which may be either a polar bear or a white-haired gopher, crawling on a checkerboard, with four sheaves of wheat—not a very original idea—on a white ground underneath, suggests:—"Perhaps we might have a bucking broncho— and perhaps not. A white horse by the way is the oldest known emblem of the English invaders of Britain. As Scotland has the thistle, and Nova Scotia has three of them, we might choose a cactus. It excells the thistle both in the beauty of the flower and in the point it lends to the phrase, "Nemo me impune lacessit" Sugar beets again, might be not less original than wheat sheaves. Though Manitoba has not officially recorded the prairie anemone yet her people have already practically anticipated us in that choice, and as for the wild rose, it is found in profusion in every province from sea to sea. Some of our aboriginal citizens might be pleased with a Blackfoot warrior in eagle plumes, but Edmonton might put in a claim for a Galician in a fan-tailed sheepskin coat."

A Prepared Bull's Eye.

The recent inspection of the Canadian team at Bisley by the Duke of Connaught, recalls an incident that happened a few years ago at the opening of a new rifle range in the South of England. The Duke had been invited to fire the first shot, so he made his way to the 500 yards range, followed by the elite of the neighborhood. Arrived there, he raised his rifle to his shoulder, and after a moment's pause, pulled the trigger. The result, as was plain to everybody present, was a bad miss. The range officer, however, was equal to the occasion, and relieved rather an embarrassing pause by calmly ringing up the butts to ask the exact spot on the bull that had been hit. "Right in the centre, sir," came the prompt response from the mantlets, and, sure enough, when the target was brought down for inspection, there was the bullet hole right through the centre of the target. Subsequent inquiries conducted by the Duke showed, of course, that this hole had been carefully made the night before.

135 Miles Under Two Hours.

Recently, Sir William Van Horne has been smashing railway records. One evening his special train came in to Winnipeg from Brandon, a distance of 134 miles, under two hours, an average speed of 67 miles an hour. At one time the speed indicator registered 79 3-4 miles per hour for a stretch. A distance of 30 miles west of Portage la Prairie was covered in 23 minutes, an average speed of 78 miles per hour. On July 31 Sir William established the long-distance speed record for western lines, his train making the run between Moose Jaw and Winnipeg, 400 miles, in eight hours flat.

Places of Amusement.

The walls of stations on the new tube from Waterloo to Baker street are embellished with maps of London, on which, according to the index in a corner of them, "theatres and places of amusement" are printed in red. Among the places so indicated on the body of the maps are Holloway cattle market, the Foundling hospital, the courts of justice, the Bank of England and Spurgeon's tabernacle.—London Tribune.

LAKE SHORE SPIRIT.

Throughout the entire length and breadth of the great Lake Shore Railway System there is a spirit of co-operation and personal responsibility on the part of employees from the highest to the lowest that is reflected in every detail of the road's operation. The traveller feels that the great army of trained workers have his welfare and comfort at heart as much as though he were the only patron of the road. This spirit—the Lake Shore spirit—is one of the features that have made this line so popular among experienced travellers. Comfort, speed, safety and punctuality here have reached their highest development. Write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O.; or W. DID YOU EVER FIGURE THE COST of a single day's baking—the material, fuel, time and labour—and consider that it is all wasted if the baking is a failure?

Results are usually satisfactory or otherwise according to the flour you use. Is it economy, then, to use a flour of uncertain quality when a few cents more will buy a flour that you can depend upon to produce light, crisp and wholesome bread or pastry?

Royal Household flour does not vary in quality—does not disappoint. It is made from selected hard wheat, milled by a most modern process which guarantees absolute purity. And purity in flour is a matter of the very greatest importance.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE JOURNEY ONWARDS.

As slow our ship her foamy track
Against the wind was cleaving,
Her trembling tenant still look'd back
To that dear isle 'twas leaving.
So loth we part from all we love,
From all the links that bind us;
So turn our hearts, as on we rove,
To those we've left behind us!

When, round the bowl, of vanish'd years
We talk with joyous seeming—
With smiles that might as well be tears,
So faint, so sad their beaming;
While memory brings us back again
Each early tie that twined us,
Oh, sweet's the cup that circles then
To those we've left behind us!

And when, in other climes, we meet
Some isle or vale enchanting,
Where all looks flowery, wild, and sweet,
And nought but love is wanting;
We think how great had been our bliss
If Heaven had but assign'd us
To live and die in scenes like this,
With some we've left behind us!

As travellers oft look back at eve
When eastward darkly going,
To gaze upon that light they leave
Still faint behind them glowing—
So, when the close of pleasure's day
To gloom hath near consign'd us,
We turn to catch one fading ray
Of joy that's left behind us.

The latest report of the Royal National Pension Fund for Nurses of England practically states that there is no other work for women which so surely gets them married as nursing. This fact is not hard to understand. While a nurse's personality does count for something with the patient, still many of those little qualities which appeal to him so strongly are as mechanical as a rule in mathematics.

A lot is heard about civic corruption in New York. But whatever the rot in the civic system, its rulers cannot be accused of stinting the public school appropriations. New York's army of teachers numbers considerably over ten thousand, and they are all well paid. Yet as an evidence of the rapid growth of the city and the difficulty of cities, however rich, adequately keeping building pace with the growth of the school population, it is told by the New York Times that some 72,000 children are taught only part time owing to lack of accommodation. The number is 5,600 greater than at this time last year. New York educates 600,000 children. A number of new school buildings are in course of erection. When they are finished conditions will be somewhat bettered. Youngsters will grow, bless 'em.

An attempt is being made to clear the Canadian market of American silver by a very simple and effective method. Every American silver coin which reaches a Canadian bank never sees daylight again until it reaches the city of Buffalo in the State of New York. There it is exchanged for Canadian coin. That republican silver is disappearing from circulation in Canada is gratifying. One likes to see our handsome King's effigy. It keeps public patriotism alive and cannot be seen too often. That was a clever rogue who advertised that in exchange for one dollar he would send a finely engraved portrait of His Majesty, guaranteed to be genuine by the British Government. The sender of the dollar was rewarded with a Canadian ten-cent piece. This fellow was as clever as the man who advertised that for ten cents he would send a yard of silk of any color desired. The article sent on receipt of the dime was a yard of silk thread. These men must have been nearly related to the men who advertised a book the sale or reading of which, in some countries, was prohibited. The parties who sent a dollar were amazed when they received a copy of the Holy Bible. The end, it was claimed, justified the means, and the end was to get the good book into hands that by any other method than a ruse it would never reach.

DRESS HINTS.

The rule for frilling is one and a quarter the length of the edge to be trimmed.

Gathers should always be set on the right side, but never with a needle; use a large pin.

If the material just under the neckband at the back has become worn insert a tiny yoke or chemisette made of all over lace.

In sewing a seam put the stitches closely together, but lightly, into the cloth, being careful not to pull the thread tight, as this causes the seam to draw.

When cutting out sleeves to avoid the disaster of cutting both for the same arm fold the material either face to face or back to back. Place the pattern on it and cut both together.

To put on the tape that holds the blouse in position around the waist sew up the shoulder and underarm seams, slip it on and tie the tape around the waist, pinning it at the right place in the center of the back.

Saving.

Do your saving at the beginning of the week, you who live upon allowances, or, what is the same, so far as this counts, upon a salary. The extra expenses which often come upon you unexpectedly in the latter part of the week may be easily met if you've been husbanding your resources a little, instead of spending up to the last cent. A good plan is to allow yourself so much for little expenses for a given length of time, and then to keep within daily bounds, saving even a bit from that, if possible. Then, if it is not called upon by some little emergency, either put it away or use it toward some definite purpose, such as subscribing to a good magazine, getting a good book or seeing a good play, all of which should be considered as mental investments.

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath.

BAD ODOR OF INDIGESTION SMOKING, DRINKING OR EATING CAN BE INSTANTLY STOPPED.

Sample Package Mailed Free.

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning,—that awful sour, bilious, bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines all the impurities there massed together and which causes the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm; in fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal, and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample, and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable, and "cleaner" inside.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 50 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

ADOPTS CHURCH UNION

Briefer Debate Than Anticipated in the Conference.

Report of Committee on Church Union Unanimously Adopted by Methodist General Conference—Anglican and Baptist Church Clauses Eliminated to Obviate Misunderstanding — Dr. Sutherland Declines Election.

Montreal, Sept. 22.—Taken up at 9.30, the report of the committee on church union was unanimously adopted at 10.45 last night by the Methodist general conference. The clause referring to the invitation to the Anglican and Baptist churches was eliminated, with a view to obviating the possibility of misunderstanding.

A committee of 65 was appointed to carry on the negotiations.

Debate Was Brief.

The debate was briefer than anticipated, and was marked with no special feature beyond the earnest devotional spirit manifested. Dr. Potts owned himself a convert.

Dr. Griffin regretted there would be no Methodist Church any longer. His father would have opposed it, and his grandfather even more strongly. He dare not fight against it.

Dr. Sutherland thought it was not a burning reality among any of the churches yet. They were feeling their way, but they had met no difficulties yet, such as they had faced in the union of the Methodist churches.

Dr. Shaw did not think unity was to be arrived at by meetings, but by the spirit of God, in His providence. No man had brought him to the point where he stood, but at every meeting he attended he had been strongly conscious of the Divine presence.

Need of Unity.

Rev. J. H. Oliver spoke earnestly of the need for unity in meeting the problems of church work, and Rev. James Livingstone described the spiritual power present at this meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly, when the movement was endorsed.

On suggestion of Joseph Gibson and Dr. Burwash, the clause above-mentioned was dropped by the committee. Most of the speakers dwelt on the remarkable approximation that had been arrived at in the statement of doctrine.

Rev. Dr. E. Crewe was re-elected general secretary of Sunday School and Epworth Leagues.

Rev. Dr. Chown was re-elected general secretary of the temperance and moral reform committee.

The report on the Deaconess' School and the constitution for deaconess work was adopted after the reception of a delegation of four ladies and an address from Miss Scott, superintendent of the training school.

Dr. Sutherland Resigns.

On the first ballot Dr. Sutherland and Rev. James Allen by a vote of 166 and 148 out of 237 were elected as the secretaries for the foreign and home departments of missions, respectively.

Dr. Sutherland thought it his duty, under the circumstances, very courteously, very kindly, but very positively to ask to be excused from taking the position. After discussion, during which he did not recede from his position, a committee was appointed to confer overnight with Dr. Sutherland.

The editorship of The Christian Guardian was the only office which raised a contest. Three ballots were taken. The first with 249 votes gave Creighton 63, Crews 61, Courtice 50, Chown 25, the rest scattering. Rev. W. H. Creighton had 167 out of 260 on the third count

130,000 Homes are Warmed and Fed from the Happy Thought Range

The idea that for an ordinary dwelling "one stove is enough" originated in the superior cooking and heating capacity of the Happy Thought Range. Few rural homes find need of a heater where they have this magnificent range. No stove inventor ever embodied so many good ideas all in one stove as did the designer of the Happy Thought. The arrangement of drafts, the construction of the grate, the circulation of hot air around the oven, the corrugated oven-lining, the ability to heat water and keep it hot are points that put the

in a class by itself. It can heat the whole dwelling in winter, while in summer the fire can be checked immediately after cooking, thus keeping the house delightfully cool. 130,000 households are now using it both for cooking and heating, and from all reports they would not exchange for any other stove in the world. Ask your dealer about it. Every Happy Thought burns coal or wood. Send to us for an illustrated catalogue—free.

libel in this country which gets up and hits you whether you are talking truth or lies."

"English laws are beastly, and that's a fact."

"Reading about them in the paper's quite enough for me. Now, captain, suppose we go ashore with these papers and I can sign off and you can sign on. Afterward we'll have a drop of whiskey together if you like, just to show there's no ill-will."

"You are very polite, captain," said Kettle. "I'm sure I don't like the notion of stepping in to take away your employment. But if it hadn't been me, he'd have got some one else."

The other turned on him quickly.

"Don't think you're doing me a bad turn captain, because you aren't. I was never so pleased to step out of a charthouse in my life. Only thing is, I hope I aren't doing you a bad turn by letting you step in."

"By James," said Kettle, "do speak plain, captain; don't go on hinting like this."

"I am maundering on too much, captain, and that's a fact. Result of being about tired-out, I suppose. But you must excuse me speaking further; there's that confounded libel law to think about. Now, captain, here's the key of the charthouse door, and if you'll let me, I'll go out first and you can lock it behind you. You'll find one of the tumblers beside the water-bottle broken; it fell out of my hand this morning just after I'd docked her; but all the rest is according to the inventory; and I'll knock off threepence for the tumbler when we square up."

They plunged straightway into the aridities of business, and kept at it till the captaincy had been formally laid down and handed over, and then the opportunity for further revelations was gone.

Capt. Williams was clearly worn out with weariness; responsibility had kept him going till then, but now that responsibility had ended he was like a man in a trance. His eyes drooped, his knees failed drunkenly; he was past speech, and if Kettle had not by main force dragged him off to a bed at a temperance hotel, he would have toppled down incontinently and slept in the gutter like one dead. As it was he lay on the counterpane in the heaviest of sleep, the picture of a strong man worn out with watching and labor, and for a minute or so Kettle stood beside the bed and gazed upon him thoughtfully.

"By James," he muttered, "if I could make you speak, captain, I believe you could tell a queerish tale."

But Kettle did not loiter by this taciturn bedside. He had signed on as master of the Sultan of Labuan; he was in Mr. Gedge's employ and earning Mr. Gedge's pay; and every minute wasted on a steamer means money lost. He went briskly across to the south dock and set the machinery of business to work without delay. There was grumbling from mates, engineers and crew that they had been given leisure for scarcely a breath of shore air, but Kettle was not a man who courted popularity from his underlings by offering them indulgences. He stated that their duty was to get the water ballast out and the coal under hatches in the shortest time on record, and mentioned that he was the man who would see it done.

The men grumbled of course; behind their driver's back they swore; two deck hands and three of the stokehold crew deserted, leaving their wages, and were replaced by others from the shipping office; and still the work went remorselessly on under the gray glow of the fog so long as daylight lasted, and then under the glare of raw electric arc lamps. The air was full of gritty dust and the roar of falling coal. A wagon was shunted up, dangled aloft in hydraulic arms, ignominiously emptied end first, and then put to ground again and petulantly sent away to find a fresh load, whilst its successor was being nursed and relieved. Two hundred tons to the hour was what that hydraulic staith could handle, but for all that it did not break the coal unduly.

In the forehold the trimmers gasped and choked as they steered the black avalanches into place; and presently another of the huge staiths crawled up along the dock wall, with a gasping tank-loco and a train of wagons in attendance, and then the Sultan of Labuan was being loaded through the after hatch also. It was a triumph of machinery and organization, and tired men in a dozen departments cursed Kettle for keeping them at such a remorseless pressure over their tasks.

Down to her fresh-water plimsol the steamer was sunk, and then the loading ceased. Even Kettle did not dare to overload. He knew quite well that there were jealous eyes of a seamen's and firemen's union official watching him from somewhere on the quays, and if she was trimmed an inch above her marks the Sultan of Labuan would never be let go through the outer dock gate. So the burden was limited to its legal bounds, and Kettle got his clearance papers with the same fierce, businesslike bustle, and came back and stepped lightly up on to the tramp's upper bridge.

The pilot was there waiting for him, half-admiring, half-repelled; the old blue-faced mate tnd the carpenter were on the forecastle head; the second mate was aft; the chief himself and the third engineer were at the throttle and the reversing gear below. The ship's entire complement had quite surrendered to the sway of this new task master and stood in their coal grime and their tiredness ready to jump at his bidding.

Bristol channel tides are high, and the current of the Usk is swift. It was going to be quick work if they did not miss the tide, and the pilot, who had no special stake in the matter said it could not be done. Kettle, however, thought otherwise, and the pilot in consequence saw some seamanship which gave him chills down the back.

"By gum, captain," he said, when they were fairly out of the river, "you can handle her."

"Wait 'till I know her, pilot, and then I'll show you."

"Haven't got nerves enough. Look you, captain, you'll be having a bad crumple-up if you bustle a big loaded steamboat about the docks at that rate."

"Never bent a plate to my life."

"Well, I hope you never will. Look you, now, you're a little tin wonder in the way of seamanship."

"Quartermaster," said Kettle, "tell me steward to bring two goes of whiskey up here on the bridge. Pilot, if you say such things to me you make me feel like a girl with a new dress, and I want a drop of Dutch courage to keep my blushes back."

"Well," said the pilot when the whiskey came, "here's lots of cargo, captain, and good bonuses."

"Here's deep-draft steamers for you, pilot, and plenty of water under 'em."

The whiskey drained down its appointed channels, and the pilot said: "By the by, I've this for you, captain," and brought out a letter card.

"Typewritten address," said Kettle. "No postmark on the stamp. Who's it from?"

"Man I came across. Look you, though, I didn't know him; but he said there was a useful tip in the letter which it would please you to have after you sailed."

Kettle tore off the perforated edges, and looked inside the card. Here was another anonymous communication, also from "Well-wisher," and, as before, warning him against the machinations of Gedge. "Got no idea who the man was who gave it you?" he asked.

"Well, I did have a bit of a talk with him and a drink, and I rather gathered he might have had something to do with insurance; but he didn't say his name. Why, isn't he a friend of yours?"

"I rather think he is," said Kettle, "but I can't be quite sure yet." He did not add that the anonymous writer guaranteed him a present of £50 if the Sultan of Labuan drew no insurance money till he had moored her in Port Said.

From the very outset the voyage of the Sultan of Labuan was unpropitious. Before she was clear of the Usk it was found that three more of her crew had managed to slip away ashore, and so were gone beyond replacement. Whilst she was still in the brown, muddy waters of the Bristol channel, there were too several breakdowns in the engine room which necessitated stoppages and anxious repairs.

With Murgatroyd, the old blue-face mate, Kettle had been shipmates before, and there existed between the two men a strong dislike and a certain mutual esteem. They interviewed over duty matters when the pilot left. "Mr. Murgatroyd," said the little skipper, "you'll keep hatches off, and do everything for ventilation. This Welsh coal's as gassy as petroleum."

"Aye, aye," rumbled the mate; "but how about when heavy weather comes and the decks are full of water?"

"You'll have fresh orders from me before then. Get hoses to work now and sluice down. The ship's a pigstye."

"Aye, aye; but the hands are dog-tired."

"Then it's your place to drive them. I should have thought you'd been long enough at sea to know that. But if you aren't up to your business, just say, and I'll swop you over with the second mate right now."

The old mate's face grew purpler. "If you want a driver," he said, "you shall have one"; and with that he went his ways and roused the tired deckhands to work after the time-honored methods.

But if Capt. Kettle did not spare his crew he was equally hard on himself. He was at sea now and wearing his sea-going conscience, which was an entirely different piece of mental mechanism to that which regulated his actions ashore. He had received Mr. Gedge's precise instructions to run the coal boat in the ordinary method, and he intended to do it relentlessly and to the letter.

He had had his doubts about Mr. Gedge's real wishes before, and even the episode of Miss Payne, the typewriter, had not altogether deceived him; but the second letter from "Well-wisher," which the pilot brought on board, cleared the matter up beyond a doubt. There was not the faintest chance that Gedge had written that; there was not the faintest reason to disbelieve now that Gedge wished his uneconomical steamboat off his hands, and had arranged for her never again to come into port.

Now, properly approached—say with sealed orders to be opened only at sea—I think there is very little doubt but what Capt. Kettle would have undertaken to carry out this piece of nefarious business himself. The average mariner thinks no more of "making the insurance pay" than the average traveler does of robbing his fellow-countrymen by the importation of Belgian cigars and Tauchnitz novels from a channel packet. And with Kettle, too, loyalty to an employer, so long as that employer treated him squarely, ranked high. But for a second time "Well-wisher" had repeated the word "catspaw," and for his purpose he could not have used a better spur.

The little captain's face grew grim as he read it. "By James!" he muttered, "if that's the game he's trying to play, I'll make him rue it."

However, though at the beginning of a voyage it may be easy to make a resolve like this, it is not so easy to carry it into practical effect. If the machinery was on board, human or otherwise, for making the Sultan of Labuan fail to reach port, it was not at all probable that Kettle would find it before he saw it in working order. When arrangements for a bit of barratry of this kind are gone about nowadays, they are performed with shrewdness.

Your ingenious gentlemen, who makes a devil of clockwork and guncotton to blow out a steamer's bottom, or makes a compact with one of her crew to open the bilgecocks, is dexterous enough to cover up his trail very completely, having a wholesome awe of the law of the land and a large distaste for penal servitude.

With the chief engineer alone, although he does not sit at meat with him, may a merchant captain unbend, and with the chief of the Sultan of Labuan Kettle had picked a difference over a commission on bunkering not 10 minutes after he had first stepped on board. He had the undoubted knack of commanding men; he could look exactly after his employer's property, but he had an unfortunate habit of making himself hated in the process.

Over that initial episode of washing the coal grime from the ship's outer fabric, he had already come into intimate contact with his crew. The tired deckhands had refused duty. Clumsy old Murgatroyd had endeavored to force them into it by the time-honored methods, and had been knocked down in the scuffle and trampled on, when up came Kettle, already spruce and clean, and laid impartially into the whole grimy gang of them with a deck-scrubber. They were new to their little skipper's virtues, and thought at first that they would treat him as they had already treated the fat old mate and as a consequence bleeding faces and cracked heads were plentiful, and curses went up, bitter and deep, in half the tongues of Europe. But Kettle still remained spruce and clean and aggressive and untouched.

It takes some art to thoroughly thrash a dozen savage, full-grown men with a light broom without breaking the stick or knocking off the head, and the crew of the Sultan of Labuan were not slow to recognize their captain's ability. But at the same time they were not inspired with any overpowering love for him.

In the course of that night an iron belaying pin whisked up out of the darkness, and knocked off his cap as he stood on the upper bridge, and just before the dawn a chunk of coal whizzed up and smashed itself into splinters on the wheelhouse wall, not an inch from his ear. But as Kettle replied to the first of these compliments by three prompt revolver shots almost before the thrower had time to think, and rushed out and caught the second assailant by the neck-scruff and forced him to eat up every scrap of coal that had been thrown, the all-nation crew decided that he was too ugly to tackle usefully, and tacitly agreed to let him alone for the future, and to do their lawful work. The which, of course, was exactly what Kettle desired.

By this time the Sultan of Labuan had run down the Cornish coast, had rounded Lands End, and was standing off on a course which would make Finisterre her next landfall. The glass was sinking steadily; the seascape was made up of blacks and whites and lurid grays; but though the air was cold and raw, the weather was not any worse than need have been expected for the time of year. The hatches were off, and a good strong smell of coal gas billowed up from below and mingled with the sea scents.

With all a northern sailor's distrust for a "Dago," Kettle had spotted his spruce young Italian second mate as Gedge's probable tool, and watched him like the apple of his eye. No man's actions could have been more innocent and normal, and this, of course, made things all the more suspicious. The engineer staff, who had access to the bilge cocks, and could arrange disasters to machinery, were likewise, ex-officio, suspicious persons, but as it was quite impossible to overlook them at all hours and on all occasions, he had regretfully to take them very largely on trust.

Blundering, incompetent old Murgatroyd, the mate, was the only man on board in whose honesty Kettle had the least faith, simply because he considered him too stupid to be intrusted with any operation so delicate as barratry, and to Murgatroyd he more or less confided his intentions.

"I hear there's a scheme on board to scuttle this steamboat," he said, "because she's to expensive to run. Well, Mr. Gedge, the owner, gave me orders to run her, and he told me he made a profit on her. I'm going by Mr. Gedge's words, and I'm going to take her to Port Said. And let me tell you this, if she stops anywhere on the road and does down, all hands go down with her, even if I have to shoot them myself. So they'd better hear what's in the wind and have a chance to save their own skins. You understand what I mean?"

"Aye," grunted the mate.

"Well, just let the word of it slip out—in the right way, you understand."

"Aye, aye. Hadn't we better get the hatches on and battened down? She's shipping in green pretty often now, and the weather's worsening. There's a good slop of water getting down below, and they say it's all the bilge pumps can do to keep it under."

"Mr. Meddle Murgatroyd," Kettle snapped, "are you master of this blamed ship, or am I? You leave me to give my orders when I think fit, and get down off this bridge."

"Aye," grunted the mate, and waddled clumsily down below.

The old man's suggestion about the hatches had touched upon a sore point. Kettle new quite well that it was dangerous to leave the great gaps in the decks undefended by planking and tarpaulin. A high sea was running, and the heavy-laden coal boat rode both deep and sodden. Already he had put her a point and a half to westward of her course; so as to take the oncoming seas more fairly on the bow.

But still he hung on to the open hatches. The coal below was gassy to a degree, and if the ventilation was stopped, it would be terrible liable to explosion. The engine and boiler rooms were bulkheaded off, and there was no danger from these; but the subtle coal-gas would spread over all the rest of the vessel's living quarters—as the smell hinted—and a carelessly lit match might very comfortably send the whole of her decks hurtling into the air. Kettle had no wish to meet Mr. Gedge's unspoken wishes by an accident of this sort.

Not Just Better Baking But Far Easier Cookery

The way the oven heat's made to bake evenly—that alone would sell you the Imperial Oxford range once you really saw what it means. But the Imperial Oxford isn't just a perfect baker,—it's the easiest range to cook with, because it uses heat sensibly whatever you want the heat to do,—fry, broil, or bake.

Imperial Oxford Range

Its roomy firebox, its easy-to-manage sensitive drafts, hold the heat EVEN,—keep it under your control. And the special Imperial Oxford thermometer tells you always just where the heat is. But you can't really know what a fine set of ideas are built into this range until you come and see it.

Example: Abundant hair plus dandruff microbes, plus a few years, equals baldness.

Baldness Begins Early

"Baldness begins in the youth and increases, whether rapidly or slowly, up to the fiftieth year." So says Dr. Sabouraud of Paris, the world's greatest authority upon diseases of the hair and scalp.

Dr. Sabouraud confirms Dr. Unna's discovery, that baldness is a contagious disease caused by a microbe. Ask your family physician about these two authorities.

Dr. Sabouraud goes further, however, and says that "Baldness as a chronic malady, is a disease not of old age, but of youth; in bald old men we simply see the result of a disease that has been slowly doing its work for many years."

The dandruff microbe is an invisible growth of vegetable character; minute fragments of it are easily passed from one head to the other, through the medium of public hair-brushes, towels, etc.

In the hair these fragments are inert until they come in contact with the natural hair oil from the sebaceous glands of the scalp, when they begin to grow and form one colony after another; in a similar manner, dry fragments of yeast cake are inert until they find the proper medium when they promptly begin to "work."

On the back of the head most of these fragments of microbe growth fall out of the hair before they find permanent lodgement in the sebaceous glands and this is one of the reasons why baldness begins and is often confined to the top of the head.

It often takes years to produce dandruff, but after it is well established in the scalp the destruction becomes more and more rapid. The hair becomes dull, brittle and lustreless, but occasionally there is excessive oiliness. Itching of the scalp and falling hair usually follow excessive dandruff and unless something is done to check the disease baldness will surely follow.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE—the ORIGINAL remedy that "kills the dandruff germ"—will overcome any stage of this malady except chronic baldness. It acts by destroying the growth that causes the disease, and when this is done, the hair is bound to grow as nature intended.

More men and women get positive results from the use of NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE than from all other hair remedies combined.

It is delightfully refreshing to use, and it stops itching of the scalp almost instantly. Remember that you must destroy the cause to remove the effect. Do not wait for chronic baldness for it is incurable. THE TIME TO SAVE YOUR HAIR IS WHILE YOU HAVE HAIR TO SAVE.

Why Fused Joints keep the house free of dust, smoke and gas.

Ever see a blacksmith make a horseshoe?

When he is ready to put toe and heel clips on the shoe, he heats the iron shoe and the steel clips white hot—hammers them—and when they cool, they are practically one metal.

THEY ARE FUSED—

The same results are obtained in constructing "Hecla" Furnace.

The cast iron top and bottom of the radiating chamber, and the steel sides are FUSED, where they meet—making a joint that is absolutely and permanently tight.

There is not an opening—and no possibility of there being an opening—to permit gas, dust or smoke to escape into the house.

Fused joints are a "Hecla" feature—originated, perfected, patented and controlled—by Clare Bros. & Co., Limited. The 'Hecla' is the only furnace that has fused joints. That means the only furnace that will NOT let gas, smoke or dust come into the house.

If you want a furnace that keeps the whole house warm and comfortable all winter—that burns LESS coal—and that is smoke-tight, dust-tight and gas-tight—you will certainly decide on a "Hecla."

Write for the new catalogue fully illustrated. If you send a rough sketch of your house, I will tell you—free—just what the right "Hecla" Furnace will cost to install. Write to-day to "Clare's Furnace Builder." 32

HIS MOTHER'S OPINION.

Whilst walking down a crowded city street the other day
I heard a little urchin to a comrade turn and say:
"Say, Chimmy, lemme tell youse I'd be happy as a clam
If I only was de feller dat me mudder t'inks I am.

"She t'inks I am a wonder, an' she knows her little lad
Could never mix wit' nuttin' dat was ugly, mean, or bad.
Oh, lots o' times I sit an t'ink how nice 'twould be, gee whiz!
If a feller wuz de feller dat his mudder t'inks he is."

My friend, be yours a life of toil or undiluted joy,
You still can learn a lesson from this small, unlettered boy.
Don't aim to be an earthly saint, with eyes fixed on a star,
Just try to be the fellow that your mother thinks you are.

LORNE MOUNTAIN.

Six Hundred Feet High It Was Explored by Governor of Its Name.

Lorne Mountain is one of the grandest of the Gatineau Mountains. It is situated on the east bank of the Gatineau River, one of the largest tributaries of the Ottawa, and is just across the river from the village of Cascades, Que. The village is fourteen miles from Ottawa by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The mountain is six hundred feet high, and from the crest of it a splendid view may be obtained of Ottawa and the surrounding country. The little church at Gatineau Point is plainly seen, but the most noticeable object is the Mackenzie tower of the Parliament Buildings, that seems to pierce the sky like a naked sword. The view toward the north is also very fine, and on a clear day a range of high hills crossing the country in an east and west line may be seen twenty miles away. Towards the west is King's Mountain, one of the highest peaks of a chain extending parallel with the Ottawa River as far as Lake Temiskaming.

When the Marquis of Lorne, now the Duke of Argyll, was Governor-General he and his retinue visited the district. His Excellency took a fancy to the mountain, and one day, with the help of a guide, they explored it to the top. Hence the name Lorne Mountain. To the residents of Cascades, who rise early enough a beautiful sight is visible every morning of summer. The mist from the river seems to cover the whole of the mountain, and until dispelled by the sun is a pretty sight. If the mist flows up stream the people say that the day will be fair, and if down they say it will be gloomy, with rain. The mist is, therefore, as good a weather prophet as Old Probs. himself.

The Simple Facts.

"Children," said the teacher, instructing the class in composition, "you should not attempt any flights of fancy, but simply be yourselves and write what is in you. Do not imitate any other person's writings or draw inspiration from outside sources."

As a result of this advice Tommy Wise turned out the following composition. "We should not attempt any flights of fancy, but write what is in us. In me there is my stummick, lungs, hart, liver, two apples, one piece of pie, one stick of lemon candy, and my dinner."—Calgary Herald.

To-morrow's International Sunday School Lesson.

REVIEW LESSON — QUESTIONS FOR RESEARCH.

1. In how many lessons of the quarter do we find the sympathy of Jesus for the weak, helpless, and outcast members of the community emphasized?

2. In which lessons of the quarter are the Pharisees and other religious respectables of Jewish society exhibited in an unfavorable light?

3. In which lessons of the quarter do we find especial emphasis upon the goodness and grace of God?

4. Which of the lessons of the term have their geographical location plainly indicated by the text and its surroundings?

5. Group together briefly the teachings of Jesus on prayer, thus far considered, noting first his own example and habit as illustrated at his baptism (Luke 3), after his day of miracles (Mark 1), before the sermon on the mount (Luke 6) after the feeding of the five thousand (Mark 6), before the Transfiguration (Luke 9). Second, his encouragements to prayer, as illustrated in his graciousness to suppliants in the case of those who besought him for healing for themselves, upon themselves and their friends, notably in the case of the Gentile woman (Mark 7, 24-30), and also as illustrated in his parables concerning prayer; the Importunate Friend (Luke 11, 1-3), the Unjust Judge (Luke 18) and the comparison between the generous instincts even of evil parents and what might be expected from the Good Father in heaven. Third, the teachings of Jesus as to the true spirit of prayer, as shown in the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican, and enforced in the Beatitudes (Matt. 5, 1-16). Fourth, the suggestions as to what we should pray for, contained in the prayer which Jesus taught his disciples.

GENERAL SUGGESTIONS.

The principal task before most of the classes will be the mastery of the story of the lessons. Even the teacher who retains them all in mind will do well. The next point is the fastening in the mind of some clear-cut point from each of the twelve lessons. This should be done if at all possible. Let the teacher remember that a term's work which cannot be reviewed has been a term's work more or less disjointed and unworkmanlike.

One is impressed as he reads the lessons of the quarter by the picturesqueness of our Master's preaching. There are no formal lectures, no systematic presentations of great doctrines, but everything is connected with some happening in his life, where is always a scene for the imagination to paint, and the play of emotion as well as of thought. Run through the lessons of the term with this point in mind. See Jesus at the beginning with the little child in his arms, then behold the miserable supplicant begging for mercy of his king—a mercy which, when he receives it, he is in no wise willing to bestow upon his fellow; then behold the scene in some wild gorge between Jerusalem and Jericho, where the Good Samaritan finds the unconscious victim of the robbers. Behold Jesus teaching how to pray, and hear the knock of the friend at midnight and the gruff and unwilling response from within. Then see the Master as he rebukes the vulgarity of the Pharisees who choose the best seats at the feast, and as he tells them whom they shall bid to their banquets. Then behold the servants of the rich man compelling the ragged denizens of alley and street to come to the great feast; recall the scene in the far country, where the prodigal dreams of his father's house; behold the widow as she pleads for justice before the fierce and unprincipled judge who fears not God, neither regards man; look again into the eager face of the rich young man who inquires, "What must I do to be saved?" and see the incredulous look on Peter's face when Jesus declares that it is easier for a camel to enter in through a needle's eye than for a rich man to be saved. Imagine the smiling face of the Master as, looking up into the tree, he invites himself home to dinner with the despised publican, Zacchaeus, and then see the calm, sad, but majestic Jesus riding into his capital amidst the acclaims of the peasants and then finally behold him as he stands amid the tempting doctors of the law, and puts them one by one to shame as they seek to entangle him in his talk. Thus we see that there is not one of these lessons that does not have a picture in it with the colors of life—a picture, too, full of feeling, intense with human interest. These pictures by study and contemplation we should strive to see, bringing them out real and life-like before our classes with all their lines. Indeed, one of the best ways to make men see the Christ is to make them see the men with whom Jesus talked and lived.

It is very difficult to come to any clear conception of the order in time, and location in place of the lessons of the quarter. Indeed, scholars are quite undecided concerning the matter, and all schemes are merely provisional. The harmony of the gospels in our Teachers' Bibles will give what light is accessible, but it must be remembered that many of the arrangements for this period of our Lord's ministry are made more or less in the dark.

The Coppers Burned.

A Church of England parson, who has recently come to Toronto from the West, where coppers are unknown, and the five cent piece is the smallest coin in circulation, daily laments the contact with cents which he encounters in the East. He will sympathize with a Western man who (according to The Innisfail Province), while visiting one of the Eastern cities, purchased a newspaper. "He gave the usual nickel, but was amazed to get four coppers in change. Not being used to the feel of copper he tried to dispose of the balance by buying a box of matches. Imagine his amazement when only one cent was taken, and the other three handed back. Still feeling perturbed at carrying such a common thing as copper around in his pocket, the Westerner turned in desperation to see what could be done with the balance of the money, when, to his joy, he saw a blind man, who was only too glad to relieve him of the burden. What a lot of fun a fellow can have down East for five cents!"

Wins Distinction Abroad.

The name of Stillman Foster Kneeland ranks well up in the list of Canadians who have won distinction in other lands. Mr. Kneeland was born at Quebec, May 17, 1845. He was educated at McGill University, and removed to New York in 1872. In the civil war he served as brigadier-general, and in 1886 framed and secured the passage of an act abolishing perpetual imprisonment for debt in New York State. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1894. As a member of the law firm of Kneeland, Le Fetra and Glaze he figured as counsel to the H. B. Claflin Co. and Union Surety & Guarantee Co. He is vice-president of the department of painting, Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. His publications include Treatise on Commercial Law, Kneeland on Mechanics' Liens, Kneeland on Attachments, and Seven Centuries in the Kneeland Family.

HAVE A HAPPY HOME.

This Is Possible, No Matter How Humble the Surroundings.

It is possible to make the humblest home bright and happy. A hearty welcome to the guests, music, if possible, games and the happy knack of making the young feel that their opinions are worth listening to and that you are enjoying their company—that is the secret.

Mothers should remember that their daughters' matrimonial chances depend a good deal on the kind of homes they live in. When a man calls on a girl and finds her in a bright, attractive home, with everything happy and sweet about her, he naturally thinks: "This is the kind of home I want. There is love between the parents and children. Everything is comfortable and happy. It is the ideal home."

Of course the girls and boys have just as much to do with the home making. They must do their share toward the happy atmosphere. The girl must help to lift the burden of household care from the mother's tired shoulders, and the boy must be a companion to and help the father with the responsibilities of keeping the home.

When a mother and daughter stand on proper terms with each other there is a firm friendship underlying the natural love. The mother, with the memory of her own girlhood days in her mind, is not too severe on the faults and mistakes that the young daughter is sure to make. And the daughter, sure of a ready sympathy and comprehension, is not afraid to confide in her mother.

The same rule applies with father and son. Most fathers love their sons, but they forget that they were once boys themselves and that youth cannot be staid and wise and never kick over the traces. Perfect confidence between father and son is quite as important as it is between mother and daughter, and the experience of the parents can often save the young people from many mistakes.—New York American.

SOFA CUSHIONS.

A Novel Idea Is to Have Them Heart Shaped and Large.

New ideas in sofa cushions are always welcome, for the average household cannot own too many cushions to suit the feminine members, though there may be an occasional masculine protest against an excess in supply. The latest notion is to have one or two cushions of heart shape resting on top of the ordinary square pillows, and the result is very good, as the accompanying illustration shows. The cushion is of large size, somewhat solidly stuffed, six to eight inches thick. For the center the heart shape is cut out in a flat piece of silk, backed, if soft, with coarse linen or stiffer material and set with a wide gauging made to lie flat. Sometimes, as in the example here pictured, a touch of embroidery is added. In perfectly plain corded silk without adornment the heart cushion makes an admirable accessory to the sofa furnishing. Broderie anglaise on ivory lawn, lined with one of the colors dominant in the room, makes an excellent covering for such a cushion, the gauging being dispensed with in favor of a flat shaped border of the openwork.—Brooklyn Eagle.

HEART SHAPED SOFA CUSHION.

Cooking by Steam.

Nearly all mixtures capable of being boiled can be steamed, but they will take nearly as long again to cook. Steaming, though a much slower method than boiling, renders food lighter and therefore more digestible. If a steamer is used, all that is needed is to fill the lower division with water, place the perforated upper vessel over this and when the water beneath boils put the pudding in the upper part, fixing on the lid tightly. If there is no steamer, use an ordinary saucepan large enough to easily hold the basin. Have in the saucepan enough boiling water to come just halfway up the basin, which, in this case, stands right in the water. A sensible suggestion is to tie some string round the basin so that it forms two long loops on either side, thus providing handles with which to raise the basin. They should be caught up by the lid to keep them out of the boiling water.

Don't Betray Confidences.

How few people there are who know how to keep a confidence made to them in the true sense of the word! They frequently forget the fundamental principle of the whole idea, which is this: Have no desire to tell it to another person. So much can be done to betray a confidence by a person dropping into hints and innuendoes without once deliberately breaking his compact to the letter, but only in the spirit, says Home Notes. What a valuable point to have in your reputation—that you are a perfectly safe person to whom to intrust a secret! Remember when you are inclined to pass a confidence to a bosom friend, however much she may want to hear it, she will remember the fact against you when she wants to confide in you that, as you are capable of breaking your bond with one friend, so you can do it with another, perhaps herself, next time.

THEY WILL CURE

Free to You, My Sister

Free to You and Every Sister Woman Suffering from Woman's Ailments

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from woman's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand woman's sufferings. What we women know from experience we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhœa or Whitish Discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial, and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment, for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book "WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER," with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young.

To mothers or daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhœa, Green Sickness and painful or irregular menstruation in young ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality, who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days treatment is yours, also the book. Write to-day, as you may not see this offer again. Address

To Students

Many students with really superior minds fancy themselves dull because they fail to remember what they read in their text books. The reason is simply that they are afflicted with so much eye-strain that it requires nearly all the nerve force they possess to fix the eyes upon the book, and there is not sufficient left for the process of ideation and thought. Many students sacrifice their health in attaining an education because of the large amount of brain-strain sustained in the close use of their eyes, though vision seems excellent. This form of brain-strain is detected by an expert and remedied by the proper glasses directed to the nerve centres controlling the function of vision. For further particulars call on

The Napanee Accident--Blaine Was A Hero.

TOLD HIS FIREMAN TO JUMP AND THEN STAYED AT HIS POST, SACRIFICING HIMSELF TO SAVE MANY LIVES.

A despatch from Napanee gives the following additional particulars of the fatal railway accident near there on Friday morning:

Devotion to duty on the part of Engineer Frank Blaine, with the realization of a horrible death, in all probability, saved many lives on the Montreal express, No. 2, which left the Toronto Union station, about 10.35 o'clock, last night. The fast express collided head-on with a freight train about a mile west of this town, at 2.25 o'clock, this morning.

The passengers agree that had not the engineer of the express stayed at his post and applied the air brakes, at the sacrifice of his own life, the Wanstead disaster would most likely have been repeated on the main line of the Grand Trunk railway.

Poor Blain, with his head severed from his crushed and mangled body, was found on the brakes levers' when the wrecking crew drew the powerful engines apart from their deadly embrace.

Although the passenger engine tender mounted the baggage car, and the baggage car telescoped the first day coach, with the exception of the engineer's death, the casualties were not serious.

Fireman Edward Miron, of Belleville, who was on the passenger engine, and jumped in time to save his life, had his knee joint and back badly wrenched.

Engineer Charles Orrill and Fireman David Young, both of Belleville, and both on the freight engine, were also painfully hurt in legas and arms by jumping from their engine.

Brakesman James Miller, of Montreal, was thrown through a car door when the crash came. His head was badly cut.

Dr. Robert Hanley, of Kingston, had a narrow escape. He was sleeping in the front end of the day coach when the collision occurred, and the end of the baggage car was shoved into the coach. He awoke, to find himself covered with debris and a screaming woman buried beside him. The lights had not gone out, and he was able to life the heavy timbers and twisted ironwork, and make an exit from the car before the big heat coils crashed through.

One little child was thrown in the impact from one seat to another, but was uninjured.

In addition to the engine, the baggage car, and the day coach, the train consisted of seven Pullman sleepers. One peculiarity of the collision was that the passengers in the first five sleepers scarcely felt the jolt, but some of these in the two rear coaches were throw out of their berths, but none seriously injured.

J. F. Hellmuth, K. C., of Toronto, who was a passenger, and was awakened at the time of the collision, said that the train seemed to be going about fifty miles an hour. He heard the screeching of the danger whistle, followed by a sudden slackening of speed with the brakes, then the jar.

The wreck occurred on the double tracked portion of the road and the responsibility for it has yet to be determined. It appears that Engineer Orrill had orders to wait on a siding to allow No. 2, east-bound, and No. 3, west-bound, to pass. His train was very cumbersome, fifty-three cars, and it is said, that, owing to the length of the train, the engine became "foul" of the main line.

Edward Miron, fireman of the passenger engine, said that when he and his unfortunate mate saw the headlight of the freight engine through the fog they thought it was the clear white semaphore. "When we got nearer," said Miron, "Frank said, 'My God, Ned, it's the freight and on the wrong track,' and he jerked at the air brakes. The last words he said to me were 'jump, Ned, jump,' and I did jump. I thought Frank was going to follow me, but he didn't."

When he saw that a collision was imminent Engineer Orrill, of the freight train, called to his fireman to jump and set the example by leaping to safety himself. Orrill was scratched before. He could not accident

"I did the best I could to get the cars back in time but they wouldn't go."

A flag man went out to stop the express, but somehow or another he missed it.

Conductor Empey, of the passenger train has been railroading for thirty five years and never had a man scratched before. He could not account for the accident.

The remains of the unfortunate engineer were crushed between the boiler and the tender of his engine which was practically demolished.

Frank Blaine was known on the road as "Sailor Blaine" and was considered most careful.

A LIFE ON THE RAIL.

The Brockville Times gives the following obituary notice of the dead engineer:

Thirty-two years continuous service in the cab of a locomotive, twenty-five of which, as engineer, is the record of the late Frank Blaine. He was the youngest son of the late Frank Blaine and was born in Castlebar, Ireland, 53 years ago. The family emigrated to Brockville when the deceased was three weeks old. After learning the trade of a moulder in the James Smart foundry, he entered upon his railroad career, being accepted as fireman on the G.T.R. in Oct. 1874. Seven years later he was promoted to engineer and in that capacity up to the time of his death performed the duties most creditably. He was on the freight run between here and Montreal until four years ago when his standing in order of seniority entitled him to the limited, the swift goer of the G.T.R. In this capacity he ran between Montreal and Belleville and of course necessitated the removal of his family to Montreal. Mr. Blaine had the reputation of being a most fearless, yet capable and trustworthy driver and when time was calculated to be made up the deceased could be relied upon to accomplish the feat if it was at all possible. Among his fellow employees he was regarded with the utmost confidence and esteem, loyal to their common interests, and at the same time faithful in the discharge of duties imposed upon him, by the company. He had the warmth and genial manner of an Irishman, always pleasant and jovial with a kind word for everybody. In the home his wife and family were his first consideration. He was unselfish and knew no sacrifices too great to make for their comfort and well-being. As a father and husband Mr. Blaine had no superiors, while as a citizen he was beyond reproach. In common with the family circle and relatives, everybody will mourn the death of brave Frank Blaine.

He married Miss Margaret Phillips of Smith's Falls, thirty years ago. She with four daughters and one son survive.

The deceased was an ardent member of the Roman Catholic Church. He was one of the oldest members of the Brockville Lodge of Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and was instrumental in organizing the Brockville Court of Catholic Order of Foresters, of which he is a charter member

The body will be brought to Brockville from Napanee and removed to the residence of Jno. Flannigan, Bartholomew street, from which place the funeral will be held later.

Mrs. Blaine the heart-broken widow arrived to-day from Montreal accompanied by her two daughters, Winifrid and Agnes. Margaret the other daughter has been visiting friends here for several days and had made arrangements to accompany her father on a visit to Niagara Falls on the completion of the trip which resulted in his death.

Indian Goes to Jail For Three Months

Nelson Maracle, a member of the Mohawk tribe, was on trial yesterday afternoon before Judge Deroche. He was accused of an indecent assault upon Victoria Green, and also of stealing a watch from one Eli Bardy. The former charge, after evidence had been submitted, was reduced to one of common assault, and to the charge of theft Maracle pleaded guilty. A sentence of three months in jail upon both charges was given, the sentences to run concurrently. Mr. Anderson represented the Crown, and Mr. McMahon the accused.

C.P.R. Surveyors Are Pushing On.

One of the surveying parties sent out by the Canadian Pacific Ry. to survey a line from Tweed to Toronto is in town, says the Trenton Courier.

The party, which consists of 17 men, has made a survey from Belleville to a short distance west of Trenton. The survey enters the town from the east near the old brewery and going through the Gilmour mill yard, crosses the river south of the covered bridge, passing near the cold storage, and, curving to the west, crosses the C.O.R. tracks near the Central Ontario station, on its way towards Hendricks' farm and Brighton. The surveyors are now camped at Brighton, having moved from their camping ground, which was situated just this side of Belleville.

Estimable Lady Died At Orange, N.J.

DEATH CLAIMS MRS. CHARLES CORBY, FORMERLY OF THIS CITY — SUMMONS WAS SUDDEN

A telegram was received here yesterday morning from East Orange, N.J., announcing the serious illness of Mrs Chas. Corby.

Later a message announced her death, which, it appears was rather sudden

The deceased lady was well known in this city, where she was born. She was a daughter of the late Mr. Richard Taylor, who was, for years, city street surveyor. Some 26 years ago she was married to Mr. Charles Corby, son of the late Mr. Henry Corby, and brother of Mr. H. Corby, ex-M.P. Mr. and Mrs. C. Corby lived in New York for some considerable time and at the time of Mrs. Corby's death were sojourning at East Orange.

The deceased was a popular lady and esteemed by all who knew her. She was a member of the Anglican Church. The remains will be brought here for interment and are expected on Monday.

Mrs. Taylor, the aged mother, survives, and two sisters, Mrs. J. Parker Thomas and Mrs. D. M. Waters. In addition to the husband, two daughters, Misses Edna and Genevieve, are left to mourn the loss of a loving wife and mother. To the bereaved family will be extended the sincere sympathy of a large circle of relatives and friends.

Veteran of '66 Has Passed Away

IN THE PERSON OF MR. JOHN McFEE, WHO DIED THIS MORNING, AGED 63 YEARS.

In the death of Mr. John McFee, of this city, which occurred this morning, at the family residence, George St., Belleville lost an old and respected citizen, and the Veterans' Association another member, Mr. McFee having been one of the Prescott contingent in 1866.

Mr John McFee, who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, 63 years ago, came to this city about 45 years ago, and went into partnership with his brother, Angus, in the jewellery business. He has since resided here. For the past two months Mr. McFee had been ailing, and his death was not unexpected. Deceased was one of the "Old Guard" of Belleville, and many friends will regret his demise.

The late Mr. McFee was an attendant of the Methodist Church. He was a Conservative and a member of the A.O.U.W. and Royal Arcanum.

Ex-Ald. Allan McFee, of this city, is a brother of the deceased.

A family of two sons and three daughters survive. The sons are: John A., jeweller, and Allan C., of N.J., announcing the serious illness ters are; Mrs. J. E. Hancock, of Wallaceburg, Ont., and Misses Kate and Eleanor, at home. To the family will be tendered the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

PERSONAL ....AND.... SOCIAL.

Mr. C. N. Gill, Henry St., is confined to the house by illness.

Mr. John Harris, North Front St., is confined to his room with typhoid fever.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Pope arrived in the city last evening from Winnipeg.

Miss Maude Hamilton has returned home after a two weeks' visit in Chicago

Miss Olive Brown, Albion St., who has been seriously ill with typhoid fever, is slowly recovering.

Mrs. Barlow, Macdonald avenue, is ill, and her condition is giving her friends much uneasiness.

Miss Martha Gibbs has returned home, after spending a week's vacation with her cousin, Miss Ethel Bopery, Lindsay.

Mr and Mrs. Sargent and children, of Copper Cliff, Sudbury, are visiting Mr. Sargent's parents, Franck street.

Mrs. R. Fleming, Cedar street, has returned from Tweed, where she has been visiting relatives and friends for the past two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Frechette have returned home from a two weeks' vacation in Chicago and Milwaukee, Mr. Frechette attended the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen's convention in the latter city.

Little Miss Beulah Ketcheson, who resides on Henry St., last evening gave a party to about twenty of her young friends, in honor of her sixth birthday, which was yesterday. The little folks had a royal time with games, music, etc., and there was great expectancy when the birthday cake was cut. The youthful hostess received many pretty presents.

At Sign of the Scales.

DRUNK.

Wilfrid Young was fined $10 or two months for this, his second offence this week.

RECKLESS DRIVING.

James Black, whose home is in the country, was fined $8 for being intoxicated and driving about in a reckless manner.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT.

John Mayes and his wife, who are new arrivals in the city, were accused of being disorderly in their house. The neighbors complained of being kept awake nights owing to the accused's actions. The Magistrate, after warning the parties, allowed them to go.

Bad men are apt to make themselves scarce. Good men are already scarce.

Accident at Coe Hill

Howard Vandervoort, while at Coe Hill, met with a serious accident on Sunday last. He was running with his gun in hand, when he tripped, the gun discharging its contents into his heel. He was taken to Trenton on Monday, the local doctor at Coe Hill, considering the case serious, went to Trenton with him.

Venerable Guests

Mr. Jacob S. Foster, of Northport, on September 4th, entertained at dinner and till the following morning five guests whose combined ages amounted to 402 years. One of the ladies, says the Picton Times, wore a very interesting string of glass and amber beads that she had worn continually for the past seventy years and which were placed on her neck by her great grandmother, Mary Brown, relic of William Jacobs and niece of the American General, David Wooster, who fell at the battle of Bunker Hill and with whom she lived at that time. The beads are supposed to be much older than the American Republic. On the following Friday, Mr. Foster entertained the Warden and his wife of Lennox and Addington, for the day, and their aged mother, Rosannie Scammichorn, relic of the late Isaiah Huffman, who is in her 87th year, all of the township of Richmond, Lennox county; also during the week from Monday, September 2, to September 8, five guests that were over 80 years old, not one of them residents of this county.

Old Chronic Sores

As a dressing for old chronic sores there is nothing so good as Chamberlain's Salve. While it is not advisable to heal old sores entirely, they should be kept in a good condition for which this salve is especially valuable. For sore nipples Chamberlain's Salve has no superior. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s drug store

One of Three Things Always Cause RHEUMATISM

Do you know the system rids itself of waste matter through bowels and kidneys? Yes, but by the skin as well.

As a matter of fact, the skin rids the system of more urea than the kidneys do.

If the skin, or bowels, or kidneys are unhealthy—they won't throw off enough urea. This urea is changed into uric acid—carried by the blood to joints and nerves—causing Rheumatism.

One never inherits Rheumatism. One does inherit weak kidneys, irregular bowels and bad skin action.

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

will positively cure Rheumatism because they increase the eliminating action of skin, kidneys and bowels—and make these three organs so vigorous and healthy that there can be no urea or waste retained in the system to poison the blood and irritate the nerves.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are fruit juices, combined with tonics—the whole forming the most effective cure for Rheumatism.

50c. a box or 6 boxes for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price if your druggist does not handle them.

Unsolicited Testimony.

Here is the unsolicited testimony of Mrs. C. A. Martin, of Granville, N.Y., concerning Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women. We have her consent to publish her letter. It reads as follows:

I feel that I should tell you what wonders Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets have done for me. I had been running down, getting thin in flesh, and losing appetite for the past year, and though doctor's advice was sought and different remedies were used, there seemed to be no improvement. At length a friend who had received great benefit from Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets, advised me to try this remedy. I did so. In less than a week I began to see good effects. My appetite returned, my nerves began to get steady, my aches and pains began to leave me, I commenced to take on flesh, and I felt that I was being rapidly restored to health. At this moment I feel I am a new woman.

We want you to notice that the above letter proves our claims for Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets in two particulars.

First, that they will restore health after other remedies and even physicians have failed. Mrs. Martin had tried both.

Second, that improvement begins at once. Mrs. Martin saw good effects within a week.

If you are suffering from a run-down condition, or any weakness peculiar to your sex, you, too, can be made well and strong by these tablets.

Take them one week and note the improvement in your feelings and general health.

ALMONTE FIRE SWEPT.

Business Section of the Town Suffers to the Extent of $125,000—Some Miraculous Escapes.

Almonte, Sept. 22.—The epidemic of fire continues in the Ottawa Valley. Yesterday the business section of Almonte was swept by a conflagration which involved a loss of $125,000, about half covered by insurance.

The fire started in Scott's furniture establishment on Mill street and spread quickly.

Carleton Place sent a company of twenty men to assist the local brigade.

The chief losers are: Belton & Co., general store, tenant of J. H. Wylie, stock, total loss; insurance, $25,000; building almost totally destroyed.

W. West, general store, tenant of Geo. Paterson; stock and building totally destroyed; insurance on stock, $15,000.

M. R. McFarlane, druggist, tenant of Elizabeth Paterson; stock and building total loss.

The Misses Cairns, fancy goods, tenant of L. W. Shipman; building and stock total loss; insurance on stock, $1,500.

Miss Clement, milliner, tenant of J. H. Wylie; stock total loss.

W. R. Scott, furniture and undertaking business, tenant of L. W. Shipman; stock and building totally destroyed; insurance on stock, $3,800.

Fulton Timmins, gents' furnishings, tenant of T. R. White; stock and store totally destroyed; insurance on stock, $5,000; no insurance on building.

H. H. Cole, general store; building and stock totally destroyed; insurance on stock, $6,000.

Besides the stores all the warerooms and outbuildings were burned, together with four frame houses on Farm street. The household property in these was all saved, but the buildings were totally destroyed. These were owned by T. R. White, and were not insured.

The fire started about 3.30 a.m. and was under control at 5.30. How the fire started is unknown. There was no loss of life, but some miraculous escapes on the part of Mr. Scott and wife and some of the firemen with falling walls.

Cheese Factory Burned.

Port Hope, Sept. 22.—The Kendall cheese factory was burned to the ground on Tuesday afternoon. The factory was owned and managed by Percy Alford.

Fatal Fire at Tacoma.

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 22.—Fire Thursday night destroyed property valued at approximately $150,000. As a result, one woman is believed to have lost her life, while two men are unaccounted for. In the livery stable were over 150 horses. Less than half-a-dozen escaped. Among the property burned was the Eastern Railway depot.

Climb Mount Orizaba.

Chicago, Sept. 22.—Four prominent college professors, one a member of the faculty of the University of Toronto, escaped from death almost by a miracle in Mexico last Wednesday after one of the most daring and arduous expeditions ever attempted to gain the top of Mount Orizaba. In the attempt to reach the top of the mountain, they had a fall of 3,000 feet down a snow slope from the summit. The party found on reaching the summit that their aneroid barometer registered 18,500 feet.

PIMPLES, BLACKHEADS—

GET RID OF ALL YOUR FACE TROUBLES IN A FEW DAYS' TIME WITH THE WONDERFUL STUART CALCIUM WAFERS.

TRIAL PACKAGE SENT FREE.

You cannot have an attractive face or a beautiful complexion when your blood is in bad order and full of impurities. Impure blood means an impure face, always.

The most wonderful as well as the most rapid blood cleanser is Stuart's Calcium Wafers. You use them for a few days, and the difference tells in your face right away.

Most blood purifiers and skin treatments are full of poison. Stuart's Calcium Wafers are guaranteed free from any poison, mercury, drug or opiate. They are as harmless as water, but the results are astonishing.

The worst cases of skin diseases have been cured in a week by this quick acting remedy. It contains the most effective working power of any purifier ever discovered — calcium sulphide. Most blood and skin treatments are terribly slow. Stuart's Calcium Wafers have cured boils in three days. Every particle of impurity is driven out of your system completely, never to return, and it is done without deranging your system in the slightest.

No matter what your trouble is, whether pimples, blotches, blackheads, rash, tetter, eczema or scabby crusts, you can solemnly depend upon Stuart's Calcium Wafers as never-failing.

Don't be any longer humiliated by having a splotchy face. Don't have strangers stare at you, or allow your friends to be ashamed of you because of your face.

Your blood makes you what you are. The men and women who forge ahead are those with pure blood and pure faces. Did you ever stop to think of that?

Stuart's Calcium Wafers are absolutely harmless, but the results — mighty satisfying to you even at the end of a week. They will make you happy because your face will be a welcome sight not only to yourself when you look in the glass, but to everybody else who knows you and talks with you.

We want to prove to you that Stuart's Calcium Wafers are beyond doubt the best and quickest blood and skin purifier in the world—so we will send you a free sample as soon as we get your name and address. Send for it to-day, and then when you have tried the sample you will not rest contented until you have bought a 25c box at your druggist's.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 51 Stuart

LEAVE IT TO ALVERSTONE.

Newfoundland and U. S. Have Dispute Over Fisheries.

St. John's, Nfld., Sept. 22.—The representatives of the American, British and Newfoundland Governments are negotiating a modus vivendi regarding the winter herring fishing about to open on the west coast of Newfoundland.

The Americans claim the right to use purse seines, the use of which is forbidden by the law of Newfoundland because of the destructive effects of these appliances.

The British Government, it is understood, qualifiedly admits the justice of the colonial protest, maintaining that the use of purse seines threatens a depletion of the herring schools.

WAS ENGINEER INSANE?

Grantham Disaster Was Repetition of That at Salisbury.

London, Sept. 22.—With an insane man at the throttle, it is thought, the Scotch express wrecked Thursday flew through the station at Grantham, against the signals, failed to take a sharp curve, leapt a bridge and rolled down the embankment.

It was a repetition of the Salisbury disaster. The train should have taken the curve at not more than ten miles an hour; it was going forty miles an hour.

The authorities do not think that the brakes failed. Mental aberration on the part of the engineer is the only explanation they can offer.

There Was No Disaster.

Ottawa, Sept. 22.—In response to enquiry by the Department of the Interior, Mr. Cooke, agent at Prince Albert, wires that there is no truth in the story that three members of Indian Agent McKenna's party had met disaster in Buffalo Lake. One of the party, M. Belanger, was swamped, with five Indians, while crossing the river, but no damage was suffered.

Handbook Man Guilty.

Toronto, Sept. 22.—The first of the "hand-book" men sent for trial from the Police Court came before Judge Winchester yesterday morning, when John Murray, cigar store man, 397 West King street, was arraigned. He pleaded not guilty, but the jury concluded he was. The judge deferred sentence until the other pending cases have been decided.

Edict Against Opium.

Pekin, Sept. 22.—An edict has been issued ordering the abolition of the use of opium, both foreign and native, within a decade. The edict strongly condemns the vice and commands the council of state to devise regulations for the enforcement of the prohibition against opium-smoking and the cultivation of the poppy.

Boxers Suppressed.

Pekin, Sept. 22.—Government troops have suppressed a revival of "Boxerism" in Shansi Province. "Boxer" organizations had been formed in several towns in the neighborhood of Sopingfu of the same men who participated in the uprising of 1900.

Organ-Mender Drowned.

Kinloss, Sept. 24.—Benjamin Chatfield, a traveling organ mender, was drowned in Waddell's Lake on Saturday night. He and Fred Klempp, hotelkeeper, were preparing to go fishing when their boat drifted into the lake. In attempting to reach the boat by swimming Chatfield sank. The body was recovered yesterday morning.

Will Lose Both Eyes.

Ottawa, Sept. 24.—Peter Brosseau of Hull will lose both eyes as the result of a premature explosion of dynamite in Wright's quarries Saturday afternoon.

Shot by a Cowboy.

Petrolea, Sept. 24.—James Luxton of Tank street, Petrolea, was accidentally shot in the head during a wild west performance at the Petrolea Fair Friday, and is in a critical condition. One of the cowboy's shots went astray, striking Luxton in the right temple, and lodged in the back of the head. It has not been extracted, and Dr. McIntyre was unable to state what the outcome would be.

Killed by Lightning.

Mallorytown, Sept. 24.—Chas. Goodbody, aged 16, was instantly killed by lightning Saturday night. He was walking by his father's side leading a horse to the landing to meet a party who had been out for a sail. The father and the horse were stunned.

Killed While Fire-Ranging.

St. Catharines, Sept. 24.—James A. Keyes, barrister, received a telegram from Sudbury Saturday morning announcing the fact that his son, Roy, had been fatally injured near there. No particulars were given. The young man a student at the University of Toronto, and was taking a legal course. He was in the West with a party ranging.

SAVED BY BUCKET BRIGADE.

Village of Wales Might Have Been Destroyed By Fire Friday Night —Fires Elsewhere.

Cornwall, Ont., Sept. 24.—About 7 p.m. Friday a spark from the chimney of Jacob Brassard's bakery started a fire which at one time threatened to destroy the whole village of Wales, and eventually resulted in the destruction of four business stands, three residences, and several thousand dollars worth of chattels.

Besides Brassard's bakery and house, the other buildings destroyed were S. S. Bigelow's house and store, McKenzie Morgan's house and store, the latter being occupied by T. H. Fetterly, jeweler; W. S. Bigelow's store and residence, Fred Warren's big general store and B. Sherwood's store, occupied as a storehouse by Mr. Warren.

The village is entirely without fire-fighting equipment, but the village bucket brigade after a struggle of five hours mastered the fire fiend shortly before midnight.

More Fatal Train Wrecks.

Trains In Collision In Ontario and In Nova Scotia Derailed.

Two Men Killed In Accident Near Guelph and One In That at Sundridge—Passenger and Freight Train Collide In Dense Mist—Engineer and Brakeman Also Badly Injured — Engineer Badly Scalded.

Guelph, Sept., 24.—In a collision between a passenger train and a fruit train from St. Catharines on the Wellington, Grey and Bruce division of the Grand Trunk at Gourock flag station, near here, early Saturday, two men were killed and two of the crew of the freight were seriously injured. The dead:

Engineer Thomas Farley of Palmerston, killed outright.

Fireman H. F. Bright of Hamilton, died in the General Hospital Saturday night.

The injured are: Engineer Reed and Head Brakeman Andrews.

The passenger train consisted of one day coach, a combination car and three freight cars.

When the trains collided, the freight cars of the mixed served as a buffer, and received the impact which otherwise would have been the fate of the passenger coach.

Engineer Farley put on the brakes as soon as the freight was observable, and his fireman, upon noticing what was wrong, jumped, and escaped serious injury.

The engineer, however, stuck to his post, and heroically gave up his life in an endeavor to minimize the effects of somebody's blunder.

Mist Hindered Seeing.

The freight was a fruit train from St. Catharines, and had a through bill to London. It came around by Guelph with a couple of cars for this city and another two for Berlin. It left Harrisburg with clearance papers to Guelph Junction at 4.45, stopped at Galt at 5.30 to take water, and from there came through to the point where the collision occurred. No message was received here to hold the passenger. A mist hindered seeing any distance ahead, and at the point where the trains met a strong curve added to the danger.

That the passengers escaped so providentially is remarkable, for the impact of the engines was terrible. A number of the passengers received injuries, but they are not serious.

One Dead at Sundridge.

Sundridge, Sept. 24.—Two freight trains collided head-on here Friday night about 11 o'clock, resulting in the death of Fireman Forester, and the serious injury of Engineer Weston and Brakeman Campbell. The southbound train was at the switch waiting for the northbound train when it came bounding along and crashed into it.

Fast Express Derailed.

Sydney, N. S., Sept. 24.—The fast express from Halifax to Sydney was derailed Friday night at Iona, about 30 miles from Sydney, and the engineer, Andrew McLeod, was terribly scalded. The fireman was also terribly injured. Three cars went off and the engine careened over an embankment. The track is torn and twisted for quite a distance. The passengers escaped unhurt, but with a bad shaking up.

Killed on C. P. R. Tracks.

Woodbridge, Sept. 24.—A sad accident occurred at Humber Summit, near this town, Wednesday night, when Christopher Topper, an elderly man of that vicinity, was killed on the C. P. R. tracks. It is supposed that while going for a pail of water across the tracks in a nearby field, that the 6.24 C. P. R. train struck him. He leaves a wife with three daughters and one son to mourn his loss.

Killed by Switching Engine.

Winnipeg, Sept. 24.—Amos Sargison, a young Englishman, who was a coach cleaner in the C. P. R. yards, was run over by a switching train on Saturday afternoon and almost instantly killed.

Two Killed at a Crossing.

Nicolet, Que., Sept. 24.—An accident happened Saturday night at 8.35 at the crossing of the I. C. R., half a mile west of Ste. Monique station, which caused the death of Mr. Arthur Houde of St Celestin and Dr. Lapierre. They were driving and were struck by the Nicolet express. The train was fifty minutes late. Dr. Lapierre was instantly killed and Mr. Houde died twenty minutes after. The horse was also killed.

Block at North Bay.

North Bay, Sept. 24.—A couple of freight cars went off the track last night and blocked the main line, delaying trains several hours.

Crushed Under Hand Car.

North Battleford, Sask., Sept. 24.—While the C. N. R. ballasting gang was returning to town Saturday evening on two hand cars, two men fell off the front of the car and were run over by one in the rear. One of the men, G. Stray, was killed, and R. Butler badly injured.

Killed by a Street Car.

Ottawa, Sept. 24.—Myers Gordon, the 3-year-old son of Ralph Gordon, of 31 St. Joseph street, was struck by a street car on St. Patrick street, and received injuries which caused his death.

TWO DEAD IN GAS TANK.

First Fatality in the New Tilbury Oil Fields.

Chatham, Sept. 24.—The first fatality in the Tilbury oilfields took place Saturday, when a man named Thomas, 22 years of age, of Sandusky, Ohio, was overcome by gas in a tank on the farm of J. Stevenson, lot 3, concession 9, part of the lease of the Sugar Grove Oil Co.

One of his employers, J. T. Haggarty, was overcome trying to rescue him, and it was reported later that Mr. Haggerty, who was 72 years of age, is also dead. The tank had been connected with the well, and there was gas in it, but little oil. Thomas went in to clear out chips and other debris, and was overcome. Haggerty, noting this, followed him, and was also overcome.

In turn their absence was noted by Driller Copus, who saw the ladder inside the tank and raised the alarm, when others went in and dragged the bodies out.

Kicked In Face by Horse.

London, Sept. 24.—W. L. Mitcheltree, butcher, was severely injured Saturday morning by a horse belonging to Dougall McIntyre. Mr. Mitcheltree was struck by the horse squarely in the face and knocking him down. While Mitcheltree was lying prostrate on the ground the vicious animal trampled on him several times.

Fatalities at the Soo.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Sept. 24.—John Hendrick of the Soo, aged 13 years, was instantly killed Saturday by shot from a gun carried by E. Quigley, another Soo boy. They were out hunting partridge, and Kendrick was following Quigley, who carried the gun at full cock over his shoulder, when it accidentally discharged. The contents entered young Kendrick's breast.

A car from the surface plunged into a shaft at the Helen Iron Mine, which is owned and operated by the Lake Superior Corporation at Michipicoten, striking the cage in which a miner named Newell was coming up. Newell was instantly killed.

The Thin Red Line

The statements recently made on behalf of Hon. Mr. Rogers, a member of the Manitoba Government, as to the extent of what are known as the red line frauds have hardly received the attention they deserved, says an Eastern paper. Some of the facts were brought out during the last two sessions of Parliament. Before the 1904 election the lists for the Manitoba constituencies were prepared and sent to Ottawa to be printed in the Government bureau. This done they were returned to Manitoba, where they underwent inspection by representatives of the Liberal party. They were not found satisfactory, and by or under instruction of the persons in question a large number of names were ruled out with red ink. Mr. Rogers gives the numbers in seven of the constituencies as follows:

Marquette	1,919
Provencher	563
Portage la Prarie	1,395
Souris	1,250
Lisgar	1,131
Macdonald	1,721
Selkirk	1,406

The total is 9,398, an average of almost 1,200 to a constituency. If the work was done with intent to destroy the chances of political opponents it will be seen how effective it must have been. There are few constituencies in Canada where the disfranchisement of 1,200 selected voters would not change the result of an election. There is little doubt that what was done seriously affected the result of the last parliamentary contest in Manitoba, of the constituencies named four returned Liberal members by the following majorities:

Provencher	10
Portage la Prairie	385
Lisgar	180
Selkirk	507

A comparison of these figures with the number of names of voters which were red-lined off the lists leaves no doubt as to what the possibilities were, and not many will think that the possibilities were not realized as they must have been intended to be. Perhaps as much as anything that recent years have seen exposed, this red line business shows what Laurierism is and how it wins its political successes.

The U. S. Coal Supply

Canadians are interested in the report of Edward W. Parker, statistician of the United States Geological Survey on the coal production of the United States in 1905. That report serves to emphasize the warning recently given by James J. Hill that our neighbor's supply of this valuable mineral will fail at no distant day if they continue to exhaust it at the accelerated pace of recent years. Mr. Parker reports that the total output for last year was 392,919,341 tons of 2,000 pounds, which was an increase of 11 per cent. over the output for 1904.

Of the total production 77,659,850 tons were Pennsylvania anthracite, and 315,259,491 tons of lignite and bituminous coal. The increase over 1904 was 4,500,000 tons round figures of anthracite, and 36,600,000 tons of bituminous and lignite. The quantity of coal made into coke increased from 31,300,000 tons in 1904 to 41,400,000 tons in 1905—an increase of more than 32 per cent. and a ratio of increase nearly three times as great as that of the total output of coal.

If this ratio continues, the output of 393,000,000 tons last year will be 786,000,000 tons in 1915, 1,372,000,000 tons in 1925, 3,144,000,000 tons in 1935, and so on. At this rate people now living will have to pay high prices for coal or go without it.

Mr. Parker's figures show that the consumption of coal in the U.S. doubles every ten years; the population has doubled once in thirty years, but did not double during the thirty years ending in 1900. In other words they are increasing their consumption of coal over three times as fast as they are increasing in numbers.

Derailments and collisions on railways are nearly as frequent these days as are cheap trips.

The Dominion Trades and Labor Congress will memorialize the Government in favor of letter carriers not receiving less than $800 a year for eight hours' work a day. Why not, says an exchange, extend the recommendation so as to apply to the inside service where clerks in certain post offices work nearly sixteen hours a day, and for considerably less, too, than $800 per year. The postal authorities are, without doubt, the worst paid servants of the Government. If the Dominion Trades and Labor Council looked into the conditions of the Belleville post office they might find room for another memorial.

Hamilton City Council has decided on fixing the remuneration of the new City Solicitor to make it sufficiently large so that it will not be necessary for him to collect fees, when successful in a case, in order to make a comfortable living. The salary will be $4,400 a year, and any costs collected must be returned to the municipality. Too often, says the Peterboro Review, when a city solicitor is given the costs it leads to his undertaking legislation for the fees. The temptation to do so, at any rate, is strong.

Some Ontario newspapers, says the Montreal Gazette, complain that there will be a congestion of traffic on the railways this fall, and are suggesting that the Railway Commission or the Government should at once take cognizance of the matter. It is likely that there will be such a congestion of traffic and that the railways will not be able to move all the freight offered to them quite as quickly as its owners desire. The condition is, however, a normal one at this season. No railway can afford to own sufficient rolling stock to handle the fall rush and have it idle on its hands for the remaining ten months of the year, any more than a farmer could afford to keep an extra team of horses standing in his barn the year round simply because he could make it useful during the haying season.

As a result of the recent big Oddfellows' parade in Toronto the street railway service was demoralized just at the hour when the largest number of people were endeavoring to get to the railway station. As a consequence many people missed their trains and were compelled to remain over night in Toronto, which they, rightly or wrongly, considered an affliction. The custom of allowing people to form into lines and demoralize the traffic of large cities is one that should, business men think, be curtailed. Parades, they say, could be kept off streets on which there are street railway lines, and away from the congested business districts. The good they do does not always offset the trouble they cause.

The minister of the fashionable church, was shocked when the young lady declined an introduction to some of his parishioners. "Why, my dear young lady, did you ever think that perhaps you will have to mingle with these good people when you get to heaven?" "Well," she exclaimed, "that will be soon enough."

LINES TO A STRAW HAT.

(Washington Star.)

Away with thee, creature of terror!
Too long have you ventured to stay,
The weather man falls into error;
You're leading his judgment astray.
The mercury ought to be falling
To autumn's mild mark on the glass,
Yet it climbs with a speed that's appalling
To watch you and grin as you pass.

Go hence with the collar that's trailing
Round the neck in limp folds negligee;
With the trousers whose belt oft seems failing;
And the shirtings of vivid display,
Take with you the garb unromantic
Of lasses athletic in taste;
The white footwear that looks so gigantic
And likewise the peek-a-boo waist.

The Kingston News pays the following well-merited tribute to one of Canada's leaders in Methodism: "The retirement of Rev. Dr. Sutherland from the Missionary Secretaryship of the Canada Methodist Church, is a noteworthy event in the history of the denomination and of home and foreign missions. He has been at the head of the missionary efforts of Canadian Methodism for about thirty years, and the splendid record made during this period is a testimony to his worth as an administrator and to his zeal for the cause."

"A Taxpayer" writes: — "I have heard it stated that the Belleville and East Hastings fair, this year, has a balance on the right side of the ledger. Does it not seem reasonable, inasmuch as the Belleville City Council donated $300 of the citizens' money to the fair, that the directors should publish a statement showing how the surplus, if there is any, has been, or is to be, expended. To my mind this seems like a fair question. Let the people of Belleville, who contributed $300 to help make the fair a success, know when and how the money has been spent."

RUBBER

When you buy rubber it pays to get it. There are few things in which quality counts for more than in rubber goods.

The demands of our trade require us to carry more than one quality of rubber goods, but each quality is sold for what it is, and is sold at an honest price. We carry practically everything in the line of Syringes, Hot-water Bottles, Sick-room Supplies, etc.

Destructive Fire In Colborne Sunday

SEVERAL BUILDINGS DESTROYED WITH LOSS OF $18,000.

Colborne, Sept. 24.—About 10.30 last night fire was discovered in the Hotel Bristol stables and spread very fast, burning east, destroying W. J. Burleigh's livery barns and contents, his dwelling and block, with stock of hardware and household furniture belonging to Morden & Co., J. S. Youman's livery barns.

Going south along Division street the fire destroyed the dwelling and barns owned by R. Snetsinger, and occupied by C. W. Ramsay, and the residence owned and occupied by Dr. Hewson, also damaging a number of other blocks.

The loss is about $18,000, partly covered by insurance.

While the Colborne fire was at its height, about 10 o'clock last night, an appeal came to this city for assistance. The request asked for a steamer, hose and men. A number of men volunteered to go, but it was, we are told by His Worship the Mayor, the opinion of Belleville's City Engineer, Mr. James McCurdy, that the local engines would not be of much service to the Colborne people. Hence no assistance was sent. This afternoon Chief Campbell, acting under the orders of Mayor Bulman, is conducting a test of the engines in question.

CROSSED THE DARK RIVER.

MR. JOHN C. HARRIS IS DEAD, AFTER A MONTH'S ILLNESS WITH TYPHOID FEVER.

From the effects of an attack of typhoid fever, Mr. John C. Harris, passed away this morning at the residence of his father, ex-Ald. S. T. Harris, North Front street. Deceased had been ill for about a month. Mr. Harris was 38 years of age, and was born at Cornwall, Eng. When a child he came out to this country with his parents, and ever since had been a resident of this city. He was by profession a builder. Deceased was a member of Oxford Lodge, Sons of England, being a Past President of the Society. In religion he was a member of the Reformed Episcopal Church. Mr. Harris was esteemed by all who knew him, and his demise will be sincerely regretted. Deceased was twice married, his surviving partner being a daughter of Mr. Thomas George, of this city. In addition to the widow, four children, two sons and two daughters, survive. To them will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of many friends.

What Part?

What particular part of the nerve-centres should we expect to have the greatest influence in affecting and controlling the general nervous system?

Reasonably it would be the largest and most sensitive. Well now, of all the centres in the nervous system, the largest most delicate sense, the sense most constantly in use, the largest brain "gray-matter" area is that of SIGHT.

For an average of 16 hours daily continuously, the feeling in the visual centres is constant. No other sense in the nerve centres is capable of such continued endurance. With the proper glasses this severe drain upon the brain and nerves is prevented from causing a breakdown in the general health.

READ ABOUT INDIANS AND OUTDOOR LIFE

in a little book that costs nothing. The book describes the Northwest, the land of the future. It is printed on the best paper, is interesting, profusely illustrated and full of information. It is suitable for your own home, for schools or libraries. It describes the wonderful Yellowstone Park, the Wild Bitterroot Mountains in Montana, the Queniut Indians—almost unknown — on the North Pacific Coast, the grand Columbia River scenery, the marvellous Puget Sound region, and Alaska. It costs but the postage required to mail it. It will be sent to any address for six cents. The book is "Wonderland 1906," published by the Northern Pacific Railway, and is for general distribution. Send six cents to A. M. Cleland, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minnesota, or as many times six cents as you wish copies, with proper addresses, and the little volume will be promptly forwarded by that gentleman. Don't wait! The book has an object—to educate and inform the public about the Northwest, the region that Lewis and Clark explored and made known to us. Help it perform its mission. 21-3t

A DOUBTING THOMAS.

Had His Falling Hair Stopped, and Dandruff Cured, Without Faith.

H. B. Fletcher, Butte, Mont., Oct. 20, 1899, says: "Like many other people. I have been troubled for years with dandruff, and within the last few months my hair came out so badly that I was compelled to have what I had left clipped very close. A friend recommended Newbro's Herpicide. I confess that I doubted his story; but I gave Herpicide a trial, now my hair is as thick as ever, and entirely free from dandruff." "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Herpicide is a delightful hair dressing for regular use. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Institution For Deaf Was Reopened To-day

The hour of accomplishment again has come at the above Institution. Holidays, like roses, alas, but too soon fade away. The hopes of June, so promising and grateful at dawn, now only seem as a quick vanished dream. Yet must the bread of the brain be broken and all frolics for a while at least forgone. The number of scholars as usual is large, 230, of whom no less than forty or so being here for the first time, with others to come in a few days. It is very interesting to see these new, silent little men, as yet innocent of school discipline, forming into line and bravely marching towards the initial conquest of learning. Acorns at first, oaks in time, such has been mentally and physically the transformation of hundreds of those children as the alert, intellectual, strapping young men and young women present at the last convention are a proud instance. And thus it is that the work being done in our midst on behalf of these deserving boys and girls must long remain great and inspiring to all who feel and think. During the summer not a few needed repairs were executed, which will add materially to the appearance and comfort of the establishment. In officially opening the session this morning, Mr. Mathison, in a practical address, urged upon all, after a long rest, to set to work with a will. Who do not advance retrograde. Advance, then, must be their watchword. Regret was expressed at the resignation of Mr. Forrester, who had, for some years, been a valued teacher here, he having gone to another field with a view of bettering himself. Classification was then proceeded with and work, in every department, promptly and earnestly begun. May the term which opens under most promising auspices prove all that well-wishers to a worthy cause might hope for.

NOTES.

Some of the officials remained here a good part of the summer, the Superintendent and his efficient clerk, Miss Chisholm, among others, to look after the improvements in and out of the Institution.

Miss Annetta Johnston, who last June graduated here with distinction, has been appointed monitor of the girls.

Mr. Forrester's successor will be Mr. T. Rodwell, from the School for the Deaf of Doncaster, Eng.

If the scholars will only carry out the thoughtful, kindly advice given them by the Principal and others, success must surely be theirs! Now, then, forward all!

GREAT SORROW.

WAS MANIFESTED OVER DEATH OF J. C. WILKINS.

(Trenton Advocate.)

Seldom have the citizens of Trenton been so stirred as they were on Tuesday, when the wires flashed the word from Fort William that John Craig Wilkins, son of Rev. W. T. Wilkins, was dead. Messages from that point on Sunday gave word that he was very low, and sinking, but all who knew the young robust favorite of Trenton, felt that he would pull through. It was not to be, and devoted parents, brothers and sisters are bowed in grief, and the town is overflowing with the deepest sympathy for them.

Deceased was a student in the arts and civil engineering course in Queen's University, Kingston, and at the end of the last session went west and joined the G.T.P. surveying party. When taken ill a couple of weeks ago he was located about forty miles north of Fort William, and was about to return home to resume his studies at the university. On reaching Fort William he was alarmingly ill, and his brother Charles who happened to be there on professional business, urged him to immediately enter the hospital. The end soon came and a young life full of promise was ended. The grief stricken father was on his way to Fort William, hurrying to his dying son's bedside, when death came and he received the message at North Bay. On Wednesday he and his son Charles, reached Trenton with the remains.

The obsequies took place this afternoon. Services were conducted at the manse by Rev. R. J. Craig, uncle of deceased, and he also read the services at the grave. Members of Trent Lodge, No. 38, A., F. & A. M., and visiting brethren attended in a body and conducted their services. Members of Trenton fire brigade also attended in a body out of love and respect for one who had for some years been an associate. The funeral was also attended by a great number of citizens. The High and Public schools were closed during the afternoon out of respect for the dead, an ex-pupil of both institutions. The obsequies were attended by the following relatives, all of Kingston: Rev. Mr. Craig and Messrs. William and James Craig, uncles, and Hugo Craig and Arthur Craig, cousins of deceased. It is difficult to intrude upon a sorrowing family at this time, but we desire to assure Rev. W. T. Wilkins and family that they have the heartfelt sympathy of all and every of their fellow citizens in their sad bereavement. All know what a happy domestic circle has been theirs and all grieve that the circle should be broken by the death of such a popular and interesting member of the family.

Old Chronic Sores

As a dressing for old chronic sores there is nothing so good as Chamberlain's Salve. While it is not advisable to heal old sores entirely, they should be kept in a good condition for which this salve is especially valuable. For sore nipples Chamberlain's Salve has no superior. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s drug store

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE GINGERBREAD MAN" TO-MORROW NIGHT.

"The Gingerbread Man," which will be seen at the Carman to-morrow, is the only one of all the big musical extravaganzas en tour that carries five established comedians, like Gus Weinburg, who starred in 'The Burgomaster' and 'The Storks'; Ross Snow, who was the original fairy queen in the notable production of "Jack and the Beanstalk"; Eddie Redway, who starred in 'Smiling Island'; W. H. Mack, who starred for a number of seasons under his own management in farce comedies, and Will Donnelly, the latter one of the few comedians on the stage to-day who possesses a tenor voice of quality. It is to the efforts of this quintette of laugh producers that the great meed of success achieved by "The Gingerbread Man" is due. Just as surely as the day of the drama with "one part" is on the wane, so surely is the musical comedy with a single comedian a thing of the past. "The Gingerbread Man," with its big roster of comedians and singers, possesses the strongest all-round cast that has left New York this season; for in addition to Messrs. Weinburg, Snow, Redway, Mack and Welsh, it contains Francis Carrier, the baritone who last season sang with the Savage English Opera Company; Mae Phelps, who was prima donna with the Nixon and Zimmerman Opera Company; Almyza Forrest, who was especially engaged to sing the prima donna role with "The Prince of Pilsen" during the New York run of this piece, and Nellie Lynch, who scored so decidedly in the original cast of "The Tenderfoot." In addition to its splendid cast of principals, "The Gingerbread Man" carries an ensemble of sixty-five girls, who have been christened "The American Beauty Chorus."

"Hecla" Furnace

has not a fault from top to bottom.

I don't believe you can find fault with any part of the 'Hecla.'

Waterpan—is placed so that it does just what is wanted—that is, it evaporates the water and keeps the air from getting dry.

Door—big enough to admit big chunks of wood. Lined, to prevent escape of heat into the cellar. Patent gravity catches keep the door shut.

Dust Flue—carries ALL the dust up the chimney.

Ash Pan—broad, deep, strong pan—big enough to hold the daily fall of ashes.

Fused Joints—that absolutely prevent gas, smoke and dust escaping into the house. FUSED JOINTS are the only possible way of having a clean house.

The "Hecla" is the only Furnace having Fused Joints.

Send me a rough drawing of your house and I will let you know just what it will cost to install the right "Hecla" Furnace. I will also send our new catalogue of Hecla Furnaces, and Peninsular Stoves and Ranges. All free if you write to "Hecla Furnace Builder," care of 36

THE IRISH PIPES.

I hear the piper playing,
The piper old and blind,
And knew its secret saying—
The voice of the summer wind.

I heard clear waters falling,
Lapping from stone to stone;
The wood dove crying and calling,
Ever alone, alone.

I heard the bells of the heather
Ring in the summer breeze,
Soft stir of fur and feather
And quiet hum of bees.

The piper drew me yearning
Into the dim gray lands
Where there is no returning,
Although I wring my hands.

There to the piper's crooning
I saw my dead again,
All in a happy nooning
Of golden sun and rain.

You piper, kind and hoary,
Your pipes upon your knee,
If I should tell my story
The things you piped for me.

The folks would leave their selling,
And bid their buying go,
If I could but be telling
The things you let me know.

—Katharine Tynan in The Spectator.

Referring to the hope of Archbishop Tache that the rich land beyond the Great Lakes would be French-Canadian in population, Goldwin Smith says the day has long gone past when there existed any prospect that such hopes would be gratified. The French-Canadians have their conclave in Quebec; they seem satisfied with it; their leaders are able and earnest.

Widows in Paris appear to be about ten times more easily consolable than widowers. Out of 1967 derelict ladies under middle age on whom statisticians keep an eye after their husbands' demise, only three were left still lone and mourning after 18 months had passed away. Out of 2270 widowers, 37 remained unconsoled, or had had enough in one go at the lottery. One hundred and forty-eight had not the grace to wait until the year was out to remarry; 623 did wait a year, but took second wives immediately afterward. All those who married again had done it before three years had gone by. Apparently, if a widower can wait three years he is safe, and falls into the minority, which, in this case, was 37 of those for whom once is enough.

The Neck and Arms.

Get the idea into your head that bones are beautiful and you won't mind thin arms and a "swanlike" neck, even though it be over swanlike. Fat never yet made any woman beautiful. It is the way your bones grow and the way you carry your bones that give you a good figure. Because your arms are thin is no reason why you should hide them. God never yet made any woman without bones, so they must be all right. You can get the thin arms fleshened up a little by anointing with lanolin or cocoa butter. The same treatment will do for a thin neck. Vocal culture and cold baths will help.

To Bronze Furniture.

To apply gold bronze to furniture coat the surface with paint, japan spirit varnish or anything that will prevent suction, then where the bronze is wanted coat with gold size or quick drying varnish. When this is nearly dry, dust on the bronze powder with a soft brush or chamois skin. As bronze is susceptible to atmospheric influences it is better coated with a thin, even coat of transparent varnish. Of course gold leaf or Dutch metal would make a much better appearing piece of work and hold its color.

Points on Broiling.

Broiling produces the same effect on meat as roasting and can be performed in a more speedy manner. In handling lean meat for broiling be careful not to prick or cut it and so allow the juices to escape. Broiling must always be done over a quick, clear fire. The heat hardens the albumen on the outside quickly, thus preventing the escape of juice and rendering it savory. Chops and steaks should be turned with a knife and on no account have a fork stuck into them while cooking.

Yellowed Clothes.

To whiten clothes that have become yellowed in consequence of being laid away for some time soak them overnight in lukewarm water and next morning wash in good clean suds, then put them in the wash boiler with cold water and some pieces of white curd soap and one teaspoonful of powdered borax. Boil for twenty minutes, rinse immediately and leave them for another night in clean cold water to which a little powdered borax has been added.

Children's Shoes.

If mothers when buying new shoes for the children would adopt the following hint they would find that they would last twice as long and also resist the damp: Procure some boiled linseed oil, pour it on to a large flat dish or tin and allow the shoes to stand in it for about twelve hours or until the soles are well soaked. This does not, however, apply to brown shoes.

A Register Hint.

So often people tell of the many things they have lost down their registers. Money, buttons and thimbles are sure to roll straight for the register. Place a piece of fine wire netting in the top of the pipes just below the register; then when anything is dropped into it all you need to do is to lift out your register and take out the articles.

Weak Ankles.

Weak ankles should be sponged night and morning with cold water in which a handful of coarse salt has been dissolved. Dry them and then rub them patiently for fifteen minutes. The muscles will gain strength under this treatment. You will soon begin to see an improvement and to feel it in their increased firmness under your touch.

Tapestry Covered Furniture.

To clean tapestry covered furniture first brush thoroughly; then add a tablespoonful of ammonia to a quart of water. Wring a cloth out of this and sponge thoroughly, rinsing and turning the cloth as it gets dirty, changing the water when necessary. This freshens and brightens it wonderfully.

Brass Bowls.

It is unwise to use too much brass or copper about a room or hall. It has a tendency to look shoppy. But just the right amount—a bowl or two here and there for plants—in hallway or room give an excellent effect which no other receptacle quite attains.

Oil painted walls must be washed with soap and water, using a soft flannel cloth, care being taken to wring it out well before using. Use cold water to finish and dry with a soft linen cloth.

Tablecloths that have become too much worn for use may be turned into breadcloths and silver polishers. For either purpose they are more satisfactory than anything else.

Do not drink a drop of water that has stood in a bedroom overnight, because it has absorbed the poison exhaled by the body.

YOUR DISPOSITION.

It Is a Factor In Making or Marring Your Beauty.

There is no more potent beautifier than disposition. If those who spend time and money in an anxious pursuit of good looks at the hands of professional beauty makers would devote just a portion of this time to the cultivation of a beautiful disposition results would be even more gratifying.

A happy way of looking at life is the best eye brightener and a calm that defies disturbance the most potent complexion lotion.

It is said of a certain young actress that she has discovered beautifying possibilities in the reading of poetry. She selects a certain kind to produce the particular expression she wishes, but all good poetry she finds conducive to the cultivation of beauty.

It is perfectly true that our reading is reflected in our face. The thoughts produced by reading noble sentiments finely expressed are mirrored in our features quite as surely as are the less lofty emotions produced by poring over flabby, excitable, morbid or injurious reading matter.

If you don't believe this contrast the serene, thoughtful expression of a lover of good poetry with the face of one who habitually feeds on "yellow" literature.

What you read and what you think helps to make your disposition. And your disposition largely makes—or mars—your beauty.

KITCHEN COMFORT.

Have a Place to Rest While You Are Compelled to Wait.

Be sure to have an easy lounge or chair in the kitchen, where you may spend a few waiting moments between acts, as it were, in rest. If you cannot afford to buy a lounge especially for that purpose make one. This is easily done. Get two long boxes from the dry goods store. Place them end to end and nail together. Make a mattress and fill it with any desired materials. Shredded shucks are clean and excellent. Over this drape any kind of cover to suit the fancy. Be sure to get something that can be washed and ironed. Red and white bed ticking is pretty and desirable, and never fades and when laundered looks as good as new. Make a pillow to match. Now, while you are watching the cakes, bread, pies and the like remember there is your lounge. Rest. Do not say you have no time. You have to wait for your baking to brown. Why not rest while you wait? You will be surprised how much refreshment you will gain even for one minute's relaxation upon this improvised lounging quarter.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

However, it began to be plain that as they drew nearer to the bay the weather worsened steadily, and at last it came to be a choice between battening down the hatches both forward and aft, or being incontinently swamped.

The hands clustered on the lurching iron decks with the water swirling against them waist high, and shipped the heavy hatch covers, and got the tarpaulins over; then the Norwegian carpenter keyed all fast with the wedges, working like some amphibious animal half his time under water.

The Sultan of Labuan was fitted with no cowl ventilators to her holds, and even if these had been fitted they would have been carried away. So from the moment of battening down, the gas which oozed from the coal mixed with the air till the whole ship became one huge explosive bomb which the merest spark would touch off. Capt. Kettle called his mate to him and gave explicit orders.

"You know what a powder hulk is like, Mr. Mate?"

"Aye," said Murgatroyd.

"Well, this ship is a sight more dangerous, and we have got to take care if we do not want to go to heaven quick. It's got to be 'all lights out' aboard this ship till the weather eases and we can get hatches off again. Go round now and see it done yourself. Mr. Murgatroyd, please. Watch the doctor dowse the galley fire, and then go and take away all the forecastle matches so the men can't smoke. Put out the side sight, the masthead light, and the binnacle lamps. Quartermasters must steer as best they can from the unlit card."

"Aye, aye. But you don't mean the sidelights too, do ye? There's a big lot of shipping here in the bay, and we might easy get run down—" The old man caught an ugly look from Kettle's face and broke off. And grumbling some ancient saw about "obeying orders if you break owners," he shuffled off down the ladder.

Heavier and heavier grew the squalls, carrying with them spindrift which beat like gravel against the two oilskinned tenants of the collier's upper bridge: worse and worse grew the sea. Great, green waves reared up like walls, crashed on board and filled the lower decks with boiling, yeasty surge. The funnel stays and the scanty rigging hummed like harpstrings to the gale.

Deep though she was in the water, there were times when her stern heaved up clear, and the propeller raced in a noisy catherine wheel of fire and foam. On every side, ahead, abeam and astern, were nodding yellow lights, jerked about by unseen ships over thunderous, unseen waves. It was a regular Biscay gale, such as all vessels may count on in that corner of the seas one voyage out of eight, a gale with heavy seas in the midst of a dense crowd of shipping. But there was nothing in it which seamanship under ordinary circumstances could not meet.

Capt. Kettle hung on hour after hour under shelter of the dodgers on the upper bridge, a small, wind-brushed figure in yellow oilskins and black rubber thigh-boots. And such a "breeze" in an ordinary way he would have thought little. Taking his vessel through it with the minimum of danger was only part of the daily mechanical routine, but he stood there a prey to the liveliest anxiety.

Twice they had near escapes from being run down. The first time was from a sodden blundering Cardiff ore steamer, which was driving north through the thick of it, with very little of herself showing except two stumpy masts and a brine-washed smokestack. She would have obviously drowned out any lookout on her foredeck, and the bridge officers got too much spindrift in their eyes to see with any clearness. But time is money, and even Cardiff ore steamers must make passages, and so her master drove her blindly ahead full steam, slap-slop-wallow, and trusted that other people would get out of his way.

Kettle's keen eyes picked her up out of the sea mists just in time, and ported his own helm, and missed her sheering bow with the Sultan of Labuan's quarter by a short two fathoms. A touch in that insane turmoil of sea would have sent both steamers down to the shells and the flickering weeds below; but there was no touch, and so each went her way with merely a perfunctory interchange of curses, which were blown into nothingness by the gale.

The second shave came from a big white-painted Cape liner, which came up from astern, lit like a theatre and almost defying the very gale itself. Her lookouts and officers were on the watch for lights. But the unlit collier, which was half her time masked by the seas like a half-tide rock, never struck their notice.

Kettle, with all a shipmaster's sturdy dislike for shifting his helm when he legally had the right of the road, held on till the great knife-like bow was not a score of yards from his taffrail. But then he gave way, roared out an order to the quartermaster at the wheel and the Sultan of Labuan fell away to starboard. As if the coal boat had been a magnet the Cape liner followed, drawing nearer hand over fist.

Changing direction further was as dangerous as keeping on as he was, so Kettle bawled to the quartermaster to "Steady on that," and then the great, white steam-hotel suddenly seemed to wake to her danger, and swerved off on her old course again. So close were they that Kettle fancied he could hear the quick, agitated rattle of her wheel engines as they gave her a "hard down" helm. And he certainly saw officers on her high upper bridge peering at him through the drifting sea smoke with a curiosity that was more than pleasant.

"Trying to pick out the old tub's name," he mused grimly, "so as to report me for carrying no lights. By James, I wish some of those dandy passenger-boat officers could try this low-down end of the tramping trade for a bit."

Night went and day came, gray, and wet, and desolate. The heavier squalls had passed away, but a whole gale still remained, and the sea was, if anything, heavier. The coal boat rarely showed all of herself at once above the waters. Her progress was a succession of dives, her decoration (when she was visible) a fringe of spouting scuppers. Watch had succeeded watch with the dogged patience of sailormen; but watch after watch Kettle hung on behind the canvas dodgers at the weather end of the bridge. He was red-eyed and white-cheeked, his torpedo beard was foul with sea salt, he was unpleasant to look upon, but he was undeniably very much awake, and when the accident came (which he concluded was Mr. Gedge's effort to realize the coal-boat's insurance), he was quite ready to cope with emergencies.

From somewhere in the bowels of the ship there came the muffled boom of an explosion; the bridge buckled up beneath his feet, so that he was very nearly wrenched from his hold; and the iron main deck, which at that moment happened to be free of water, rippled and heaved like a tin biscuit box moves when it is kicked. There was a tinkle of broken glass as some blown-out skylights crashed back upon the deck.

He looked forward and he looked aft, and to his surprise saw that both hatches were still in place and that very little actual damage was visible, and then he had his attention occupied by another matter. From the stokehole, from the forecastle and from the engine room the frightened crew poured out into the open, and some scared wretch cried out to "lower away zem boats."

Here was a situation that needed dealing with at once, and Kettle was the man to do it. From beneath his oilskins he lugged out the revolver which they knew so painfully already, and showed it with ostentation. "By James," he shouted, "do you want to be taught who's captain here? I'll give cheap lessons if you ask."

His words reached them above the booming and brawl of the gale, and they were cowed into sullen obedience.

"Carpenter, take a couple of men and away below with you and see what's broke. You blessed, split-trousered mechanics, away down to your engine room or I'll come and kick you there. The second mate and his watch get tarpaulins over those broken skylights. Where's Mr. Murgatroyd? In his bunk, I suppose, as usual; not his watch; no affair of his if the ship's blown to heaven when he's off duty. Here, you steward, go and turn out Mr. Murgatroyd."

The men bustled about after their errands, and the engines, which had stopped for a minute, began to rumble on again. Capt. Kettle paraded the swaying bridge and awaited developments.

Presently the bareheaded steward fought his way up the bridge ladder against the tearing wind, and bawled out some startling news. "It's Mr. Murgatroyd's room that's been blown up, sir, made a 'orrid mess of. Chips says 'e picked up 'is lighted pipe in the alleyway, sir, an' it must a' been that that fired the gas."

"The blamed old thickhead," said Kettle savagely.

"'E was arskin' for you, sir, was the mate, though we couldn't rightly make out what 'e said."

"He won't be pleased to see me. Smoking, by James, was he?"

"The mate's burnt up like a piece of coke," said the steward persuasively. "'E cawn't last long."

The carpenter came up on the bridge. "Dose, blow-up vas not so bad for der ole ship, sir. She nod got any plates started dot I can see. Dey have der bilge pumps running, but der's nod much water. Und der mate, sir. He say he vould like to see you. He's in ver' bad way."

"All right," said Kettle. "I'll go and see him." He called up the Italian second mate on to the bridge and gave over charge of the ship to him, and then went below.

The author of all the mischief, the stupid old man who, through sheer crass ignorance, had gone to bed and smoked a pipe in this powder mine, lay horribly injured in the littered alleyway, with a burst straw cushion under the shocking remnants of his head. Most of his injuries were plain to the eye, and it was a marvel that he lingered on at all. It was very evident that he could not live for long, and it was clear, too, that he wanted to speak.

Kettle's resentment died at the sight of this poor charred cinder of humanity, and he knelt in the litter and listened. The sea noises and the ship noises without almost drowned the words, and the old mate's voice was very weak. It was only here and there he could pick up a sentence.

"Nearly got to wind'ard of you, skipper. . . . It was me. . . . Gedge paid me 50 pound for the job . . . scuttle her . . . after Gib . . . . would 'a done it, too . . . in spite of your blooming teeth."

The old fellow broke off, and Kettle leant near to him. "How were you going to scuttle her?" he asked.

There was no answer. A second time he repeated the question, and then again a third time. The mate heard him. The sea roared outside, the wind boomed overhead, the cluttered wreakage clanged about the alleyway. The old man was past speech but he opened an eye, his one remaining eye, and slowly and solemnly winked.

It was his one recorded attempt at humor during a lifetime, and the effort was his last. His jaw dropped, wagging to the thud of the ship, his eye opened in a glassy, unseeing stare, and he was as dead a thing as the iron deck he lay upon.

"Well, matey," said Kettle, apostrophizing the poor charred form, "we've been shipmates before, but I never liked you. But, by James, you had your points. You shall be buried by a pukka parson in Gib, and have a stone put over your ugly old head, if I have to pay for it myself. I think I can hammer out a bit of verse, too.

"By James, though, won't Gedge be mad over this! Gedge will think I spotted the game you were playing for him, and murdered you out of hand. Well, that's all right, and it won't hurt you, matey. I want Gedge to understand I'm a man that's got to be dealt straight with. I want Mr. Blessed Gedge to understand that I'm not the kind of lamb to make into a catspaw by any manner of means. I bet he does tumble to that, too. But I bet also that he sacks me from this berth before I've got the coals over into the lighters at Port Said. By James, yes, Gedge is a man that sticks to his plans, and as he can't lose the Sultan of Labuan with me as her skipper, he'll jerk another old man into the charthouse on the end of a wire, who'll do the job more to his satisfaction."

The Norwegian carpenter came up and asked a question.

"No, no, Chips, put the canvas away. I want you to knock up some sort of a box for the poor old mate, and we'll take him to Gib, and plant him there in style. I owe him a bit. We'll all get safe enough to Port Said now."

THE SALVING OF THE DUNCANSBY HEAD

"The boat's an old P. and O. lifeboat," said Mr. McTodd, "diagonal-built of teak and quite big enough for the purpose. Of course, something with steam in her would be better, because we're both steamer-men, but that's out of the question. That would mean too many to share. So the thing is, can you buy this lifeboat and victual her for the trip? I'm no' what ye might call a capitalist myself, just for the moment."

Capt. Kettle eyed the grimy serge of his companion with disfavor. "You don't look it," he said. "That last engine room you got sacked from must have been a mighty filthy place."

"'Twas," said McTodd. "But as it happened, I didn't get the sack. I ran from her here in Gib because I'd no wish to get back to England and have this news useless in my pocket. And, of course, I had to let slide the eight pound in wages that was due to me."

"By James, it's beginning to look like business when a Scottie runs away from siller that he's righteously carned."

"Well, I'm no' denying it was a speculation. It's a bit of a speculation, if ye come to reckon up, asking a newly sacked sea captain to join in such a venture."

Kettle's face hardened. "See here" he said, "keep a civil tongue in your head, or go out of this lodging. I'm to be treated with respect, or I don't deal with you."

"Then let my clothes alone and be civil yourself. It's a mighty dry shop this, captain."

"I've no whiskey in the place nor spare money to buy it. If we're to go on with this plan of yours we shall want every dollar that can be raised."

"That's true, and neither me nor 'Tonio have 10 shillings between us."

Kettle gave up pacing the room and sat himself on the edge of the table and frowned. "I don't see the use of taking either Antonio, if that's his name, or your other Dago. I don't like the breed of them. You and I would be quite enough to handle an open boat, and quite able to take care of ourselves. If the wreck's got the money on her, and we finger it, we'll promise to bring them back their share all right; and if the thing's a fizzle, as it's very likely to be, well, they'll be saved a very unpleasant boat cruise."

"It's no go," said the engineer, "and you may make up your mind to have them as shipmates, captain, or sit here on your tail where you are. D'ye think I've got any appetite for Dagos myself? No, sir, no more than you. I don't trust them no more than a stripped thread. And they don't trust me. They wouldn't trust you. They would no' trust the provost of Edinboro' if he was to make similar proposals to them."

"Then have you no idea where this steamboat was put on the ground?"

"Man, I've telled ye 'no' already."

"Seems to me you don't know much, Mr. McTodd."

"I don't. What I know is this: I came ashore here after a very exhausting trip down the Mediterranean, just for a drink to fortify the system against the chills on the run home. I went to a little dark shebeen, where I kenned the cutthroat in charge, and gave the name of the ship I wanted sending back to in case sleep overcame me, and settled down for an afternoon's enjoyment. Ye'll ken what I mean?"

"I know you're a drunken beast when you get the chance for an orgie."

"I have my weaknesses, captain, or maybe, I'd no' have left Ballindrochater, where my father was Free Kirk Meenister. We both have our weaknesses, Capt. Owen Kettle, and it's they that have brought us to what we are."

"If you don't leave me alone and get on with your yarn," said Kettle acidly, "you'll find yourself in the street."

"O, I like your hospitality fine, and I'll stay, thanks. Weel, I'd just settled myself down to a good square drink at this Spaniard's shebeen, when out of a dark corner comes 'Tonio and the other Dago, bowing and taking off their hats as polite as though I'd been an archbishop at the very least.

"I'd met 'Tonio in Lagos. He was a greaser on a branch boat there, and I was her second engineer. He's some English, and he did the talking. The other Dago knew nothing but his own unrighteous tongue, and just said see-see when 'Tonio explained to him what was going on, and grinned like a bagful of monkeys. I give 'Tonio credit; he spat out his tale like a man. He and his mate were in the stokehold of a Dago steamboat coming from the river Platte to Genoa, and calling at some of the western islands en route.

"One night they were just going off watch, and were leaning over the rail to get a breath of cool air before turning in. They were steaming past some rocky islands, and there in plain sight of them was a vessel hard and fast ashore. There was no mistake about it! they both saw her; a steamboat of some 1,500 tons. And what was more, the other Portugee, 'Tonio's friend, said he knew her. According to him she was the Duncansby Head. He'd served in her stokehold three voyages, and he said he'd know her anywhere."

"A Dago word isn't worth much for a thing like that," said Kettle.

"Wait a bit. The pair of them staid where they were and looked at the rest of the watch on deck. The second mate on the bridge was staring ahead sleepily; the quartermaster at the wheel was nodding and blinking at the binnacle; the lookout on the forecastle was seated on a fife-rail, snoring; no one of these had seen the wreck. And so they themselves didn't talk. Their boat was running short of coal, and so she put into Gib here to rebunker; and from another Dago on the coal-bunk, who came aboard to help trim, they got some news. The Duncansby Head had shifted her cargo at sea, had picked up heavy weather and got unmanageable, and had been left by her crew in the boats. The mate's boat and the second mate's boat were picked up; the old man's boat had not been heard of, it was supposed that the Duncansby Head herself had foundered immediately after she was deserted."

"Yes, all that's common gossip on the Rock. Mulready was her skipper—J. R. Mulready—I'd known him years."

"Weel, poor deevil, it's perhaps good for him he's drowned."

"Yes, I suppose it is. He's saved a sight of trouble. D'ye know, Mac, Jimmy Mulready and I passed for mate the same day, and went to sea with our bran-new tickets in the same ship, him as mate, me as second."

"The sea's an awful poor profession for all except a shipowner that lives ashore."

"'Tis. Yes, that's a true word. It is. And so Antonio and his mate told the other Dago that they'd seen the wreck?"

"Not much. They kept their heads shut. There was money in the idea if it could only be worked, and a Portugee likes dollars as much as a white man. So there you have the whole yarn, except that they got to know that the Duncansby was on her way home after a long spell at tramping when she got into trouble, and carried all the money she'd earned in good solid gold in the charthouse drawer."

"It sounds a soft thing, I'll not deny," said Kettle. "But why should Mr. Antonio and his friend come to you?"

"They ran from their ship here in Gib and laid low till she had sailed. It was the natural thing for them to do. But when they began to look round them in cold blood they found themselves a bit on the beach. They'd no money; there's such a shady crowd here in Gib that everything's well watched, and they couldn't steal; and so there was nothing for it but to take a partner into the concern. Of course being Dagos they weren't likely to trust one of their own sort."

"Not much. And so they came to you?"

"They knew me," said the engineer. "And I came to you because I knew you, captain. I'm no navigator myself, though I can make shift to handle a sailboat, so a navigator was wanted. I said to myself the man in all creation for this job is Capt. Kettle, and then what should I do but run right up against you."

"Thank you, Mac."

"But there's one other thing you'll have to do, and that's buy, beg, borrow or steal the ship to carry the expedition, because the rest of us can't raise a blessed shilling amongst us. It needn't be a big outlay. That old P. & O. lifeboat which I was talking about would carry us fine, and I think three £5 notes would buy her."

"Very well," said Kettle "And now let's get a move on us. There's been enough time spent in talk, and the sooner we're on that wreck the less chance there is of any one else getting there to overhaul her before us."

It would be unprofitable to follow in detail the fitting out of this wrecking expedition upon insufficient capital, and so be it briefly stated that the old lifeboat (which had passed through many hands since she was cast from the P. & O. service) was purchased by dint of haggling for an absurdly small sum and victualled and watered for 18 days. The Portuguese, who still refused to disclose the precise location of the wreck, said that it might take a fortnight to reach her, and prudence would have suggested that it was advisable to take at least a month's provisions. But the meagerness of their capital flatly forbade this, and they were only able to furnish the boat with what would spin out to 18 days on an uncomfortably short ration. They trusted that what pickings they might find, in the storerooms of the wreck herself would provide them for the return voyage.

With this slender equipment then, they sailed forth from Gibraltar Bay, an obvious party of adventurers. They were bombarded by the questions and the curious stares of all the shipping interest on the Rock; they were flatly given to understand by a naval busybody (who had been bidden carry his inquisitiveness to the deuce) that they had earned official suspicion and would be watched accordingly, and if ever ill-wishes could sink a craft, that ancient P. and O. lifeboat was full to her marks.

The voyage did not begin with prosperity. There is always a strong surface current running in through the straits, and just then the breezes were light. The lifeboat was a dull sailer, and her people in consequence had the mortification of keeping Carnero Point and the frowning Rock behind in sight for three baking days. The two Portuguese were first profane, then sullen, then frightened; some saint's day, it appeared, had been violated by the start; and they began first to hint at, and then to insist on a return. To which Kettle retorted that he was going to see the matter through now, if he had to hang in the straits for the whole 18 days, and subsist for the rest of the trip upon dew and their belts; and in this McTodd backed him up.

Once started away from the whiskey bottle, there was nothing very yielding about Mr. McTodd. Only one compromise did Kettle offer to make. He would stand across and drop his Portuguese partners on the African shore if they on their part would disclose the whereabouts of the wreck; and in due time, when the dividends were gathered, he faithfully promised them their share. But to this they would not consent. In fact, there was a good deal of mutual distrust between the two parties.

At last, however, a kindly slant of wind took the lifeboat in charge and hustled her wetly out into broad Atlantic; and when they had run the shores of Europe and Africa out of sight, and there was nothing around them but the blue heaving water, with here and there a sail and a steamer's smoke, the Senor Antonio saw fit to give Capt. Kettle a course.

"We was steamin' froma Teneriffe to Madeira when we saw thosea rocks with Duncansby Head asho."

"H'm," said Kettle. "Those'll be the Salvage islands."

"Steamah was pile up on de first. 'Nother island we pass after."

"That's Piton island if I remember. "Let's have a look at the chart." He handed over the tiller to McTodd, took a tattered Admiralty chart from one of the lockers and spread it on the damp floor gratings. The two Portuguese helped with their brown paws to keep it from fluttering away. "Yes, either Little Piton or Great Piton. Which side did you pass it on?"

Antonio thumped a gunwale of the lifeboat.

"Kept it on the port hand going north, did you? Then that'll be Great Piton, and a sweet shop it is for reefs according to this chart. I wish I'd a directory. It will be a regular cat's dance getting in. But I say, young man, isn't there a light there?"

"Lighta?" I not understand."

"You savvy — lighthouse — faro—showmark-light in dark?"

"O, yes, lightahouse. I got there. No, no lightahouse."

"Well, there's one marked here as 'projected,' and I was afraid it might have come. I forgot the Canaries were Spanish, and Madeira was Portugee, and that these rocks which lie halfway would be a sort of slack cross between the pair of them. Manana's the motto, isn't it Tonio? Never do to-day what you hope another flat will do for you to-morrow."

"So, si, manana," said the Portuguese, who had not understood one word in ten of all this. Manana we find rich, plenty too much rich. God save queen!"

"Those Canary fishing schooners land on the Salvages sometimes," said McTodd, "so I heard once in Las Palmas."

"I guess we got to take our chances, Mac. If the old wreck's been overhauled before we get there, it's our back luck; if she hasn't been skimmed clean, we'll take what there is, and I fancy we shall be men enough to stick to it. It isn't as if she was piled up on some civilized beach with coastguards to take possession and all the rest of it. The islands are either Spanish or Portuguese. They belong to a pack of thieves anyway, and we've just as much right to help ourselves as anyone else has. What we've got to do at present is to shove this old ruin of lifeboat along as though she were a racing yacht. At the shortest we've got 700 miles of blue water ahead of us."

Open-boat voyaging in the broad Atlantic may have its pleasures, but these, such as they were, did not appeal to either Kettle or his companions. They were thoroughgoing steamer sailors; they despised sails, and the smallness of their craft gave them qualms both mental and physical. By day the sun scorched them with intolerable glare and violence; by night the clammy sea mists drenched them to the bone.

For a larger vessel the weather would have been accounted favorable; for their cockle-shell it was once or twice terrific. In two squalls that they ran into breaking combers filled the lifeboat to the thwarts, and they had to bale for their bare lives. They were cramped and sore from their constrained position and want of exercise; they got sea sores on their wrists and salt grime on every inch of their persons; they were growing gaunt on the scanty rations; and, in fact, a better presentation of a boat full of desperate castaways it would be hard to hit upon. Flotillas of iridescent, pink-sailed nautilus scudded constantly beside them, dropping as constantly astern; and these made their only company. Except for the nautilus, the sea seemed desolate.

In this guise then they ended their voyage, which had spun out to nigh upon 1,000 miles through contrary winds and the necessity for incessant tacking; and in the hight of one blazing afternoon they rose to the tops of the islands out of a twinkling turquoise sea.

These appeared first as mere dusty black rocks sticking up out of the calm blue—Great Salvage island to the northward and Great Piton to the south and beyond—but they grew as the boat neared them, and presently appeared to be built upon a frieze of dazzling feathery whiteness. The lifeboat swept on to reach them, climbing and diving over the rollers. She had canvas decks, quartermast high, contrived to throw off the sprays; and over these the faces of her people peered ahead, wild and gaunt, salt-crusted and desperate.

Great Salvage island drew abeam and passed away astern; Great Piton lay close ahead now fringed with a thousand reefs, each with its spouting breakers. The din of the surf came to them loudly up the wind. A flock of seafowl, screaming and circling, sailed out to escort them in; and ahead, behind the banks of breakers, drawing them on as water will draw a choking man, was the rusted smokestack and stripped masts of a derelict merchant steamer.

There is a yarn about an open boat which had voyaged 1,200 miles over the lonely Pacific, coming upon a green atoll and being sailed recklessly in through the surf, and drowning every soul on board; and the yarn is easily believable. Capt. Kettle and his companions had undergone horrible privations; here, at last, was the isle of their hopes, and the treasure (as it seemed) in full view; but, by some intolerable fate, they were barred from it by relentless walls of surf. Kettle ran in as close as he dared, and then flattened in his sheets, and sailed the lifeboat close-hauled along the noisy line of the breakers to the Norrard, looking for an opening.

The two Portuguese grumbled openly, and when not a ghost of a landing place showed, and Kettle put her about to sail back again, even the cautious McTodd put up his word to "run in and risk it."

But Kettle, though equally sick as they were of the boat and her voyage, had all a sailor's dislike for losing his ship whatever she might be, and cowed them all with voice and threats; and at last his forebearance was rewarded. A slim passage through the reef showed itself at the southern end of the island; and down it they dodged, trimming their sheets six times a minute, with an escort of dangers always close on either hand; and finally ran into a rocky bay which held comparatively smooth water.

There was no place to beach the boat; they had to anchor her off; but with a whip on the cable they were able to step ashore on a ledge of stone, and then haul the boat off again out of harm's way.

It may be thought that they capered with delight at treading on dry land again; but there was nothing of this. With their cramped limbs and disused joints, it was as much as they could do to hobble, and every step was a wrench. But the lure ahead of them was great enough to triumph over minor difficulties. Half a mile away along the rocks was the Duncansby Head, and for her they raced at the top of their crippled gait. And the seafowl screamed curiously above their heads.

They scratched and tore themselves in this frantic progress over the sharp volcanic rocks, they choked with thirst they panted with their labor; but none of these things mattered.

The deserted steamer, when they came to her, was lying off from the shore at the other side of a lake of deep water. But they were fit for no more waiting, and each, as he came opposite her, waded in out of his depth, and swam off with eager strokes. Davit falls trailing in the water gave them an entrance way, and up these they climbed with the quickness of apes; and then, with one accord, they made for the pantry and the steward's storeroom. The gold which had lured them was forgotten; the immediate needs of heir famished bodies were the only things they remembered. They found a cheese box, a box of musty biscuits, and a filter full of stale and tepid water; and they gorged till they were filled, and swore they had never sat to so delicious a meal.

With repletion came the thoughts of fortune again, and off they went to the charthouse to finger the coveted gold. But here was a disappointment ready and waiting for them. They had gone up in a body, neither nationality trusting the other, and together they ransacked the place with thoroughness. There were papers in abundance, there were clothes furry with mildew, there was a broken box of cheap cigars; but of money there was not so much as a bronze piece.

"Eh, well," said Kettle, sitting back on the musty bedclothes, "we have had our trouble for nothing. Someone's been here first and skimmed the place clean. By James, yes. And look on the floor there. See those cigarette ends? They're new and dry. If the old man had been a cigarette smoker he wouldn't have chucked his butts on his charthouse deck, and, even if he had done, they'd have been washed to bits when she was hove down on her beam ends. You can see by the decks outside that she's been pretty clean swept. No, it's those fishermen, as you say, who have been here before us."

"Well," said McTodd, "if I were a swearer, I could say a deal."

"The Dagos are swearing enough for the whole crowd of us, to judge by the splutter of them. The money's gone clean. It's vexing, but that's a fact. Still, I don't like to go back empty-handed."

"I'm as keen as yoursel'. There's that £8 of my wages I left when I ran in Gib, that's got to be made up somehow. What's wrong with getting off the hatches, and seeing how her cargo's made up?"

"She's loaded with hides. I saw it on the manifest. There was Jimmy Mulready's scrawl at the foot of it. That photo there above the bed-foot will be his wife. Poor old Jimmy. He got religion before I did, and started his insurance, too, and, if he's kept them both up, he and his widow ought to be all right— By James, did you feel that?"

McTodd stared round him.

"What?" he asked.

"She moved."

"I took it for sure she was on the ground."

"So did I. But she isn't. There, you can feel her lift again."

They went out on deck. The sun was already dipping in the western sea behind the central hill of the island, and in another few minutes it would be dark. There is little twilight so far south. So they took cross bearings on the shore, and watched intently. Yes, there was not a doubt about it. The Duncansby Head floated, and she was moving across the deep water lake that held her.

"Mon!" said the engineer enthusiastically, "ye've a great head, and a great future before you. I'd never have guessed it."

"I took it for granted she'd beaten her bottom out in getting here; but she's blundered in through the reefs without touching; and if she's come in, she can get out again, and we're the fellows to take her."

"With engines."

"With engines, yes. If she's badly broken down in the hardware shop, we're done. I'd forgotten the machinery, and that's a fact. We'll find a lantern, and I'll go down with you. Mac, and give them an inspect."

The two Portuguese had already sworn themselves to a standstill, and had gone below and found bunks; but the men from the little islands in the north had more energy in their systems, and they expanded it tirelessly. McTodd overhauled every nut, every bearing, every valve, every rod of the engines with an expert's criticism, and found nothing that would prevent active working; Kettle rummaged the rest of the ship; and far into the morning they foregathered again in the charthouse, and compared results.

She had been swept, badly swept; everything movable on deck was gone; cargo had shifted, and then shifted back again till she had lost all her list and was in proper trim; the engines were still workable if carefully nursed; and, in fact though battered, she was entirely seaworthy. And while with tired gusto they were comparing these things, weariness at last got the better of them and first one and then the other incontinently dropped off into the deadest of sleep.

That the Duncansby Head had come in unsteered and unscatched through the reefs, and therefore under steam and control could go out again, was on the face of it a very simple and obvious theory to propound; but to discover a passage through the rocks to make this practicable was quite another matter. For three days the old P. and O. lifeboat plied up and down from outside the reefs and had 20 narrow escapes from being smashed into staves. It looked as if nature had performed a miracle, and taken the steamer bodily in her arms, and lifted her over at least a dozen black walls of stone.

The two Portuguese were already sick to death of the whole business, but for their feelings neither Kettle nor McTodd had any concern whatever. They were useful in the working of the boat, and therefore they were taken along, and when they refused duty or did it with too much listlessness to please, they were cuffed into activity again. There was no verbal argument about the matter. "Work or Suffer" was the simple motto the two islanders went upon, and it answered admirably. They knew the breed of the Portuguese of old.

At last, by dint of daring and toil, the secret of the pass through the noisy spouting reefs was won; it was sounded carefully and methodically for

IN THE SECRET PLACES

MAY GOD'S VOICE BE HEARD BY THE DISCOURAGED SOUL.

THE VALUE OF RETIREMENT

Far Away From the Ordinary Haunts of Men the Weary Can Get Away For a Little While From the Selfishnesses and the Meannesses and the Sordidness Surrounding Us—An Inspiring Nature Sermon.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 23.—In this sermon the preacher finds a lesson amid the mountain peaks and valleys, the breeding places of storm and tempest. The text is Psalm lxxxi, 7, "I answered thee in the secret place of thunder."

I wonder where the sweet singer of Israel caught his inspiration for my text? Was he herding his sheep one day in the valley or the lowlands, where the shepherds, a thousand years later, watched their flocks by night and heard the angel of the nativity say, "Fear not, for behold I bring you tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord?" While he was sitting upon a rock in the fields did he not look up and see the storm clouds gathering over the surrounding hills? Then away off in the distance did he hear the muttering of the thunder. And while the valleys remained dry did he see the rain falling in torrents upon the mountain heights? Then did he see a beautiful rainbow in a great arch lift itself above those mountain tops? And then did he remember the words which God spake unto Noah a thousand years before the Psalmist was born, "I do set my bow in the clouds, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth, and I will remember my covenant which is between me and you and every living creature of all flesh, and the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh?" Then when David saw the rainbow and witnessed the storm clouds disappear did he feel that God was his protector and never failing friend? Was he filled with the divine peace which passeth all understanding?

Or it may be different scenes that suggested to the sweet singer of Israel the image of my text. Perhaps it was on a day when one of his sheep went astray. He counted the flock over and over again, and he found that one was surely lost. So he started up the mountain side to hunt it. Higher and higher he went. He plunged through this thicket and that. Then at last he found it. But in the meantime the night settled in. Then the stars of the heavens were shut out by the black clouds. Then the thunder began to growl. Then, with his bleating sheep following close at his heels, he saw the lightnings flash and shatter a huge tree just a short distance off. Then he said: "Ah, that must have been the way God's voice sounded to Moses when he spoke to him among the caverns and the deep ravines of old Sinai. This is truly one of the secret places of thunder." I personally believe that the Psalmist did not catch the meaning of my text when he was tending his sheep down in the valleys, but when he was hunting for a lost lamb in one of the secret places of thunder, upon one of the highest peaks of the Judean mountains overlooking the little village of Bethlehem, where he was born and where his family at that time dwelt.

We do not know what were the scenes that caused these words to spring from the lips of the ancient poet, but since his time the child of God has often been reminded of them in times of trouble and crisis. It is well to know that there are secret places in which God's voice may be heard by the discouraged soul. There are times when the heart of the faithful is depressed by the noises wrangling around him; when his ears are filled with the loud babble of the world's disputings, with the fierce cries of contention, with the silly utterances of society's frivolity, with the vain and foolish sophistry of learned philosophers proclaiming that there is no God. Then happy is he if he can retire into his closet or some other secret place and hear the voice of God answering his perturbed spirit in thunder tones.

The words suggest that God's secret places of thunder are far away from the ordinary haunts of man. They are so far away that for a little while at least we can get away from the selfishnesses and meannesses and sordidness surrounding us. We can live upon a higher plane. We can be, as I was some time ago, when I climbed the San Bernardino mountains to camp in the noted Little Bear Valley of southern California. After we had gone up 1,000, 2,000, 3,000, 4,000, 5,000 feet suddenly we came to the summit. There we were able to stand upon the rocks and with sweep of eye take in the hot plains dotted with cities and villages and ranches. There we could see where men and women were toiling and struggling in the work of everyday life, but we were above them all and above their turmoil. We were in the flesh, yet we were so far up that when the mists began to gather they shut out the whole world beneath us. These mists looked like a great sea, with here and there a mountain peak pushing itself up, reminding us of the world beneath us as the Azores rising above the Atlantic remind us of the continent of Atlantis sunk beneath the waves. It was a strange experience—that of withdrawal from the world and all its concerns. It is necessary at times, when our vision is clouded and our spirits warped by the world's principles and maxims, to climb beyond its reach into the upper air of God's presence, where in the secret place of thunder we may hear his voice. Thus in order to reach God's secret place of thunder we must get out of the world. We must lift ourselves above its meannesses and sins. We must lift ourselves from earth and walk with God and commune with God upon the mountain tops of love and gentleness and kindness. We must learn upon these mountain tops of spirituality to breathe the pure air of the purposes for which we were born and for which we can live through all eternity.

My friends, I would like to ask you a blunt question: Have you ever tried to seek God far away from the haunts of man? Have you ever tried to commune with him in the secret places of the thunder? In order to do this you do not have to climb the Matterhorn or Mount Shasta or Mount Rainier or Baldy Peak of New Mexico. You do not have to leave the city walls and hie yourself to the hills and listen to the songs of the thrushes and the wooings of the brooks. A man can live in the city and yet not be in the city. We should do so if we were really absorbed in spiritual things. Some time ago Prof. Curie, the great discoverer of the element radium, was walking through the streets of Paris with his mind so concentrated upon his scientific problems that he was utterly unconscious of his surroundings. When a heavy truck rumbled down the street his ears were deaf to the noise and to the warning calls of the driver, and he was crushed to death in an instant, as the car of the Indian juggernaut would crush out the lives of the devotees who flung themselves under its revolving wheels. My friends, how many times during the week do you withdraw yourselves from man to commune with God? How many times do you seek him in prayer and in holy communion? How many times a week do you say to your loved ones, "Come, let us go and talk with God for a little while in the secret places of thunder, as Moses talked with him upon Sinai's heights?"

But I find that God's secret places of thunder are upon the mountain tops of difficulties, as well as in the quiet places removed from the ordinary habitations of man. They are to be found only among the steep heights where the eagles build their eyries and where only the most persistent of Alpine climbers is willing to go. Do you suppose for one instant that the Psalmist had an easy time finding his lost sheep in the secret place of the thunder? Nay. Methinks that one of the other shepherds at first went forth with him to hunt the lost sheep. David said to him at starting: "Ephraim, you go down the valley in this direction, and I will travel in that direction. You keep calling, and I will do the same. Then we shall meet at the foot of yonder hills. Then if we do not find the sheep in the valley, why, we must seek her in the hills." Thus they do, and the lost sheep is not found. Then up the rocks they begin to go, higher and higher. Now the darkness settles. Now is heard the blood curdling scream of the wildcat. Now comes the roar of the mountain lion hunting his prey. They climb on. Their flesh is lacerated. Their clothing is torn. They stumble. They fall. Now they have to go over a narrow ledge by the side of a steep precipice. Ephraim grows tired. He trembles with fear. He says: "David, I am going back. We can never find that lost sheep. She has either been dashed to death upon the rocks or else she has been slain by the wild beatsts." But David keeps on. He keeps on climbing and slipping, but higher and higher he goes, as he calls, "Yoohee! Yoohee! Oh, lost sheep. Yoohee! Yoohee!" At last—yes, at last, he finds her in the secret place of the thunder.

Ah, yes: the secret place of the thunder is always to be found upon the mountain tops of difficulty. It is no easy matter to be a real Christian. It is no small task to listen to the voice of God in the secret place of thunder and hear aright and obey aright. My friends, the great trouble is with most of us we want to be Christians, but we want to be low valley Christians. We want to be Christians not of the crags and cliffs, but of the orchards and the harvest fields and of the flower gardens. We want to be the lazy Christians, lying upon beds of ease, where the bees will bring to us their honey and the sun will smile upon us a continual benediction, and the tossing, tumbling fountains will slake our thirst, and where the birds will never cease to sing for us their sweetest lullabies. Ah, no, that is not where we will hear God's voice speaking to us in the secret place of the thunder. It is not in the lowlands, but upon the mountain tops. It is not where we lie down upon a bed of roses and close our eyes in indolent somnolence, but only upon the mountain heights of difficulty, to scale which we will have to do as Paul did when he described himself, in the twelfth chapter of Hebrews, as running a gospel race: "Wherefore seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." When you read those words, dare you for one moment assume that Paul had an easy time when he gave himself up for consecrated service to Jesus Christ?

It is only when we are able to press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus that we are able to reach that prize. It is only when we are willing to climb the highest mountains of difficulty that we are able to hear God speaking to us in tones of love as he spoke to Moses in the secret places of thunder. There is a beautiful story told that in olden times a heathen king lay dying. He was mortally wounded on the field of battle. No sooner did he receive the fatal thrust than he sent for his most trusted servant and said, "Tell the dead that I come." At once the servant drew the king's sword and drove it into his own heart. And as his spirit was about to speed away the servant said, "Master, I will go and tell the dead that thou wilt soon be in their midst." "Oh," you say, "that was a beautiful devotion. That servant was willing to give up all for his king." So must we sacrifice if we are to hear our divine king speak to us in the secret place of thunder. We must be willing to give up all for him. We must be ready to climb every mountain of difficulty for his honor and glory. "So likewise whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath he cannot be my disciple."

But how shall we be willing to forsake all for God's glory and honor? You say: "That is not in my nature to do. A man cannot rise above his own nature. He may try to do so, but if a man is born with the instincts of a coyote sneaking and deceptive he will be no matter how hard he may fight against that disposition. If he is born selfish he will be selfish. If he is born generous he will be generous." "I was born selfish," he says, "and I do not want to give up all for God's glory and honor. I want a little of the glory and honor to abide by my own doorstep and not all to be placed at the throne of God." Ah, my friend, I am glad you mentioned that fact. You have spoken well. With your own nature born in sin you cannot give up all for Christ. But remember this—when you get to God's secret place of thunder you are going to have your whole nature changed. You are not going to be as you are now. You are going to have your sinful nature recreated by Christ. What you love now you will hate then. What you hate now you will love then. You will not then be a wolf going around in sheep's wool. Your lionlike nature will be changed into the loving nature of a little lamb. Let me find this fact in the simile of my text.

The Psalmist in all probability cared but little for the scientific causes of the thunderstorm. In his time the national and international systems of weather bureaus had not been established. There were not then, as now, weather outposts or observatories stationed all around the world connected with telegraph wires. In our day no sooner does a storm start south from Alaska than the great ganglion or nerve centre at Washington is made cognizant of the fact, and the danger signals are lifted along the coast to warn American shipping. In all probability David knew nothing about the different strata of air overhead. He did not know that, just as the scientist to-day drops a fathom line into the ocean and finds different currents of water in a straight line flowing above or underneath each other in different directions, so the aeronaut in his balloon finds different currents of air in the atmosphere overhead blowing in different directions. But this one fact the Psalmist knew about a thunderstorm — it represented an atmospheric change. Before the storm came the hot valleys would be blistered. Then the droughts would be parching the grass and drying up the water holes. Then the sheep would be bleating from hunger and thirst. But no sooner did the echoing of the storm sound forth from the secret place of thunder than at once the hot, blasting air became cool. Then the reservoirs of the clouds were emptied of their waters. Then all nature began to teem and to smile and to hum and to sing with life. So in the secret place of thunder, when God speaks to us, our natures will be changed. Being sinful, we shall become pure. Being morally crooked, we shall become straight. Being spiritually dead, we shall become spiritually resurrected. "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be white as snow. Though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool."

But in the secret place of thunder man is not only brought into right harmony with God, but also into right harmony with man. There we are taught to love the Lord our God with all our heart and soul and mind. But we are also taught there to love our neighbor as ourselves. And in no place on earth does a man try more to help his neighbor than when he is in the mountains. The valleys are the places where man too often lives for himself. The wild mountains are the places where man lives for others. If you are in trouble in the high hills you can always go to the first man you meet and he will help you out of that difficulty if it is possible for him so to do. There everybody is honest. There everybody tries to help every other.

But there is still another fact about these mountains that I would have you bear well in mind. God's secret place of thunder is not circumscribed. There are many secret places of thunder. Just as mountains seem to overtop mountains, so for man there should always be higher secret places of thunder, to which he should always be striving to go. This fact also is most beautifully illustrated among the hills. But the Christian who stays in one secret place of thunder must surely die in a spiritual sense. Higher than his present spiritual life he must see visions. God keeps saying to him always this one sentence: "Child, climb, keep climbing higher and higher into the spiritual realms. Way off among the cloudlands of the mountains I have for thee other secret places of thunder, where thou canst commune with me. Thou must climb and keep on climbing until at last thou shalt dwell with me in the eternal secret places of heaven." As one of God's chosen ones are you continuing to climb higher and higher into his spiritual realms?

And oh, how beautiful the valleys look after we have dwelt for a little while among the hills. A man as a rule cannot appreciate the lowlands and the valleys when he is climbing up the mountain sides. Then his breath comes quick and short. Then he, like Bunyan's hero, Christian, is tugging at his load. He stops every little while to put his mouth to the waters to quench his thirst, for his lips are feverish and his brow is an overheated forehead. But after he has climbed the mountains and rested his tired limbs among the cool shades of the trees and slept for a little while upon the softest of couches made up of pine needles, everything is changed. Then when he starts down into the valleys the world looks so different. Every brook sings to him. Every tree rustles with gladness. Every step seems buoyant with perpetual youth. A supernatural strength and a supernatural joy are his.

Oh, tired and weary soul, working in life's lowlands, would you enjoy your life? Would you feel that every deed that you do is a joyful deed of gospel opportunities? Then for a little while hie away from the deep valleys of selfishness. Climb. Keep on climbing. Climb up into the secret places of thunder and listen to God's voice talking to you. Then God will send you back to your work strong in a physical and mental and spiritual sense. Then he will make you say, "Next to the blessed opportunity of singing the song of Moses and the Lamb before the great white throne of God is the blessing of working for him in his vineyards in the lowlands of earth."

O God, may we hear thee speaking to us to-day in the secret places of thunder, that we may go forth as joyful reapers to gather thy sheaves from the great harvest fields of the world into the gospel granaries. Dost thou not hear God speaking to thee in the secret place of thunder?

ONTARIO HEALTH FACTS

BIRTH RATE IN OUR CITIES IS ON THE INCREASE.

Toronto Is In the Lead, With 24.3 Per 1,000—Rural Parts Not Doing So Well—Twins Were Numerous In 1904—Marriages Are Still Popular—Consumption's Grim Harvest—Nervous Troubles Increasing—Suicides.

The thirty-fifth annual report of the Registrar-General for Ontario, being that for the year 1904, has been published by the Deputy Registrar-General, Dr. Charles A. Hodgetts. It contains a number of most interesting and instructive tables regarding the births, deaths and marriages in the province, and regarding the health of the province. The statistics have been compiled with much care, and the deductions drawn from them by the Deputy Registrar-General are full of import.

The population of the province, as estimated by geometrical progression, is given as 2,203,968. The population in the cities has increased faster than in other parts of the province. This, the report states, is due not so much to any increase in the birth rate in the cities as to the influx of population from the rural parts. The number of births registered during the year was 50,265, which is at the rate of 28.8 per 1,000. This is an increase of 0.7 per 1,000 over the preceding year and 1.1 over the year 1902. This increase, the report says should be considered as satisfactory, because of the large number of marriageable young men who leave this province for the West. "The older couples," says the report, "those who have passed the child-bearing period of life, being left in Ontario, and considering, further, that it is not 'the fashion' of the present day to have a family of more than one or two, the returns for 1904 must be looked upon as very satisfactory, and we may feel thankful that the desire for the comforts and pleasures of a married life, free from all 'encumbrances,' apparently is not making rapid headway in the community, and there are those in our midst possessed with a due sense of their responsibility to the State and the benefits to be derived from a course of non-interference with the laws of nature."

Toronto's Birth Rate High.

In the cities Toronto has the highest rate of births, namely, 24.3 per 1,000, and, with the exception of Windsor, which has exceptional advantages as a matrimonial centre Toronto has the second highest rate of marriages, namely, 13.2 per 1,000. Chatham is the city which leads in this regard outside of Windsor. Its rate of marriage per 1,000 is 16.2 Windsor enjoys the reputation of having a marriage rate of 79.4 per 1,000. Ottawa and Woodstock are the worst cities in Ontario for people who are looking for partners for life, as they have a marriage rate of only 8.9 per 1,000. Toronto's death rate among the cities is pretty high. It is 17.8 per 1,000. The highest is Woodstock, with 21.3, and the lowest Stratford, with 11.4 per 1,000.

In the towns of over 3,000 population the birth rate is 25.1 per 1,000, or 2.3 in excess of the rate of the province as a whole. The birth rate in the rural parts is below the average for the province.

Twins Were Numerous.

People of a curious turn of mind will be interested in learning that there were 549 pairs of twins born in Ontario in 1904, and that in 7 cases parents found themselves the owners of triplets Among the twins there were 550 males and 584 females Of the 21 individuals who made up the 7 sets of triplets, 10 were males and 11 were females The number of twin births was 57 greater than in 1903 and 26 more than in 1902 Taking births in general, the males are still in the lead, the proportion being as 104.5 to 100. In 1904, however, it was as 105.8 to 100, so that the males are lagging behind a trifle. During the month of November fewer births occur than in any other month, and the maximum is reached in the month of May.

Marriages Still Popular.

There were 19,789 marriages made in Ontario in 1904, which was less by 41 than in the preceding year, and is only at the rate of 8.9 of the estimated population. This rate, however, is very close to that of 1903, and in the latter year there was a marked increase. June is still in the lead as the correct month to be married in, and May is the least popular month for nuptials.

The marriages according to religious denominations show no change in relative precedence. The order is as follows: — Methodists, Presbyterians, Church of England and Roman Catholics.

In the matter of deaths there were 8,742 in the cities, 3,264 in towns of over 3,000 population, and 19,284 in townships. The death rate for the province was 14.1 per 1,000, or 0.7 per 1,000 more than in 1903. There were 1,616 more deaths in 1904 than in 1903. Of the increase 207 were infants under one year of age. The chief increase in deaths was in the aged people, while the children got off more easily. The chief decrease in deaths was in the class of children from 1 to 9. This is the group which is most affected by epidemic diseases. As is usually the case, the smallest number of deaths occurred in June and the greatest in March.

Causes of Deaths.

"In considering the causes of deaths," the report says, "it is found that 1,730 deaths were due to infectious or contagious diseases apart altogether from the deaths caused by tuberculosis and scrofula, which numbered 2,877.

"The most fatal of the diseases in this group was diphtheria, 35.1 per cent. of the deaths in this group being from this alone. The next in order was typhoid fever, with 27.8 per cent., and influenza, 19.1 per cent. Consequent upon the measures taken by local health authorities to prevent the spread of scarlet fever, which in 1903 had been prevalent, and which caused 580 deaths in that year, the progress of scarlet fever was very much curtailed in 1904, and the diminished number of deaths, viz., 163, may be largely attributable to this cause.

"The widespread character of diphtheria is evidenced by the fact that not a county or district in the province was free from it." There were 127 deaths from diphtheria in Toronto. There also was not a county or district free from deaths from influenza.

Consumption's Grim Harvest.

The total deaths from tuberculosis in 1904 was 2,877, an increase over 1903 of 154. Every county and district lent its quota to make this large total. Since 1870 the total number of deaths from tuberculosis is given as 79,546.

"A comparison of deaths from tuberculosis in the cities and the counties in which these cities are situated shows that in the counties in which are situated the largest cities the greatest percentage of deaths occur therein. Thus of the 439 deaths returned from the County of York, 338, or 77 per cent., took place in the City of Toronto, and of the 135 deaths credited to the County of Wentworth, 101, or 74.8 per cent., occurred in the City of Hamilton. Similarly in Carleton County, of 154 deaths from tuberculosis, 114, or 74 per cent., are found as occurring in Ottawa.

"We find that the great majority of deaths in the Counties of York, Carleton and Wentworth happened in the cities, and the figures are of sufficient importance for the local health authorities to study the why and the wherefor, and if properly considered lead them to the adoption of active measures to stop this large death rate.

"The death rate of Muskoka, 165 per 100,000 of the population, would indicate that deaths occur of persons suffering from tuberculosis who seek this section of the province with the hope of being benefited, but succumb to the disease before being able to return home.

"The number of deaths from the various forms of cancer were 1,253, being 97 in excess of the previous year.

Nervous Troubles Increasing.

"The total number of deaths under this group was 3,694, being 405 in excess of 1903 and representing 11.8 per cent. of the total deaths from all causes. The number of deaths from nervous diseases reported in the cities was 1,207, or 27.5 per cent. of the provincial total, and, with the exception of the group which includes diseases of old age and infancy, there were more deaths from these diseases than from any other group cause, the death rate in the cities being 207 per 100,000 of the population. The general conclusion to be drawn from the figures is that nervous diseases are on the increase in the province."

"The number of still-births," says the report, "keeps steadily mounting upward. If the causes were all natural one would not perhaps think so much of it, but the tendency of the present day is for families on the permanent unit basis, without any intention of extension on this basis; or, what is worse still, and more criminal, it is in many instances the avowed purpose of our young people entering the married life to remain free from family duties and responsibilities. With these facts in view it is with feelings of mingled alarm and remorse I direct attention to this steady increase in still-births in our province.

"There were 3,411 deaths from senile decay in Ontario during the year."

Suicides and Accidents.

The report concludes with some interesting figures about the number of deaths from suicide and accident.

"Of the former there were 113; of these, 77 were males and 36 females, 40 single and 65 married; in 8 instances the social condition was not known. The youngest suicide was under 14 and the oldest was over 80. The number of accidents happening in the province shows an upward tendency, the figures showing an increase for the year of 16 over 1903. It is peculiar to note that not a death occurred as the result of a bicycle accident, and, despite the extension of the electric railway system, only 19 deaths were due to this cause. The record of 219 deaths by drowning is a strong plea for the systematic teaching of swimming to our school children, and the 186 deaths by railway accidents might be used as an argument that pedestrians and the public of this province have some claim to a right of way and a better protection should be given us at our level crossings. The value to the province of the 186 lives lost under this head in 1904 represents a sum which might have been saved if such restrictions were better enforced."

Stained Glass By New Process.

Cloisonne glass is a pet of modern glassmakers. It is not a wall decoration, but a kind of substitute for stained glass, different in effect and in quality from any of the paper imitations. It is genuine glass. A sheet of plain glass is put over the drawing to be executed, and on this the outlines of the design are traced in wire, black, silver or gilt, as the case may be. These wire outlines, which are semicircular in section, are fixed firmly to the background sheet, and into the cells formed by the cloisonnes are shoveled countless little glass beads, which are cemented on the ground, and the entire panel is then covered with a second sheet of glass. The great point of the invention is that, along with a pleasant variety of surface, it is possible and easy to get an almost limitless variety of color as well as the most delicate and gradual shading, in which one color melts almost imperceptibly into another.

The Result of Short Sleeves.

A Peterboro' medical man is an authority for the statement that the style this season of wearing short sleeves is one of the worst for the followers of the custom ever adopted. He said: "There's nothing that will cause the hair on the arms, or, for that matter on any part of the body, to grow as quickly as will exposure to the sun and wind. In hot climates savages wear no hats, and their hair is most luxuriant. The girls that are now wearing short sleeves simply to be in fashion will regret it in a couple of years when they see long hair growing on their arms."

To Neutralize Nicotine.

Professor Gerold of Yale has discovered how to neutralize the action of nicotine in cigars. During the process of manufacture the tobacco leaves are steeped in a decoction, the principal element of which is wild marjoram. The deleterious effects of the tobacco are thereby avoided and yet the quality and aroma are not altered.

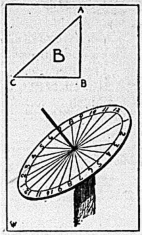
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

SIMPLE SUNDIAL.

The Way to Make One and Set It Up In Proper Shape.

Although we all have clocks and watches by which to tell the time, the sundial will always retain a certain charm by reason of its antiquity, and any garden possessing one has a feature added to it that nothing else can supply. So come, boys, especially you handy ones, and make a dial and then plant at its base some quick growing vine and have a thing of beauty that is a joy forever.

One of the simplest sundials consists of a metal disk. You may make it any size you wish, dividing its circumference into twenty-four equal parts, numbered from 1 to 12, twice around, as shown in Fig. A. The best metal to use is zinc, as it does not rust and is easily marked and cut.



THE SUNDIAL.

In the center of the disk is fixed a straight pin, called a style. It must be exactly perpendicular to the disk, as the accuracy of the dial depends on this, and also on its being placed exactly parallel with the earth's axis. This latter is effected in the following way:

Make a tiny hole in the metal disk, close to the style, and then on the first clear night place the disk on its support in such a position that by looking through the little hole you may bring the north star in line with the style. When you have obtained the right angle, fasten the disk in place, and your sundial is complete.

The shadow thrown by the style will point to the hour of the day, and of course you need hardly be hold that on cloudy days the dial will not work, as the sun is needed to cast the shadow.

Another way to find the angle or place in which the disk should rest is to cut a triangle out of pasteboard, as Fig. B designates, having the angle at C just equal to the latitude of the locality where the dial is to be used. You may easily do this by finding the latitude on a map and then drawing the angle with the aid of a piece of metal called a protractor, which is marked off in degrees and which may be bought of any dealer in drawing materials.

Fix this triangle, with the aid of a compass, so that the angle B points due north and the base BC is horizontal. Then place the dial so that the style points along the line AC, with the free end toward A. When so placed the figure 12 in the dial must be directly below the style, as the picture shows.—New York Herald.

March Winds and April Showers.

Perhaps you do not know that the old saying, "When March comes in like a lion it will go out like a lamb," is founded on a scientific principle. If it comes in with high, blustering winds, there is an unusual degree of evaporation, caused by these winds, and hence an unusual amount of water vapor in the air. This results in constant showers during the latter part of March and in April, and these showers break the violence of the winds and give us the proverbial lamblike behavior.

The weather of March and April is of special benefit to the earth. The high winds of March are needed to dry the soil and thus keep the seeds from rotting soon after the planting, and the April showers supply the principal nourishment on which the seeds depend for development.

Conundrums.

Why is "o" the noisest of all the vowels? Because you can't make a horrid, loud noise without it, while all the others are inaudible.

Why can you never expect a fishmonger to be generous? Because his business makes him sell fish.

Why would an owl be offended at your calling him a pheasant? Because you would be making game of him.

What is that which is black, white and red all over, which shows some people to be green and makes others look black and blue? A newspaper.

Who Is She?

There is a little maiden—
Who is she—do you know?—
Who always has a welcome
Wherever she may go.

Each spot she makes the brighter
As if it were the sun,
And she is sought and cherished
And loved by every one.

You surely must have met her;
You certainly can guess—
What! Must I introduce her?
Her name is Cheerfulness.

FAMILY MEALS.

Don't Let Ceremony Crush Out Cheerfulness and Sociability.

A certain amount of ceremony should be observed even at the simplest family meal, but when this is carried too far it crushes sociability and cheerfulness.

One should be careful not to eat so rapidly that the food may not be properly masticated or that one will have finished while the others at the table are still eating. If it is necessary to ask for anything during a meal, one should take the opportunity of speaking quietly to the waitress when she is near or wait until it is possible to catch her eye.

When a meal is announced go to the table promptly. It is annoying to the housekeeper and cook to have the meals delayed. It often happens that a few minutes' waiting may spoil some dish, and in any case it causes a waste of precious time to the housekeeper and other members of the family. Some thoughtless people seem to think that it matters less that the whole family is kept waiting five minutes or more than that they should complete the work which they happen to have in hand. There are many jars and breaks in the household machinery from this cause alone.

In many households where there is a regular waitress there is a rule sometimes that nothing shall be handed by the members of the family.

In offering to serve any one at the table use one of these forms: "May I help you?" "May I offer [or send] you?" "Let me give you," etc. The form "Will you have?" is out of place save for a waitress, who is usually trained to wait on the table in silence.

CHILD TRAINING.

How One Father Manages Disputes Among the Youngsters.

A mothers' magazine calls attention to the fact that the old adage, "Children should be seen and not heard," has little place in the modern systems of child training and says it is quite right that it is so, especially in the case of the child with a grievance. Children, with all their chattering, are strongly inarticulate when it is a matter of explaining their feelings, and a child may suffer more than the adults around it ever dream over some injustice, real or fancied, which it would probably have difficulty in putting into words. If the parents are continually telling it to "Hush up!" and "Keep still, now!" there is every chance of developing a fairly sulky youngster in time.

In one New York home, where the father takes an active part in the training of the children, as few fathers do in this country, unfortunately, no dispute among the children and no grievance of any of them passes unnoticed, especially if the father is around. No matter what he may be doing, he drops it and instantly opens a kind of informal children's court, getting at the bottom of the trouble by the gentlest of questioning. This takes some of his time, of course, but to those children their father is the ideal of justice, a confidant who never fails them.—New York Tribune.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Remove warts by rubbing several times with onion dipped in salt.

Butter will take the soreness from a bruise and will often prevent discoloration.

When the gums are tender and bleeding, the mouth should be rinsed with warm water to which listerine has been added.

Grape fruit is said to have, in smaller degree, qualities similar to those of quinine and will allay inflammation and break up malarial disorders if taken in time.

Never neglect a sore throat. A good gargle can be made by mixing in equal quantities a teaspoonful of salt and carbonate of soda and dissolving these in half a tumbler of cold water.

A splendid laxative sirup may be made as follows: Put a half pound of raisins, prunes and figs to soak in three pints of cold water. Bottle the sirup after two days and take a tablespoonful night and morning.

Cloth Cold Without Ice.

In case of fever or weakness a cold cloth on the forehead or face or base of the brain is one of the most comforting things in the world. In the tropical hospitals and where ice is scarce all that is necessary is to wet a linen cloth, wave it to and fro in the air, fold it and place it on the patient. Have another cloth ready, waving it to and fro just before applying it. These cloths have a more grateful and lasting coolness than those made so by the extreme cold, sometimes called burning cold or ice.

For a Business Woman.

One good tailored suit, spring and fall; plain smart waists to wear with this to the office; a fancy waist to freshen it up for the theater and Sundays; a rainy day skirt and coat for bad weather; a trim, rather small and becoming hat; a comfortable house gown to slip on when she goes home at night.

The above may seem like a modest wardrobe, but for the woman who is in business to win and who hasn't much time to fool over clothes it may be taken as a safe guide.—Chicago News.

Salted Pecans.

Salted pecans are even more delicious than salted almonds. They are rarely prepared at home for the reason that the nuts are difficult to remove from the shells without breaking the meats. This difficulty is entirely overcome by pouring boiling water over the nuts, letting the water cool on them. Crack by striking small ends of nuts and salt as you would almonds.

Harvest Festivals In Two Churches.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY —ELOQUENT DISCOURSES IN CHRIST CHURCH AND ST. JOHN'S —REV. MR. EMERSON PREACHED TO WORKINGMEN.

Christ Church.

Harvest festival services were held in Christ Church yesterday and at both services large congregations were in attendance. The interior of the edifice was tastefully decorated with grain, fruits and flowers, emblematic of the bountiful harvest. The prayers and hymns were in keeping with the occasion. The Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, preached at both services and his discourses were most appropriate. In the morning his text was from Deuteronomy, 8th chapter and 19th verse. The following is a synopsis of his remarks:

"And it shall be if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them and worship them, I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish."

These words were spoken by the Prophet Moses to the children of Israel. He warned them not to forsake the true and living God, the God who had protected and kept them. God had especial regard for the Israelites. He stood by them and protected them against their enemies. They were His chosen people. For 40 years He was with them in the wilderness. He brought them in safety across the River Jordan and placed them in a land flowing with milk and honey. He assisted them through their leaders, and although enemies did come against them they came off more than conquerors through God's mercy and help. God blessed them bountifully in many respects, and even by strategy were they protected. There came a time, however, in the history of these people when their prestige was gone, and they had to leave the land of promise. It became a desolate instead of a fruitful land. Trials and adversity overcame the people. Any why? Because of guilt and sin, and the worshipping of other gods rather than the true and living God. They disobeyed God, hence their punishment. Their enemies came and took them captive. The Rev. gentleman then spoke of the British Empire, and more particularly of England, and said her people compared, to some extent, with the Israelites. To them had, in latter days, been entrusted the mission of unfurling the banner of God and carrying the gospel to heathen lands. Canada, as a portion of the British Empire, was especially favored by God. This land of ours was destined to become a great country. Many settlers from the three British Isles were coming out here to work out their destiny. This country, at first composed of but two provinces, namely, upper and lower Canada, had now a number of provinces and one Federal Parliament, whose members were bound together by one common tie, namely, the welfare of the Dominion. As London, the metropolis of the world, was becoming congested with humanity, God has come to the rescue and a vast and a great Canadian Northwest is being opened up and populated. It is virtually a land of milk and honey, a land of wheat, barley and fruit. Are we not, as the Israelites once were, God's chosen people? Is there not a promise that God will be our protector. God prospered the Israelites when they trusted Him and will He not do likewise with us. But if we forget God and worship the god of silver and gold then will we perish. For our own sakes, if we desire to become a great nation, we must remain true to God. He has placed us in a land of glory and in a land of golden opportunities and a golden inheritance. We should not neglect our opportunities. God has done great things for us, and will we not be true to Him and His cause? If we wish to become greater there is only way and that is by recognizing and worshipping God. Represent Him in our lives, and recognize Him as the giver of all good things.

The music at the different services was appropriate to the occasion. In the morning an anthem, "And the Lord Said," was rendered by the choir, solos being well taken by Miss Hilda Bell and Mr. C. Hollins. In the evening Miss Jessie Phillips sang, "Consider the Lilies," her rich voice and fine method being greatly admired. Mrs. Campbell played some magnificent voluntaries.

St. John's.

Harvest festival services were held in the above church yesterday. Large congregations were present, and the sacred edifice looked very pretty with its decorations of fruit, grain and flowers. At the morning service Holy Communion was administered, Woodward's communion service being used. At the evening service the choir sang a full choral evensong. Tallis' Responses being used. The following reverend gentlemen were present at the evening service; Rev. Canon Bogert, Rev. R. Fraser, Rev. H. F. D. Woodcock, Rev. A. L. Geen, and Mr. Farrow, lay reader. Rev. Mr. Woodcock preached at both services, giving appropriate and helpful discourses, which were much appreciated. The voluntaries by the organist, Mr. Reginald Geen, were listened to with pleasure by the congregations. The offering for the day were gratifying to the church officials.

Baptist.

In the opera house last night Rev. C. H. Emerson, pastor of the Baptist Church, preached a sermon expressly to workingmen. In the course of a carefully thought out and eloquent discourse, the preacher compared conditions to-day with those of olden times, very much to the advantage of the former. In ancient days, he said, only here and there a soldier, a lawgiver or a philosopher was great enough to be worthy of mention, but there were millions of slaves. To-day, especially in English-speaking countries, there are opportunities for every man to advance, and "Jack was as good as his master." Unfortunately, he thought, the trend of latter-day unionism was to suppress the individuality of men by putting all on the same level, whereas the great aim of men should be to uplift their fellow-men. The Rev. gentleman spoke without animus towards labor unionism, but said that was the way it appeared to him, a bystander, as it were. There was nothing more noble and manly than honest labor, but every man should try to get into the sphere for which he was best fitted, and parents should see that their children were started in trades or professions for which they showed aptitude. In conclusion the preacher reminded his hearers that it was not the task itself which was of importance to God, but the way in which the task was performed. A brief song service preceded the regular evening service, and an orchestra led the singing, which was hearty.

John St.

The congregations of John Street Presbyterian Church were last night favored with a superb rendition of the grand solo, "Fear ye Not, O Israel," which was given by Miss Irene Love, of Toronto. Miss Love is a daughter of Magistrate Love, of London Ont., and is at present editor of the Vanity Fair page of the Toronto Star.

Bridge Street.

"The Prodigal's Return," was the subject discussed last evening by Mr. Bruce Hunter. His text was from St. Luke, 15th chapter and 18th verse.

"I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, father I have sinned against heaven and before thee."

During the service Mr. Chas. Spalding sang a solo entitled "Guard Me While I Sleep." The choir rendered an anthem "Tarry With Me, O My Saviour," the solo being sweetly taken by Miss G. Price, and a male chorus sang Kipling's "Recessional."

Holloway St.

At Holloway St. Church there were good congregations, interested in improving the beautiful Sabbath. In connection with the morning service the sacrament of baptism was administered to several children. The pastor took for his text John 1: 12:

"As many as received Him to them gave He power to become the sons of God."

In the evening Rev. Dr. Andrews delivered a most helpful and scholarly sermon from John 12: 24:

"Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."

The speaker showed that the great Creator, Christ, had imparted something of Himself into all nature in self-sacrifice for the preservation and propagation of its kind e.g., the self-sacrifice shown in the minutest living cells. There was self-sacrifice in the animal and vegetable world, and self-sacrifice was an instinct of birds, motherhood and heroes, and certainly not wanting in the Christ, the fruit of which abounds in evident Christian enjoyment and life. The Rev. gentleman concluded with a quotation; — "If Jesus Christ be a man and only a man, I say of all mankind I will cleave to Him always, and if Jesus Christ be only God I will follow Him through earth and sky."

PRETTY HOME WEDDING TO-DAY

NUPTIALS OF MR. BEECHER DOOLITTLE AND MISS KATIE RIGGS THIS MORNING.

A pretty home wedding took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Murney St., this morning, when Miss Beatrice Kate Riggs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Riggs, became the wife of Mr. Beecher Doolittle. The parlor, where the ceremony took place, was beautifully decorated with flowers and potted plants. Rev. C. H. Emerson, pastor of the Baptist Church, performed the ceremony in the presence of the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The young couple were unattended. The bride looked charming in a gown of cream silk eolienne, over silk. At the conclusion of the ceremony a dainty wedding breakfast was served. The popularity of the bride and groom was amply evidenced by the large number of beautiful and useful wedding presents received, among them being a handsome carving set, from Mr. Don. G. Bleecker, Mr. Doolittle's employer, and a granite shower from the girls of Miss Irwin's millinery parlors, where for some time Miss Riggs had been employed. The happy couple left on the "flyer" for a visit to Toronto, Buffalo and Niagara Falls. The bride's going away dress was a travelling suit of navy blue ladies' cloth. Many friends will wish Mr. and Mrs. Doolittle much happiness in their married life.

Former Residents Robbed in Detroit

Former residents of this city, namely, Messrs. Philip Woodley and Charles Meyers, who now live in Detroit, had rather an unpleasant experience recently. We are told that the two families live in the same flat, and, during their absence, burglars broke in and ransacked the premises. Both families suffered, the thieves taking many articles of value, among them several of Mr. and Mrs. Woodley's wedding presents. One of the burglars put on a brand new suit of Mr. Woodley's and went away in it, leaving his own—much the worse for wear—in its place. One of the ladies is mourning the loss of a perfectly new and expensive fur coat. There was, we are told, no clue to the thieves.

CHEAP POWER SOURCES

Opportunities in Lake Huron and Georgian Bay Districts.

Hydro-Electric Commission Locates Numerous Places For the Development of Cheap Power For the People—Five Have Appeared to Be Worthy of Serious Consideration—Estimate of Cost Made by Test.

Toronto, Sept. 24.—The third report of the Hydro-Electric Commission deals with the Lake Huron and Georgian Bay districts. The province is divided into eight divisions, and the two reports and the first and second reports dealt with the Niagara and the Trent Valley districts, respectively.

In the Georgian Bay and Lake Huron districts the Commission report the demand for power at over 16,000 horse-power.

A careful study has been made of the present probable demands for electric power in relation to possible water-power developments capable of supplying these demands, and five developments have appeared to be worthy of serious consideration, namely:

Maitland River Development.

(1) Some four miles east of Goderich on the Maitland River at the Ox Bow a development of 80 feet head can be obtained by the construction of a rather expensive dam, which will provide storage sufficient to take care of any reasonable daily peak load within the limit of the temporary overload capacity.

Saugeen River Development.

(2) At Southampton there is at present a small development made by the Saugeen Light & Power Co. under 13 feet head, amounting to some 200 horse-power, and it is proposed to construct a dam below the Indian Reserve creating a development under 40 feet head, which would drown out the present one above mentioned.

Beaver River (Eugenia Falls).

(3) The development proposed at this point, as an independent plant, would probably be for about 1,000 horse-power, which is the estimated 24-hour low-water capacity, but by combining this development with that on the Severn River, about to be described, it is feasible to instal at Eugenia Falls an equipment of 2,267 horse-power, with a spare unit of 1,133 added. By this combination, making use of storage capacity, which can easily be created, the above installation can be employed for carrying all the excess of total load in the district dependent on these two plants above 4,000 horse-power, continuous power to be drawn from the Severn River development. It will readily be seen that this will reduce operating expenses for the combined system by allowing complete shutting down of this plant for at least twelve hours per day and over Sunday.

Severn River (Big Chute).

(4) A development at this point will be less expensive than ordinarily, owing to the small investment necessary for head works and canal. Although the power available during an occasional low water period may fall slightly below 4,000 horse-power, the amount can be safely depended upon during ordinary years, and the estimates are for works of this capacity, with the usual reserve unit.

(5) On the South River a small development has been estimated on, for the supply of the industrial demands of North Bay, which might also furnish lighting current for Powassan and Callander.

Undeveloped Locations.

Among the possible undeveloped locations are mentioned the Maitland River, Eugenia Falls, the Big Chute of the Severn River, the Sturgeon River and Falls, the Moon, Muskoka, Magnetawan, French and Wahnapitae Rivers.

An estimate of cost of development has been made by a test at Collingwood, and the saving on the present steam operation noted. The capital cost is illustrated by undertakings now operating at Sudbury, $120,000; Bracebridge, $75,500; Orillia, $250,000.

No Healey Falls Leases.

"It is imperative," says the report, "that the waters of the Severn, Muskoka and other rivers not yet leased by the crown be retained for the use of the many municipalities which must, for all time, depend on these sources for whatever electrical energy they may obtain from water power be granted in the future, such lease should specify the rates at which the Hydro-Electric Power Commission may obtain electric power in a condition and quantity at the generating points ready for transmission, or at the points of delivery in the various municipalities."

Estimates.

From the Maitland River for Goderich, full load, 625 h. p., $16.44; three-quarters load, 468 h. p., $18.75, and half load, 312 h. p., $26.04.

For Clinton—Full load, 250 h. p., $22.08; three-quarter load, 187 h. p., $25.68; half load, 125 p. m., $36.18.

For Seaforth—Full load, 437 h. p., $21.03; three-quarter load, 328 h. p., $25.43; half load, 219 h. p., $33.10.

For Mitchell—Full load, 250 h. p., $26.47; three-quarter load, 187 h. p., $31.16; half load, 125 h. p., $44.68.

Owen Sound—Full load, 2,500 h. p., $20.22; three-quarter load, 1,875 h. p., $21.55; half load, 1,250 h. p., $26.90.

Meaford—Full load, 333 h. p., $21; three-quarter load, 250 h. p., $22.39; half load, 167 h. p., $25.36.

Barrie—Full load, 625 h. p., $25.27; three-quarter load, 469 h. p., $23.18; half load, 312 h. p., $34.23.

Midland and Penetang—Full load, 1,067 h. p., $17.99; three-quarter load, 800 h. p., $18.67; half load, 533 h. p., $20.47.

Victoria Harbor—Full load, 400 h. p., $18.03; three-quarter load, 300 h. p., $19.43; half load, 200 h. p., $21.21.

Waubaushene and Coldwater—Full load, 200 h. p., $21.07; three-quarter load, 150 h. p., $22.31; half load, 100 h. p., $24.33.

Total Annual Charges.

The total annual charges on the Maitland River generating plant, including step-up transformer station, are divided as follows: Goderich, 692 h. p., low-tension power, $9,298, or $13.44 per h. p. per annum; Clinton, Seaforth and Mitchell, 990 h. p., high-tension power, $14,876, or $15.03 per h. p. per annum.

The charges on the Saugeen River generating and step-up transforming plant are assessed as follows:

Southampton and Elgin, 450 h. p., low-tension power, $7,080, or $15.71, per h. p. per annum.

Shallow Lake, 770 h. p., high-tension power, $14,238, or $18.49 per h. p.

Capital Cost of Power.

The estimated capital cost of power development is:

Maitland River	1,600 h.p.	$325,000
Saugeen River	1,333 "	250,000
Beaver River (Eugenia Falls)	2,267 "	291,000
Severn River (Big Chute)	4,000 "	350,000
South River	750 "	115,000

Do Your Meals Fit?

DO YOU FEEL SNUG AND COMFORTABLE AROUND YOUR WAIST LINE AFTER A HEARTY MEAL?

Did your last meal taste deliciously good to you, and did you eat all you wanted? Could you have patted your rotundity in glee and felt proud of your appetite and of your good, strong stomach? Do you feel rosy now because your last meal gave you no inconvenience whatever? If not, you have dyspepsia, in some form, and probably never realized it.

If you have the least trouble in your stomach after eating, no matter how little or how much you eat, there is trouble brewing and you must correct it at once.

Most all stomach troubles come from poor, weak, scanty gastric juice, that precious liquid which ought to turn your food into rich, red blood.

If you have nausea, your gastric juice is weak. If you have sour risings or belchings, your food is fermenting; your gastric juice is weak. If you have loss of appetite, your gastric juice is weak. If you have a bloaty feeling of aversion to food your gastric juice is weak.

You need something in your stomach to supply the gastric juice which is scanty, and to give power to the weak gastric juice. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do this very thing.

Now think—one grain of one of the ingredients of these wonderful little tablets digests 3,000 grains of food. They are several times more powerful than the gastric juice in a good, strong, powerful stomach. They actually digest your food for you. Besides, they increase the flow of gastric juice, just what you need to get all the good possible out of everything you eat. You will never have that "lump of lead" in your stomach, nor any other stomach trouble after taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Then everything you eat will be digested, it will give you strength, vim, energy and a rosy disposition. You'll feel good all around your waist line after every meal and it will make you feel good all over.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will make you feel happy after eating a good, hearty meal. Take one or two after eating. You'll feel fine—then your meals will fit, no matter what or when you eat.

We want to send you a sample package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets free of charge, so you can test them yourself and be convinced. After you have tried the sample, you will be so satisfied that you will go to the nearest drug store and get a 50c box.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 52 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

JEWELRY STORE LOOTED.

Burglars Make a $1,500 Haul At Durham, Ontario.

Durham, Sept. 24.—Saturday morning Webster's jewelry store was looted by burglars. Over $700 worth of diamonds, 100 watches that were left for repair, other watches, bracelets, brooches and trinkets were stolen.

The loss will amount to about $1,500.

The Attorney-General's department has been notified.

The diamonds were purchased from Ellis & Co. of Toronto.

Webster has offered a reward of $100.

Handbook Man Fined $100.

Toronto, Sept. 24.—Frederick Barrows, barber at 920 West Queen street, pleaded guilty to conducting a common betting house, before Judge Winchester Saturday, and was fined $100 and required to give a bond for future behavior.

LIKE A PEACE IN CUBA

But Whether Inside or Outside United States Is Uncertain.

"Business Interests" Openly Favor Intervention and Annexation, But Secretary Taft Is Disposed to Give the Government Party and Insurgents Another Chance and a Meeting to That End Will Be Held.

Havana, Sept. 4.—All classes are now waiting for the conditions under which tranquility will be restored in Cuba, and keen disappointment is expressed on every side because of the likelihood of peace being brought about with armed American intervention.

That differences of the opposing factions could be reconciled was not believed to be possible until yesterday, when it was announced that the Liberals and the insurgents had empowered a committee to represent them before the American mediators.

It is evident that business interests of the island have no confidence in the ability of the Cubans to rule themselves and now, when it appears too late, they are openly favoring forcible intervention and possibly annexation.

Secretary Taft's View.

Secretary of War Taft is cognizant of this general opinion that peace cannot last unless it is enforced by an American army, but he considers that it is the duty of the United States to give the republic another chance, and he believes that it would be bad policy for the United States to keep a force in Cuba longer than was required to supervise the laying down of arms. He said yesterday that if the Liberals and Moderates harmonize their differences the United States must regard the compact as made in good faith.

That peace will come as the result of the mediation of the United States is now believed by Cubans, regardless of party affiliation, but whether it will be on terms which will insure permanent tranquility is questioned.

Secretary Taft and Assistant Secretary of State Bacon spent Sunday quietly, receiving few persons. Senator Alfredo Zavas met the mediators at the American legation and arranged for their first meeting with the insurgents and Liberals' committee this morning.

Will Attack All Property.

New Orleans, Sept. 24.—A despatch from Havana to The Picayune gives a signed statement by the insurgent leader, Gen. Ernesto Asbert, in which he says that if peace is not made by the Palma administration, the revolutionists propose to "attack all property" in order to precipitate intervention.

HEPBURN RESIGNS.

Liberals In East Elgin Swap Horses While Crossing Stream.

Aylmer, Sept. 24.—W. F. Hepburn, Liberal candidate for the vacancy in the House of Commons for East Elgin, caused by the resignation of A. B. Ingram, has dropped out of the contest.

At a meeting of the executive of the party here on Saturday night, Granville Haight, a retired farmer of Sparta, was chosen to carry the Government standard, and a convention will be held on Thursday to ratify the selection. Mr. Haight has agreed to run.

The dropping out of Mr. Hepburn has utterly demoralized the Liberals, and the feeling is that their chances, never bright, are about gone.

The campaign has been in full swing for more than a week, and several meetings have been addressed by Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Hon. C. S. Hyman and some of the local stumpers.

STRIKE AT COAL CREEK.

800 Miners Refuse to Work Chief Crow's Nest Colliery.

Fernie, B. C., Sept. 24.—Saturday morning the mines at Coal Creek, the chief colliery of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., were closed, as no men applied for work. This action was agreed upon at a meeting of the Fernie Miners' Union last night and is the result of a notice posted in conspicuous places some days ago, which read as follows: "Acting under instructions of President Mitchell, we hereby give all non-union miners notice that seven days after this date we will cease to work with non-union miners."

General Manager Lindsay, in a signed statement, claims that the strike violates a union agreement.

RACE RIOT IN ATLANTA.

Sixteen Negroes Dead—The Militia In Control of Streets.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 24.—In a riot arising out of assaults on white women, sixteen negroes and one white man were killed Saturday night.

The riot occurred on Decatur street, a street especially frequented by negroes. Many of the killed were pulled off street cars and beaten to death.

The force of militia on duty is something more than 1,600 men, besides a battery of light artillery held in reserve.

Seat For C. R. Devlin.

Ottawa, Sept. 24.—One of the topics of discussion here is the constituency which will be given to Chas. R. Devlin, the late member for Galway, who has forwarded his resignation to the Speaker of the British House of Commons. It is expected that he will go to St. Anne's, Montreal, Dan Gallery's old seat. Fresh from the Emerald Isle, Mr. Devlin might be expected to carry the seat.

Damage by Lightning.

Brockville, Sept. 24.—One of the fiercest electric storms in the history of Brockville broke between 7 and 8 o'clock Saturday evening. Two of the public schools, Trinity Church and the residence of Edward Fitzpatrick were damaged by lightning. The occupants of the Fitzpatrick house had a narrow escape.

Earl Grey Has an Adventure.

Victoria, B. C., Sept. 24.—Advices from Alert says Lieut.-Governor Dunsmuir's yacht, with Earl Grey aboard, is stranded high and dry at that point. Earl Grey and party were taken off in a launch and sent on board the steamer Oldra, on which Lady Grey is traveling.

FUSILADE AT PREFECT.

Self, Wife and Two Guards Are Shot by Terrorists.

Tambov, Russia, Sept. 25.—Prefect of Police Tomushan of Borissogliebsk, the home of Mlle. Marie Spiridonovo, who shot and killed Chief of the Secret Police Luzhenoffsky, was fired at and seriously wounded in a street here yesterday by terrorists, who also shot the prefect's wife and two guards, who were accompanying them. The would-be assassins escaped.

M. P.'s Expelled.

Kursk, Russia, Sept. 25.—At an extraordinary meeting yesterday of the marshals of the nobility it was decided by a vote of 93 to 3 to expel from the ranks of the nobility the three members of the late Parliament, including Prince Peter Dolgoroukoff, vice-president of the lower House, who signed the Viborg manifesto.

ANOTHER TOWN FIRE SWEPT.

Several Houses in Carp, Ottawa District, Reduced to Ashes.

Ottawa, Sept. 25.—Scarcely a day has passed recently but some town in this district has had a scorching.

The record for the past few days has been Shawville, Almonte, Wales and, yesterday, Carp, Carleton County, had a $6,000 blaze.

It started in the stable of E. G. Hughes, and the places destroyed are Cornwall House, Bank of Ottawa, Breadner's tailor shop and Andrews' undertaking and hardware store and residence, Younghusband's grocery, James Little's house, E. G. Hughes' house and stables.

Boy Accidentally Shot.

Hamilton, Sept. 25.—Percy Bessey, son of Vernon Bessey, the restaurant man, is lying in the City Hospital seriously wounded. He is only seven years of age and he was accidentally shot by Norman Freeman, a boy of 11 years of age. The mishap happened on the mountain last evening not far from the asylum. Freemam's story is that Bessey bought the revolver, a 22 calibre affair, yesterday. They were playing with it and Freeman pointed it at Bessey. He says that he did not pull the trigger and that the revolver went off of its own accord. The bullet entered Bessey's breast, just above the stomach and went right through the body. The doctors have little hope of his recovery.

Stole 50,000 Pounds of Copper.

Windsor, Sept. 25.—David Cose, alias Wolferd, arrested here, waived extradition, and was taken to Cleveland by detectives from that city, who had been working for several months on the constant loss of copper ore shipped from Montana and Utah to Washington to be purified. The total amount stolen in transit is about 50,000 pounds, worth over $10,000. Cose's alleged partner, a man named Herskovitz, is already under arrest at Cleveland.

I. O. F. Renders Generous Aid to Acquiring Syndicate.

Dr. Oronhyatekha Ends His Story, and Supreme Councillor Stevenson Outlines the Many Twists and Turns Taken in Securing Northwest Lands—Hon. Geo. E. Foster Refuses to Give Up Stock, But the Information Was Adduced Without It.

Toronto, Sept. 25.—When the Insurance Commission opened yesterday, with Dr. Oronhyatekha in the witness box, Mr. Shepley took up the asset of $20,000 held by the I. O. F. under the head of provincial. He claimed that this should be held by the Union Trust, but witness could give no further information than he had already given as the matter had been turned over by him to Messrs. Laidlaw and McGillivray. Questioned on the purchase of certain C. P. R. subsidy lands in connection with the Great West Land Co., he knew that the I. O. F. had loaned the company money, but that he had received no personal profit out of the transaction whatever. The interested parties were Messrs. Foster, Wilson and McGillivray. One hundred shares of Great West Land Co. in his name he had reconveyed to the order, but by mistake it had gotten into the hands of the syndicate. He knew nothing of another deal concerning 237 1-2 shares. About $958,000 of Union Trust funds were put up for the syndicate.

"It seems a pity that you were not looking after the Union Trust Co., too," observed Mr. Shepley.

"If I had been," said the S. C. R., "some things which were done might not have been done."

"Then you would not have approved of the handing over of corporation funds for private speculation?"

"No, I don't think I would?"

"What other transaction had you in mind," asked Mr. Shepley, "when you said that some would not have gone through if you had been in direct charge of the Union Trust?"

"I don't see any objection to saying this: The directors had given certain orders not to do certain things, and I understood Mr. Foster had done them, in disobedience of orders."

"You have in mind the particular matter of matters as to which there was a breach of instructions?"

"Yes. It was buying stock which was non-dividend-bearing. I had very decided opinions in the matter, and had had orders given by the directors not to buy non-dividend-bearing stocks, and I understand that Mr. Foster did buy. I didn't like it."

"What stocks have you in mind?"

"Some railway stock. I don't know what. The reason I was hesitating was that Mr. Foster in a sense did perfectly right in buying them."

Various Land Deals.

The Supreme Chief Ranger's examination was concluded, and Hon. E. G. Stevenson of Detroit, supreme councillor, and the man who handles the legal business of the I. O. F. in the United States was called to the stand. Matters connected with the Union Trust were discussed.

"It was stated," said Mr. Stevenson, "that there was a proposition, involving Quebec timber. Three or four men were to take over 49 per cent. of the transaction, the Union Trust to advance the money on their covenants, and we four, Foster, McGillivray, Wilson and myself were to borrow the 51 per cent. also from the Union Trust. I said that I had no such funds, and I demurred at borrowing from the Trust company, on the ground that we were trustees. Then the proposition dropped."

Mr. Shepley went on to ask what the witness had to do with the second transfer. He explained, in reply, that when Dr. Oronhyatekha departed for India, in October last year, the expectation was to have lands turned over to the Settlers' Land Co. The Montague lands were part of the 123,000 acres which finally found their way into the Northwest Settlers' Land Co. After the doctor's departure, there was considerable agitation against subsidiary companies. Witness had reported that the Foresters might be laying themselves open to suspicion. A syndicate was formed, consisting of Messrs. (Dr.) Montague, Kitchen, Jackson, Gauld, Biggar and John Montague. They were to purchase the lands at $6.75 an acre, and to bear all the expense, giving their notes for $10,000. They went on, and became the Settlers' Land Co. The Union Trust subscriptions were cancelled, and they became subscribers to $100,000, provided by the trust lending them $100,000 on their note, secured by their stock.

The final result was a net profit of $118,000 for the Union Trust.

Too Many Eggs.

The original intention of the Northwest purchases was to assist members of the order to get a fair start there, with a chance to finally buy. "That," said the witness, "had to be abandoned when we took the back track."

"When you awoke to your land policy in the Northwest, what were your interests there?"

"Four hundred thousand acres, ultimately involving two million dollars."

"How did that strike you as the policy of a trust company?"

"I thought it was too many eggs in one basket."

The witness was asked about the Northwest Land Co., of which he was aware first in 1904. He told of an intricate deal to which objection was finally taken, as he felt that money advanced by the Union Trust was not sufficiently secured. In the fall of 1905 stock taken by the Union Trust Co. was cancelled, and retired, and a mortgage made covering advances made, and those subsequently required, thus giving the trust a first claim.

Mr. Stevenson gave further evidence. "Pope and Fowler," he said, "had a contract right to purchase 200,000 acres in the west at $3.50 per acre. They turned that over to a syndicate on a $4.50 basis."

"The syndicate being Foster, McGillivray, and Wilson?"

"Yes."

Increase in Values.

"This syndicate, in turning the property over to the Great West, added another fifty cents on the acre. For their $200,000 profit Pope and Fowler, or whoever they represented, got $150,000 cash and $50,000 Great West Land Co. stock. When the fifty cents extra was allowed the syndicate, they got $55,000 stock instead of $50,000. That left $95,000 representing the increased price. Of that 237 1-2 shares were transferred to the company and 100 to Dr. Oronhyatekha. I understood it to be the bonus of the Union Trust Co. for undertaking the transaction. They got their money back, interest and profit, in the ratio of 337 1-2 to 1,500 for financing it."

"When the transaction took the form of a mortgage, what happened?"

"It was turned back to the syndicate. I am down on the minutes as fathering the resolution. I don't accuse anyone of falsifying anything, but if I made such a resolution, I never intended it."

"Then Messrs. Foster, McGillivray

The Power Question

The hypocritical attitude of the Toronto Globe and Star on the power question is thoroughly understood by the general public. These journals, at the bidding of the interests, of which they have always been the servile tools, are seeking to defeat the movement for cheap power by endeavoring to discredit the men charged with its accomplishment. The Premier and his colleagues appreciate the situation, as the following statement from Mr. Whitney indicates;

"The statement in yesterday's newspapers, as having been made by me, respecting the Healey's Falls matter, does not fully express the facts or my meaning. A proper understanding of the power and duties of the Hydro-Electric Commission, which can be acquired by anybody, who chooses to read the Statutes, would prevent anything like the suggestion that the Commission is, or can be, ignored by the Government. The Hydro-Electric Commission, is, in fact, a sub-committee of the Cabinet, with an engineer added, for the purpose of making the work of the Cabinet easier. The Act makes it clear that all the powers given to the Commission are subject to and the subject of Cabinet control

"A glance at the Act makes it clear that the result would be the same whether the Commission were given the control of rates or the Cabinet given such control, and in no case could the Government give control to any body or commission and escape responsibility.

"At a later period I may have something to say with regard to the efforts being made by means of letters paid for as advertisements, but with any intimation of being advertisements carefully suppressed, which have appeared in a number of newspapers. I wonder what the people of this Province will say when the proofs are laid before them that newspaper which in their editorial columns denounce the Government for the alleged abandonment of its policy in the interests of the power companies, in another column publish statements for which they are paid, made in the interests of electrical companies, denouncing the Government for exactly opposite reasons to those given in the editorial denunciation.

"The Government will proceed with its expressed determination to see to it that the municipalities and other consumers of power should receive power at reasonable rates. The powers of expropriation and operation, as given in the Act, will be relied on by the Government as a means, in default of others, of carrying out the intentions of the Act.

"Time will show whether those interested in preventing the consumers from receiving power at reasonable rates will fare any better for the present newspaper campaign, which, were the subject not so serious, would be ludicrous in the extreme."

Mr. Fall's statement is substantiated by old residents, who claim that in the past ten years fifty or more new islands have appeared in different places along the river, and all agree as to the cause as stated by Mr. Fall. BELLEVILLE MAN AGAIN IN TROUBLE

ONLY RELEASED FROM CENTRAL LAST WEEK, ARRESTED FOR TRESPASS.

Toronto, Sept. 25. — Edward Wardhaugh, who hails from Belleville, one week ago released from the Central Prison, was caught in an up-stair room of Mr. J. Sullivan's house, at 201 Berkeley street last night, and arrested on a charge of trespass. Shortly after seven o'clock a young son of Mr. Sullivan's heard a noise of drawers being opened and shut in a bedroom and going to the door he saw a strange man in the room. He closed the door and locked it and the police were sent for. P. C. Wallace took the intruder over to the Wilton Avenue Police station. He refused to tell his reason for being in the house.

Wardhaugh has been living at 218 King St. east, and recently completed a six-months' prison term for theft of a trunk, which he took from a house across the street and rifled of its contents.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE GINGERBREAD MAN" TO-NIGHT.

Although the management of "The Gingerbread Man," a farcical musical fairyesque, which will be seen at the Carman to-night, does not advertise an "all-star" cast, it might do so with far more reason than many of the managers who lure the public to shop-worn plays with this fetching phrase. Certainly it is apparent from a casual glance at the personnel of "The Gingerbread Man's" cast that it has the best collection of singers and musical comedians that has come out of New York for some little time. The principals of "The Gingerbread Man" include Brooks Howe, Mattie, Keen, Will Donnelly and George H. Palmer. The girls who compose the ensemble of "The Gingerbread Man" are so attractive that a New York dramatic writer conferred upon them the apt title, "The American Beauty Chorus."

What Part?

What particular part of the nerve-centres should we expect to have the greatest influence in affecting and controlling the general nervous system?

Reasonably it would be the largest and most sensitive. Well now, of all the centres in the nervous system, the largest most delicate sense, the sense most constantly in use, the largest brain "gray-matter" area is that of SIGHT.

For an average of 16 hours daily continuously, the feeling in the visual centres is constant. No other sense in the nerve centres is capable of such continued endurance. With the proper glasses this severe drain upon the brain and nerves is prevented from causing a breakdown in the general health.

MAXIM'S MAXIM.

Modest Claims Often Carry More Conviction Than Loud Boasts.

When Maxim, the famous inventor, placed his gun before a committee of judges, he stated its carrying power to be considerably below what he felt sure the gun would accomplish. The result of the trial was therefore a triumph of surprise instead of disappointment as it might have been if he had overestimated his gun's efficiency.

"China and Her Needs."

The Epworth League of Bridge St. Church held a meeting of special interest last evening. The large audience present had the pleasure of listening to an address on "China and Her Needs," by Mrs. Host, of the China Inland Mission. As Mrs. Host talked of the great work yet to be done, those present felt a deeper interest kindled in them for all mission fields, but especially for China and her millions. The interest in the League has been wonderfully well sustained, notwithstanding the great heat of the past summer. The average attendance has numbered seventy, and now, as fall approaches, the members look for even more satisfactory results under the leadership of their energetic President, Mr. G. F. Stewart.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining or the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Frank Blaine Was Honored Unto Death.

FUNERAL WAS LARGELY ATTENDED—MANY PRESENT FROM THIS CITY—FINE FLORAL TRIBUTES.

(Brockville Times.)

Brockville's former citizen, the late Frank Blaine, who was accidentally killed at his post of duty on a G.T.R. passenger train near Napanee early Friday morning, was shown a high mark of popular regard in the large and representative attendance at the funeral held yesterday afternoon at 3.15 from the residence of his brother-in-law, John Flannigan, Bartholomew street. Citizens of all classes turned out en masse to honor the memory of the brave engineer, who sacrificed his life to save others. It was not surprising that such an act of heroism would call forth such an outward expression of widespread condolence. The house was thronged with sympathizers, while outside the street was lined with carriages and pedestrians. The face of the dead engineer showed traces of the terrible injuries inflicted, and though somewhat disfigured, was gazed upon by many. The casket was surrounded by a wealth of floral tributes, among which were the following:

Disc., O.R.C.: Cross, Frank, Minnie, E., and Sarah Flannigan; wreath, General Car Account staff, G.T.R., Montreal; spray, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. E. McGlade; spray, Mrs. Ashton and Ross Ashton; spray, Mrs. W. Nicholson and Mrs. T. Kehoe; bleeding hearts, Ladies' Auxiliary, 269, B.L.E.; broken wheel, Marnell family, Point St. Charles, Montreal; wreath, B.L.E., Brockville, Div. No. 118; wreath, B.L.E., Belleville, Div. No. 189; spray, Ladies' Auxiliary, B. L. E., Kingston; wreath, B. L. F., Island City Lodge, No. 69; spray, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Kehoe; spray, Mr. and Miss H. N. Patterson; cross, Misses Annie and Mae Sauve; spray, Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Kerr; spray, James Markey; cross, local and foreign staff, G.T.R. offices, Montreal; bouquet, Jessie Tieo, wreath, D. Hillman; spray, J. Clough; pedestal cross, B.R.T.

A large body of representatives of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and the Order of Railway Telegraphers, headed the mournful procession. In addition to the Brockville railroaders many other railroaders were present from Belleville, Montreal, Smith's Falls and Ottawa. Among the number was W. Adamson, T. Daley, C. Orrill, D. Young, E. Taylor, T. Gorman, E. Brown, C. Pratt, H. Flagler, T. Munley, H. Macarow, Belleville; R. Willoughby and B. J. Chapman, Ottawa; J. Bechair, K.-E. Hay, L. Bourdon, Montreal.

The chief mourners were the widow, Mrs. Blaine, and three daughters; George and Wm. Blaine, John Flanigan, Miss Minnie Flanigan, Frank Flanigan, Mr. and Mrs. John Reid, Brockville; E. Miron, Belleville; Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hussey, Miss Mary Hussey, Ottawa; Mr. and Mrs. S. Duff, John Phillips, sr., Robert, Frank and James Hill, Mrs. J. Simpson, Jack Simpson, James Phillips, John Phillips, jr., Miss Maggie Hill, Smith's Falls.

The pall-bearers were chosen from the Belleville and Brockville divisions of the B. of L. E., and were as follows: W. Logue, W. Gorton, J. Muir, Belleville; E. Mortimer, J. Barnhardt, Robt Wardrobe, Brockville.

A long line of carriages followed the remains to St. Francis Xavier Church, where a short but impressive service was conducted by Rev. Dean Murray in the presence of a large congregation. Afterwards the cortege proceeded to the cemetery and there the body was tenderly laid to rest in the vault, interment being postponed until the arrival of the daughter and son of the deceased, Mrs. Bitney and Frank Blaine, jr., from Winnipeg, who are expected this afternoon. The services in the vault were in charge of Rev. Father Traynor.

Among the mourners will be noticed the name of Edward Miron. This is the young fireman, the mate of Mr. Blaine in the cab of the passenger locomotive at the time of the accident, who owes his life to the warning given by the deceased, who told him to jump as the engines were about to collide. Miron feels the loss of his mate keenly and is still greatly unnerved from the effects of his terrible experience. He says he landed fairly between the rails of the westbound track and it seemed as if his knees were knocked off after he struck the ties. He never lost consciousness, however, and was able to move around after regaining his feet.

THE INQUEST.

The inquest, which was opened at Napanee, Friday morning, will be resumed this evening at 7.30, when the evidence of the train crews and others will be taken. The investigation into the cause of the accident will be a searching one.

THE LAST RITES

MRS. CHARLES CORBY.

The remains of the late Mrs. Charles Corby, who died at East Orange, N.J., arrived here last evening at 6 o'clock and were taken to the residence of Mr. D. M. Waters, Alexander street. This afternoon the funeral was held, and was largely attended. Services were held at the house, conducted by Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, Rector of St. Thomas' Church. The interment took place at the Belleville cemetery. The bearers were relatives of the deceased, namely, Messrs. C. W. Pole, H. P. Thomas, H. Thompson, D. M. Waters, S. E. Carman and Dr. MacColl. Many beautiful floral designs were placed upon the casket by friends.

MR. JOHN McFEE.

The funeral of the late Mr. John McFee took place yesterday afternoon from the family residence, George street. Deceased was a veteran and the Veterans' Association was largely represented, the party being in command of Captain F. M. Clarke. Rev. R. M. Pope conducted the services at the house and grave. A number of beautiful floral tributes were sent by friends. The bearers were Messrs. H. Walker, C. M. Stork, J. Williams, S.S. Lazier, C. Bogart and R. G. Sills.

UNEQUALLED SERVICE.

In all the world over, among all the railways of all nations, there is one line whose service stands pre-eminent—The Lake Shore Railway. Luxurious comfort, speed, safety, punctuality, personal attention and service, have here reached their highest development. Lake Shore trains run on time and when connections are to be made the schedule is so arranged that long waits and delays are avoided. In a word, here is a railway whose service in every respect leaves nothing to be desired. Travellers of experience know this to be so and all are careful to see that their tickets read "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." You can obtain full information by addressing J. W. Why Orange Meat Is a Food.

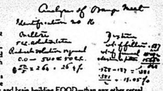
Over 44% of Orange Meat is wheat sugars.

Wheat sugars are food—that turns into good red blood and sturdy muscle—health and strength.

Orange Meat contains MORE wheat sugars, more phosphorus, more actual body and brain building FOOD—than any other cereal.



Analysis of Orange Meat

ORANGE MEAT

is sold by all grocers at 15c. and 25c. a package. 25c. package contains 2½ times as much as smaller size. Every 15c. package contains a coupon, good for premiums. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston," for new premium catalogue.

The Pandora Thermometer

The thermometer on the Pandora range oven means precisely in accuracy to the cook what the square and compass mean to the draftsman. Without the square and compass the draftsman would have to work entirely by guess, just as you do without an accurate and reliable thermometer on your oven.

The Pandora thermometer reduces cooking to an exact science. You know precisely how much heat you have and what it will do in a given time. It is one of the small things which makes the Pandora so much different and better than common ranges.

It happened in old Babylon (or Memphis or Gomorrah),
It doesn't matter very much, some "City of the Plain";
It happened on some "yesterday," "to-day," or yet "to-morrow";
Well, anyway, it happened, and it may occur again.

What happened? Oh, why anything—a murder like as not,
Or an "investigation" of the 'Shiner Mutual Life,"
Or a controversy, maybe, 'twixt kettle and the pot,
Or El-Dubh-Hadji ran away with Abdul Titewad's wife.

And the fact was duly printed in the Cuneiform Gazette
(A very brisk decennial, engraved on granite blocks),
Which always scooped its rivals; its editor, Cnuph Pset,
Kept the old town "jumping sideways" with his periodic rocks.

Cnuph Tset oft fulminated on the "City's Lasting Shame."
And "Big Cinches" to suppress him often vainly tried;
Somebody "sued the paper" for damaging his fame;
The people loved and hated, fought, stole, got married, died.

These things and others happened, in that lively ancient time;
"Important facts" were published, more important ones left out;
Some one invented clothespins, another wrote a rhyme;
Their "names would be immortal," their friends said, "without doubt."

How we've advanced since that time, 4,000 years ago!
We're railroads, telegraphs and phones; the "daily" gossip mill;
But it seems in certain aspects our progress has been slow—
We have the same old passions and the same delusions still.

—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, the British Labor member of Parliament, who is visiting Canada, writes to the London Chronicle that if decay and ruin befell the Empire, the French-Canadian would be the last man fighting in the last ditch for a British Canada. Quebec's loyalty, he thinks, is beyond question.

Rev. Dr. Kelley, who brought the greetings of the United States Methodists to the Methodist General Conference at Montreal, is, for a calm man, vigorous in denunciation. At a meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade, held recently at Amherst, N. S., a resolution was carried to the effect that as it was of the first importance to the maritime interests of Canada that she should secure and hold a place in transportation by sea; therefore, to revive the fast-declining shipping industry, it was desirable to promote Canadian ship-owning under the new conditions now prevailing. It was therefore urged that the Dominion Government should pass a Ship Subsidy Bill for the promotion of sea-going owned tonnage.

FIGHTING THE SEA.

Holland's Continuous Performance in Preventing Floods.

Holland is a country of wooden piles and dikes, for the people are perpetually fighting against the encroachments of water. One building in Amsterdam rests on no fewer than 13,659 piles, though the dikes around the town, which have been erected at enormous expense, effectually prevent any chance of a flood. The streets of the flourishing port of Rotterdam even are frequently under water in the winter, and in some parts of south Holland the people are compelled to do their shopping in boats.

When the Zuyder Zee breaks on to the land, those who wade up to their knees along the streets of a flooded village meet all manner of fish. This is explained by the fact that the Zuyder Zee, with its mud bottom, is literally crammed with finny tribes; and one authority states that if it were well scraped of all its fish one year, it would be full again the next.

The land of Holland is really of four distinct levels, and from ten to twelve feet between the highest and the lowest. To make the land dry, the water is pumped from the lowest level to the one immediately above it, and so on, until the water has been returned again to the sea. A large number of engineers are specially engaged to look after the dikes, and no less a sum than $2,500,000 is expended every year in keeping these fortifications against the sea in proper repair.

SOFT CRABS.

After Shedding the New Shells Harden With Great Rapidity.

The supply of soft crabs for market is obtained by catching hard crabs and keeping them until they shed their shells. For this purpose large rectangular floats, made of laths and planking, are employed, and three or four times every day the stock on hand is carefully inspected, all the soft crabs being picked out and packed without delay. They are put into shallow boxes of moist seaweed, from ten to thirty-five dozen in a box, according to the size of the animals. When the packing is done carefully the occupants may be kept alive from sixty to seventy hours after leaving the water.

Crabs have been shipped all the way from the Chesapeake to Canada, arriving at their destination in good condition. In summer, of course, ice is used.

But where soft crabs are concerned it is necessary that they shall reach the market quickly, because their new shells harden with great rapidity. At the end of twelve hours the shells are like parchment, and in three or four days the crab is as hard as ever—hence unfit for use in the form most highly approved by epicures.

Nautical Etiquette

They were on their honeymoon. He had bought a catboat and had taken her out to show her how well he could handle a boat, putting her to tend the sheet. A puff of wind came, and he shouted in no uncertain tones, "Let go the sheet." No response. Then again, "Let go that sheet, quick." Still no movement. A few minutes after, when both were clinging to the bottom of the overturned boat, he said:

"Why didn't you let go that sheet when I told you to, dear?"

"I would have," said the bride, "if you had not been so rough about it. You ought to speak more kindly to your wife."

Long and Short Days.

At Hamburg, Germany, the longest day occupies seventeen hours and the shortest seven. At Stockholm, in Sweden, the longest has eighteen and a half hours and the shortest five and a half. At St. Petersburg the longest has nineteen and the shortest five hours. In Finland the longest has twenty-one and a half hours. In the northernmost parts of Norway the longest day lasts from May 21 to July 2, the sun not sinking below the horizan during this period, but skimming along very close to it in the north. At Spitbergen the longest day lasts three months and a half.

The Word "Privilege."

"Privilege," seen so often of late in the phrase "special privilege," has been used commonly to signify a right, immunity or benefit enjoyed by a person beyond the common advantages of other individuals. Primarily, however, the word signifies an ordinance in favor of an individual, and this is in keeping with its derivation—"privus," one's own, private, and "lex," law. It is in this old sense that Chaucer uses the word.

How to Arrive.

Man has to be humbugged if one would command him, and he has no use for the humble person. The way to get into a publisher's or editor's office (or indeed any other with a man at the head of it) is with a tremendous show of bounce and swagger.—A Spinster in M. A. P.

Dog Days and Rabies.

There is not the remotest connection between dog days and rabies; indeed, the records show that the fewest cases of rabies occur in July and August. There are more cases in April, November and December than in any other months.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

sunken rocks, and noted in all possible ways; and the P. & O. lifeboat was hoisted on the Duncansby's davits. The Portuguese were driven down into the stokehold to represent double watches of a dozen men and make the requisite steam; McTodd fingered the rusted engines like an artist; and Kettle took his stand alone with the steam wheel on the upper bridge.

They had formally signed articles, and apportioned themselves pay. Kettle as master, McTodd as chief engineer, and the Portuguese as firemen, because salvage is apportioned pro rata, and the more pay a man is getting the larger is his house. On which account (at McTodd's suggestion) they awarded themselves paper stipends which they could feel proud of, and put down the Portuguese for the ordinary fireman's wages then paid out of Gibraltar, neither more nor less. For, as the engineer said: "There was a fortune to be divided up somehow, and it would be a pity for a pair of unclean Dagos to have more than was absolutely necessary, seeing that they would not know what to do with it."

Capt. Kettle felt it to be one of the supreme moments of his life when he rang on the Duncansby's bridge telegraph to "Half-speed ahead." Here was a bid for fortune such as very rarely came in any shipmaster's way; not getting salvage, the larger part of which an owner would finger, for mere assistance, but taking to port a vessel which was derelict and deserted—the greatest and rarest plum that the seas could offer. It was a thought that thrilled him.

But he had not much time for sentimental musings in this strain. A terribly nervous bit of pilotage lay ahead of him; the motive power of his steamer was feeble and uncertain; and it would require all his skill and resourcefulness to bring her into deep blue water. Slowly she backed or went ahead, dodging round to get a square entrance to the railway, and then with a slam Kettle rang on his telegraph to "Full speed ahead," so as to get her under the fullest possible command.

She darted out into the narrow, winding lane between the walls of broken water, and the roar of the surf closed round her. Rocks sprang up out of the deep—hungry black rocks, as deadly as explosive torpedoes. With a full complement of hands, and with a pilot for years acquainted with the place, it would have been an infinitely dangerous piece of navigation; with a half-power steamer which had only one man all told upon her decks, and he almost a stranger to the place, it was a miracle how she got out unscathed. But it was a miracle assisted by the most brilliant skill. Kettle had surveyed the channel in the lifeboat, and mapped every rock in his head, and when the test came he was equal to it. It would be hard to come across a man of more iron nerve.

Backing, and going ahead, to get round right-angled turns of the fairway, shaving reefs so closely that the wash from them creamed over her rail, the battered old tramp steamer faced a million dangers for every fathom of her onward way; but never once did she actually touch, and in the end she shot out into the clear, deep water, and gaily hit diamonds from the wave-tops into the sunshine.

It is possible for a man to concentrate himself so deeply upon one thing that he is deaf to all else in the world; and until he had worked the Duncansby Head out into the open Capt. Kettle was in this condition. He was dimly conscious of voices hailing him but he had no leisure to give them heed. But when the strain was taken off then there was no more disregarding the cries. He turned his head and saw a half-sunk raft, which seven men with clumsy paddles were frantically laboring toward him along the outer edge of the reefs.

Without a second thought he rang off engines, and the steamer lost her way and fell into the trough and waited for them. From the first he had a foreboding as to who they were; but the men were obviously cast away; and by all the laws of the sea and humanity he was bound to rescue them.

Ponderously the raft paddled up and got under the steamer's lee. Kettle came down off the bridge and threw them the end of a halliard, and eagerly enough they scrambled up the rusted plating and clambered over the rail. They looked around them with curiosity, but with an obvious familiarity.

"I left my pipe stuck behind that stanchion," said one, "and, by gum, it's there still."

"Fo'c's'le door's stove in," said another; "I wonder if they've scoffed my chest."

"You Robinson Crusoes seem to be making yourselves at home," said Kettle.

One of the men knuckled his shock of hair. "We was on her, sir, when she happened her accident. We got off in the captain's boat, and she was smashed to bits landing on great Salvage yonder. We've been living there ever since on rabbits and gulls and cockles till we built that raft and ferried over here. It was tough living, but I guess we were better off than the poor beggars that were swamped in the other boats."

"The other two boats got picked up.

"Did they though? Then I call it beastly hard luck on us."

"Capt. Mulreadly was master, wasn't he? Did he get drowned when your boat went ashore?"

The sailor shrugged his shoulders. "No, sir. Capt. Mulready's on the raft down yonder. He feels all crumpled up to find the old ship's afloat, and you've got her out. She'd a list on when we left her that would have scared Beresford, but she's chucked that straight again; and who's to believe it was ever there?"

Kettle grated his teeth. "Thank you, my lad," he said. "I quite see. Now get below and find yourself something to eat, and then you go forrard and turn too." Then, leaning his head over the bulwark, he called down: "Jimmy!"

The broken man on the raft looked up "Hullo, Kettle, that you?"

"Yes. Come aboard."

"No, thanks. I'm off back to the island. "I'll start a picnic there of my own. Good luck, old man."

"If you don't come aboard willingly, I'll send and have you fetched. Quit fooling."

"O, if you're set on it," said the other tiredly, and scrambled up the rope. He looked around with a drawn face. "To think she should have lost that list, and righted herself like this. I thought she might turn turtle any minute when we quitted her; and I'm not a scary man either."

"I know you aren't. Come into the charthouse and have a drop of whiskey. There's your missus' photo stuck up over the bedfoot. How's she?"

"Dead, I hope. It will save her going to the workhouse."

"O," rats. "It's not as bad as that."

"If you'll tell my why not? I shall lose my ticket over this job, sure, when it comes before the board of trade, and what owner's likely to give me another ship?"

"Well, Jimmy, you'll have to sail small and live on your insurance."

"I dropped that years ago and drew out what there was. Had to—with eight kids, you know. They take a lot of feeding."

"Eight kids, by James!"

"Yes, eight kids, poor little beggars, and the missus and me all to go hungry from now onward. But they do say workhouses are very comfortable nowadays. You'll look in and see us sometimes—won't you, Kettle?" He lifted the glass which had been handed to him. "Here's luck to you, old man, and you deserve it. I bought that whiskey from a chandler in Rio. It's a drop of right, isn't it?"

"Here, chuck it, said Kettle.

"I'm sorry," said Capt. Mulready, "but you shouldn't have had me on board. I should have been better picknicking by myself on Great Piton yonder. I can't make a cheerful shipmate for you, old man."

"Brace up," said Kettle.

"By the Lord, if I'd only been a day earlier with that raft," said the other, musingly. "I could have taken her out, as you have done, and brought her home, and I believe the firm would have kept me on. There need have been no inquiry; only 'delayed,' that's all; no one cares so long as a ship turns up sometime."

"It wouldn't have made any difference," said Kettle, frowning. "Some of those lousy Portuguese have been on board and scoffed all the money."

"What money?"

GIN PILLS cure all Kidney ills from simple backache to diabetes pain in the small of the back and through the hips—swollen feet and hands—burning urine—constant desire to urinate—dizziness—headaches—spots before the eyes—with loss of appetite, sleeplessness and nervousness—disappear under the healing, soothing powers of GIN PILLS.

Men and women who have any kidney or bladder trouble are throwing away their one chance of health and happiness by not writing for a free sample.

OWEN SOUND, ONT., March 10th, 1905.
Having used a sample box of Gin Pills, and finding them give me great relief, I sent my father-in-law, A. McDermid, of Keady, a box; he having for years been used up with kidney and bladder trouble, and unable to get relief from the urinary remedies used. The Gin Pills gave him relief before half the box was used. He is now entirely cured, and I believe Gin Pills a great cure.
JAMES LODGE.

Do as Mr. Lodge did. Simply write us for a free sample box of GIN PILLS and try them at our expense. If you feel better in every way, and know that GIN PILLS are doing you good, surely you will continue using them until cured. That is why we will send you a free sample box if you write and tell us in what paper you saw this offer.

GIN PILLS are sold by druggists everywhere, 50c a box, or 6 for $2.50.

THE BOLE DRUG CO. - WINNIPEG, Man.

"Why, what she'd earned. What there was in the charthouse drawer.

The dishevelled man gave a tired chuckle. "O, that's all right. I put in at Las Palmas and transferred it to the bank there, and sent home the receipt by the B. & A. mailboat to Liverpool. No. I'm pleased enough about the money. But it's this other thing I made the bungle of, just being a day too late with that raft."

Kettle heard a sound and sharply turned his head. He saw a grimy man in the doorway. "Mr. McTodd," he said, "who the mischief gave you leave to quit your engine room? Am I to understand you've been standing there in that doorway to listen?"

"Her own engineer's come back, so I handed her over to him and came on deck for a spell. As for listening, I've heard every word that's been said. Capt. Mulready, you have my vera deepest condolences."

"Mr. McTodd," said Kettle, with a sudden blaze of fury, "I'm captain of this ship, and you're intruding. Get to Hamlet out of here." He got up and strode furiously out of the door, and Mr. McTodd retreated before him.

"Now keep your hands off me," said the engineer. "I'm as mad about the thing as yourself, and I don't mind blowing off a few pounds of temper. I don't know Capt. Mulready and you do, but I'd hate to see any man all crumpled up like that if I could help it."

"He could be helped by giving him back his ship, and I'd do it if I was by myself. But I've got a Scotch partner, and I'm not going to try for the impossible."

"Dinna abuse Scotland," said McTodd, wagging a grimy forefinger. "It's your ain wife and bairns ye're thinking about."

"I ought to be, Mac, but, God help me. I'm not."

"Varra weel," said McTodd; "then, if that's the case, skipper, just set ye doon here and we'll have a palaver."

"I'll hear what you've got to say," said Kettle more civilly, and for the next half-hour the pair of them talked as earnestly as only poor men can talk when they are deliberately making up their minds to resign a solid fortune which is already within their reach. And at the end of that talk Capt. Kettle put out his hand and took the engineer's in a heavy grip. "Mac," he said, "you're Scotch, but you're a gentleman right through under your clothes."

"I was born to that estate, skipper, and I no more wanted to see yon puir deevil pulled down to our level than you do. Better go and give him the news, and I'll get our boat in the water again, and revictualed."

"No," said Kettle, "I can't stand by and be thanked. You go, I'll see to the boat."

"Be hanged if I do!" said the engineer. Write the man a letter. You're great on the writing line; I've seen you at it."

And so in the tramp's main cabin below Capt. Kettle penned this epistle: "To Capt. J. R. Mulready:

"Dear Jimmy—Having concluded not to take trouble to work Duncansby Head home, have pleasure in leaving her in your charge. We, having other game on hand, have now taken French leave, and shall now bear up for Western islands. You've no call to say anything about our being on board at all. Spin your own yarn; it will never be contradicted. Yours truly,

"O. Kettle, Master.

"pp N. A. McTodd, Chief Engineer, OK.

"P.S.—We have taken along these two Dagos. If you had them they might talk when you got them home. We having them, they will not talk. So you've only your own crowd to keep from talking. Good luck, old tintacks."

Which letter was sealed and nailed up in a conspicuous place before the lifeboat left enroute for Grand Canary.

It was the two Portuguese who felt themselves principally aggrieved men. They had been made to undergo a great deal of work and hardship; they had been defrauded of much plunder which they quite considered was theirs for the benefit of an absolute stranger in whom they took not the slightest interest; and, finally, they were induced "not to talk" by processes which jarred upon them most unpleasantly.

They did not talk, and in the fullness of time they returned to the avocation of shovelling coal on steam vessels But when they sit down to think neither Antonio nor his friend (whose honored name I never learned) regard with affection those little islands in the northern sea, which produced Capt. Owen Kettle and his sometime partner, Mr. Neil Angus McTodd.

THE PEARL POACHERS.

"No, Mr. Carnforth," said Kettle: "it would be lying if I was to say I knew anything about pearl-fishing. I've heard of it, of course; who hasn't? And, for the matter of that, I've had on a diving-suit myself, and gone down and examined a ship's bottom to see if the divers that had been sent down to look at some started plates had brought up a true report. But I've never done more than pass through these North Australian seas. They tell me the pearl-fishing's done from small luggers of some 10 or 14 tons, sailing out of Thursday island."

"It is," said the big man. "And—"

"Well, sir, you'd better get another captain. I'm a steamer sailor by bringing up, and on a steamer I know my business, and can do it with any other man alive. But you'd not find me much good on a little wind-jammer like a Thursday island pearler. I'm a hard-up man, Mr. Carnforth, and desperately in want of a berth; I hope, too, you'll not think it undue familiarity when I say that I like you personally; but, honestly, I don't think you'd better engage me as your skipper for this trip. You could get a so much better man for your money."

Carnforth laughed. "My dear Kettle," he said. "I don't think I ever came across a fellow with less real notion of looking after his own interests. As you are aware, I know your peculiar qualifications pretty thoroughly; I'm an eminently practical business man; I offer you a handsome salary with both eyes open; and yet you refuse because you are afraid of robbing me of my money."

"Mr. Carnforth," said the little sailor stiffly, "I have my own ideas of what's right. You have seen me at sea using violence and ugly words. But you will kindly remember that I was in service of an employer then, and was earning his pay by driving his crew. It's another thing now; we are ashore here, and I would have you know that ashore I am a strict chapel member, with a high-pressure conscience, and a soul that requires careful looking after. I could never forgive myself if I thought I was taking your pay without earning it thoroughly."

"If you'll let me get a word in edgeways," said the other irritably, "and not be so beastly cocksure that you can rob me—which you could no more do than fly—perhaps you'd understand what I'm offering, and not sneeze at a good chance. The lugger is your own invention, and so is the idea that I'm merely going pearl-fishing in the ordinary way. My notion is to go pearl-poaching, which is a very different matter; go get rich quick, and take the risks, and climb over them and to go at the business in a steamer with a strong enough crew to—ar—do what's needful."

"And you're already a rich man," said Kettle, "with a fine position in the country, and a seat in parliament. Some people never do know when they're well off."

"Some people don't," said Carnforth, "and you're another of them, skipper. For myself, I do a mad thing now and again because—O, because I like the excitement and flurry of it. But you!—You go and refuse a profitable billet that would fit you down to the boots, merely for the sake of a whim. A quarter of an hour ago you told me you were practically destitute—ar—'on the streets' you own words were; and here you are chucking up a certain 20 pounds a month, and a possible 90, when it's ready to your hand."

"I didn't know about the steamer," said Kettle, "and that's a fact."

"Well, I'm telling you now, captain, and if you don't take charge of her upper bridge, it will be your own fault. Why, man, there isn't a job between here and New Jerusalem that would suit you better, and besides, I'm keen to go there myself, and you are the one man in the world I want to have as a shipmate, and I ask you to come as a personal favor.

"I'm sick of this smug, orderly, frock-coated life here. Nature intended me for a pirate, and fate has made me a successful manufacturer. I've tasted the wild, unregenerate life of the open air once under your auspices and rubbed against men who were men and I want to be there again. I'm tired of fiddling amongst men and women who are merely dollar-millers and dress-pegs. I'm sick of what they call success. I'm sick of the whole blessed business."

Capt. Kettle thought of Mrs. Kettle and her children in the squalid house in South Shields, with the slender income and the slim prospects, and he sighed drearily. But he did not utter those thoughts aloud. He said, instead, that he was very grateful to Mr. Carnforth for his magnificent offer, and would do his best to earn thoroughly the lavishly income which was held out to him.

Carnforth reached out and gripped his hand.

"Thanks, Kettle," he said; "and mind, I'm going to try and lug you into a competency over this. You might just as well have given way before. I always get my own way over this sort of thing. And now probably you'd like to hear a bit more about the poaching ground?

"If you please, sir."

"Well, I can't quote you latitude and longitude offhand, but I'll show you the whereabouts of the place marked on the chart afterward. It's Japan way, and the Japs have chosen to claim all the bits of reefs thereabouts, and to proclaim a sort of close season against all foreign pearlers. Now, the place I've got news of is in their area, but so far it has never been fished. It is enormously rich, and it's absolutely virgin. Why, man, if we can put in six months' work there undisturbed, we can easily carry off a million pounds' worth of shells and pearls."

"Six months!" said Kettle. "That's a big order. I've no doubt that with a decent steamer and a few rifles we could beat off one of their gunboats when we get there, and do, say, a week's fishing. But if that gunboat steams back to Nagasaki, or wherever her port is, and brings out a whole blessed navy at her heels, we may find the contract outside our size. Of course, if you are going to fit out a real big steamboat, with a gun or two, and a hundred men—"

Carnforth laughed. "Wait a bit," said he. "You're going ahead too fast. There's no question of fighting a whole navy. In fact, we mustn't fight at all if there's any means of wriggling out of it. I believe fighting would amount to piracy, and piracy's too lively even for my tastes. Beside, if we got very noisy, we'd have some cruiser of the British China squadron poking her ugly nose in, and that's a thing we couldn't afford to risk at any price."

"Then how are you going to manage it?"

"What we must hope for is to be left undisturbed. There's every chance of it. The reef is out of all the steam lanes and circle tracks, and the Japs' gunboat patrol is not very close. In fact, the place has only been newly charted. It was found quite by accident by the skipper of a sea-sealing schooner, and he missed the plum because he happened to have been a brute to one of his hands."

"But I thought you said this reef was out of all ship tracks?"

"Don't hustle me. The schooner had been sealing off the Commander islands. She was coming home, and got into heavy weather. She was blown away three days by a gale, and picked up the surf of this reef one morning at daybreak, ran down into the lee, and lay there till the breeze was over. The reef wasn't charted and the skipper, who was 'on the make,' wondered how he could gather dividends out of it. In the off-sealing season he was in the Thursday island trade, and his thoughts naturally ran upon pearls and shell. He'd a diving suit on board, and he rowed into the lagoon, made one of his crew put on the suit, and sent him down.

"Now observe the result," said Carnforth with sly relish, "of being too severe on one's hands. This sailor, who was sent down in the diving-suit, had been having a dog's time of it on the sealing schooner, and when he got on the floor of the lagoon and saw the place round him literally packed with shells that had never been touched by human fingers, he made up his mind that the time had come to repay old scores. So when he came up out of the water again, he said, sulkily enough, that there was nothing below but seaweed and mud; and the boat rowed back out of the lagoon; and the schooner let draw her forestay sheet and ran away on her course.

"The skipper reported the new reef, and in due course it got on the charts, and the sailor kept holding his tongue till he could find a market for his information. He didn't find one at once; he had to wait two years, in fact; and then he found me. I guess that skipper would be easier on his hands in future if he only knew what he'd lost, eh, Kettle?"

The sailor frowned.

"A shipmaster, sir, has to get the full amount of work out of his hands, or he's neglecting his duty. I can picture that schooner, Mr. Carnforth, and I picture her old man hearing what he's missed, and still carrying on the driving game. The things we have to ship as sailors are beasts, and you have to treat them as such; and if you can show me a master who's popular in the forecastle, I can show you a man who's letting his hands shirk work, and not earning his owner's pay."

"H'm!" said Carnforth. "I've seen you handle a crew, and I know your theories and little ways, and I know also that you're far too obstinate an animal to change your opinions in a hurry. I've a pretty strong will myself, and so I can sympathize with you. However, we'll let that matter of ethics slide for the present, and go into the question of ways and means"—and on the dry detail of this they talked till far into the night.

Here, however, the historian may for awhile withhold his pen, since those in the shipping interest can fill the gap for themselves, whilst to all others these small questions of ways and means would be infinitely tedious.

The yacht's voyage out to Japanese waters may also be omitted. The English papers announced its commencement in one of the usual formal paragraphs: "Mr. Martin Carnforth, M.P. for the Munro division of Yorkshire, has started in his fine steam yacht, the Vestris, for a lengthened tour in China seas to study oriental questions on the spot, and will probably be absent some considerable time."

The official log kept on board was meager and scanty, being confined to arid statements of distances run and the ordinary meteorological happenings of the ocean; and toward the latter entries even these were skilfully fictitious. Indeed, when the vessel neared the scene of action her yellow funnel changed to black with a crimson band, a couple of squarish yards were cross-

An Absolute Cure For DYSPEPSIA

Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Belching of gas after eating, mean weakness.

By means of its muscles, the stomach should churn the food—changing solids into liquids—mixing in the gastric juice to start digestion.

If the stomach is weak—then food is not properly churned and mixed with enough gastric juice. Then you have indigestion and then dyspepsia.

Fruit-a-tives
or "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

strengthen the stomach—just as juicy beef and eggs and milk strengthen the wasted frame of a patient getting over Typhoid.

FRUIT-A-TIVES contain the elements that give new—vigor new energy—to the muscles lining the stomach—stimulate the digestive glands and assure a copious flow of gastric juice for each meal.

More than that, FRUIT-A-TIVES correct the Constipation which usually attends stomach trouble—and by acting directly on kidneys and liver, put the whole system in healthy condition.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are a peculiar combination of fruit juices and tonics that are known all over Canada for their wonderful cures in all stomach, liver and kidney troubles.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

THE CARE OF SHEEP.

The general time of mating sheep is usually in late summer or early fall, so that the lambs may come during late winter or early spring. For special purposes, the time of mating may be altered. Usually a ewe will breed four or six months after dropping her lamb. By custom and treatment, this period may be shortened, so that not only the time of mating may be changed, as in the case of those flocks used for producing winter lambs, where the spring instead of the fall months become the coupling period. Under some conditions it is practicable to so mate as to bring two crops of lambs within one year.

Though the ewe doubtless contributes most to the life and nourishment of the lamb, the ram is of equal importance, and should not only be of a correct type, but be kept in a healthy, vigorous condition. In England, where a large percentage of twin lambs is secured, many flockmasters follow a system of feeding previous to breeding termed 'flushing,' which consists in supplying extra rations of highly nutritious food to the ewes for two or three weeks ahead of the date at which the ram is to be put with them.

Following mating, the next important period is lambing time. This is the most critical time when the shepherd is called upon to exercise all his energy in the case of his flock. Little attentions at the time of birth, such as supplying some warm cow's milk to weakly lambs and keeping them warm and dry until the mother ewe is in shape to attend them, may aid in saving many and adding to the percentage of twins. In some instances it may be necessary to hold the ewe and assist the lamb to draw its first nourishment. After the lamb has once naturally drawn of its mother's milk, trouble with it is generally over.

The date of turning on to pasture is another period needing care and judgment. It is safest to effect this change gradually by turning to pasture for a few hours daily, and back to shelter at night, where a full ration of dry feed should await the ewes. In this way may be avoided injury to the digestive system of the lambs, often resulting in death, and which is caused by too great a supply of rich milk through the ewes' feeding heavily on new pastures. While until the ewe's system has become used to the change from dry feed to pasture it will be beneficial to supply a little dry feed, both hay and grain — generally, if the pasture is at all good, it will supply sufficient nutriment to the ewes, and it will not be necessary to feed any grain. Previous to weaning, if it be the flockmaster's wish to push the lambs, he may feed them grain separately by means of a 'lamb-creep,' made by a fence through which the lambs may pass, but keeping out the ewes. In this enclosure troughs should be placed, and an appetizing mixture of grain, made up of bran, crushed oats and pea-meal, fed to the lambs. Each day the lambs can be shut off from the ewes for a longer period, until finally they are removed to some other pasture where neither ewe nor lamb will hear the bleating of the other. At weaning time the lambs should be put in the best pasture available, and a special piece of luxuriant feed should always be provided for this purpose, such as second growth of clover. On the contrary, the ewes should be kept on short herbage for a time. Their udders should be occasionally examined, and if necessary, as in the case of heavy milkers, any accumulated milk drawn off.

So long as there is a fair supply of grass, little else is needed for the flock, though some additional feed may be supplied with advantage as the pastures begin to fail. For the transition from pasture to winter feed, there should be in readiness some succulent crop on which the flock may be folded for a few hours daily until fully accustomed to the change, after which they may remain on the ground all the time. For this purpose rape forms a reliable crop. Care is necessary not to allow too free access at first, as when wet with dew or rain there is danger of bloating; but such troubles may be avoided by keeping the flock on a near-by pasture and turning into the rape patch for a few hours daily during the middle of the day, returning to the pasture in the evening. Later the sheep may be allowed to remain in the rape patch all the time, confining them during the night in the portion previously eaten off and supplying a small feed of hay in racks.

Following rape, a patch of turnips, to be eaten off on the ground, with an allowance of hay, will put the flock in good condition for going into winter quarters. For the winter ration, as far as roughage goes, there is none better than good clover hay, though corn fodder, oat or barley straw may be used also with good results. In England, where the climatic conditions admit of wintering the flocks in the open, roots form the greater portion of the diet. These and clover hay will supply all needed nutriment, though the addition of grain, such as oats, bran and corn, will benefit. Corn, however, should form but a small portion of the ration for breeding ewes.

Ensilage, though not generally fed to sheep, has been used with success by many in wintering their flocks, and no doubt by judicious use of this succulent food and even a small daily ration of roots, better results would be obtained than in feeding an entirely dry ration. Wintering the flock on straw and a little hay, without grain or roots of any kind, is certain to perpetuate a degenerate animal.

There need be no great expense in providing shelter for the flock. It is most important that sheep be dry "above and below." A simple shed closed to the stormy sides and open to the sun, provided the ground be so as to give dry footing, will be all that is necessary. The flock should be divided into groups by means of rails or hurdles, so as to prevent crowding and to give those of equal size and weight quarters together, so that all may share alike at the feed troughs.

FARMERS WHO STUCK TO THEIR FARMS.

A correspondent writes thus to a Boston agricultural paper:

The writer was personally acquainted with eight farmers who left their farms to engage in other business, and all of them to the detriment of their financial interests, and some of them to the injury of their health and the shortening of their lives.

The two following farmers lived in the same neighborhood and were well known to the writer, and their history is related without any coloring or varnishing whatever.

J. H. was a young Irishman who came into our neighborhood without a dollar, and obtained from the owner of the land permission to build a board shanty in the edge of the woods near a fine spring, and live in it at a very low rental. He was a tall, broad-shouldered man, strong, healthy, and willing to do a fair day's work for a fair day's wages, without any watching, and consequently during the season for farm work his labor was in great demand at rather more than common prices. He worked a considerable time for the writer.

His wife, like himself, was healthy and industrious. Not having much housework, she worked out of doors, hoeing corn, digging potatoes and husking corn. Sometimes they raised a piece of corn or potatoes on shares, but their money was chiefly made working for wages and lending their earnings on interest. In the winter, he took jobs of threshing grain on shares, with a flail, for the tenth part of the grain, and found jobs enough to keep him busy until spring. Threshing machines were common, but farmers preferred to have their grain threshed with a flail when they could do so because the straw was saved in so much better shape and kept in the barn. Another advantage was the thresher carried out the straw which was too short to bind, and fed it to the cattle in the yard, a little at a time, as he threshed, and kept them busy eating all day. One farmer told me that in this way his cattle wintered as well on straw as on hay, and that it was worth all the threshing cost to have the cattle so well taken care of.

The man often could lend his money at eight per cent. to good borrowers, and was careful to have his notes renewed, and interest added at the end of the year, thereby getting compound interest.

They continued to live in the board shanty, and work, and save, until they had money enough saved to buy a farm considerably improved, and pay for it cash down. This is not the way farms are usually bought in this region, but in this case it was no doubt, wise, for he was getting interest on his savings and adding to them, instead of having to pay interest on the purchase money of a farm bought on credit.

He stayed on that farm, worked hard, practised proper economy, put up new buildings, sent his children to school, assisted some of them to get into business for themselves, and when he died, at a ripe old age, was the owner of three farms, was free from debt and had money lent. He was not rich, as compared with the Astors, Vanderbilts and Rockefellers, but he earned his money by hard labor and legitimate farming, and deserved more honor, and I believe took more comfort than the vastly rich.

R. D., a young married man, a native American, moved into our township from Monroe County, Pa., and rented a farm. He had a few household goods, a horse, team and a wagon; but he had nothing more except a stout heart, a strong constitution, and a good wife. He did not, like some renters, endeavor to extract all the fertility there is in the farm by constant cropping, selling his manure, and then leave it. He practised a proper rotation of crops of which clover was one. He did not sell hay or straw, but kept horses, cattle, hogs and sheep to consume the coarse products, and supply manure to increase the fertility of the soil. He built good fences, picked up the stones, pulled the stumps. He was a profitable tenant, made money for himself and landlord, and his lease was gladly renewed as often as he wished. It may be he intended to buy that farm from the very first but at all events, in twenty years from the time he moved on it he had bought it and paid for it with his share of the profits, and in five years more had built a new house and barn and was free from debt. He did it all by legitimate farming, and not by speculation. He and his wife worked diligently, were saving in their ways economical in their expenditures. He died very suddenly before he was sixty years of age.

HOUSE PLANTS.

The idea that house plants in the sitting room or sleeping room are injurious to the health of the persons who occupy them seems to have been thoroughly disproven or abandoned by those who advocated it. There may be some plants that throw off unwholesome odors, or those that are obnoxious to certain persons. There may be those who die of a rose in aromatic pain," and those to whom other plants or their odors are unpleasant or injurious to health, btu the number of such people is but few, perhaps but little more than that of those who cannot eat or bear the smell of grapes, peaches or other fruit. But the old saying might almost be reversed, and it might be said that a room in which house plants would not live and thrive could not be fit for a human being to sleep in or to occupy for any long period.

Those who advocate pure air for the victims of tuberculosis need to learn that purity is not dependent upon a low temperature, even if it is most frequently found upon the mountain tops. There may be as pure air found at 60 or 70 degrees above zero as at 20 degrees above or 20 degrees below that point, and few people in the best health, as few are most comfortable when the temperature goes below the freezing point wherever they may have to remain long, whether it may be indoors or out of doors.

Thus the heat necessary to keep the common house plant alive is not necessarily injurious to people who spend their days or nights in such rooms, and if there are any emanations from the plants they are more likely to be from the soil or the fertilizer used for them than from the plants that are growing therein.

The growing love for flowering plants is not more manifest in the increased number of greenhouses and florists, or in the amount of flowers and flowering plants used on Memorial Day, and at weddings, funerals and other public occasions, than it is in the number of plants to be seen in tthe dooryards and windows where dwell those who are called the poorer classes of our people. They show themselves from the bay window of the prosperous mechanic, and in the windows of the crowded tenement houses in the city or village where a single plant grows feebly in the few rays of surlight that enter there. If there are gases from fuel or from sewer that are not wholesome, the plants are about as certain and as prompt to feel them and to show their effects as the most delicate infants in the family, and a few house plants in a room may serve as a sort of barometer to indicate the purity of the air therein and its fitness to be breathed in and absorbed by those who spend their days and nights there.

The season is now at hand when those who have plants out of doors are preparing to take them into the house for the winter, and if there are more than they want to care for they may give a part to less fortunate neighbors. This may be done without danger of spreading disease if the soil in which they are placed does not contain fermenting or partly decayed vegetable or animal matter. The seedsmen and agricultural warehouses are now sending out their catalogues of bulbs and seeds for fall planting, and many of these are well adapted to house cultivation in the winter, and a small investment in them may prove a source of great pleasure by their show of leaves and blossoms when the earth outside is buried in snow. Then a thrifty pot of plants is a suggestion that there are brighter days coming.

Apples for Market.

We have much to learn. The points usually in evidence are (a) loose pack, the apples not well settled in the barrel or not filled full enough but what they are slack on arrival at destination. (b) Bad sorting, a few or many number twos left in to lower the grade. (c) Poor facing, the apples not of an even size or color on the face end, or not fitted into the face tight enough to preserve it in good condition. (d) Rough handling, which means throwing the fruit into the basket instead of handling it like eggs should be handled, and of emptying the fruit from the basket into the barrel from the top of the barrel instead of lowering it, and carefully transferring it with the least possible injury. I have seen otherwise good fruit rendered unfit for market in this way. Another method of rough handling is to shake the fruit from the trees and pass or try to pass it for hand picked. I have bought fruit and had the grower, whose duty it was, under the contract, to pick the fruit, to shake it down. This was in the days when fruit was picked and piled and packed afterwards. It would not be possible under present methods (e) Pulling fruit instead of picking it is what nearly all of us as growers are guilty of even up to the present time.

An apple should be picked off, not pulled off, and to do this requires a little knack. Placing the finger against the stem of the fruit and gently turning it backward, as it were, or in varieties with short stems, simply turning the apple back or sideways a little will release it from the limb with the stem still attached to the apple and not pulled out of it, as is often the case in average picking. It is fruit as well as its keeping quality that the stem remains on the apple. This is much more noticeable on pears than on apples. Just try pulling off a basket of pears and then pick a basket properly and see which in your own judgment will bring the most money. It is the same with apples, only in less degree. In all these essentials of good packing and picking also, for they go together, the far West is greatly in our advance. Attention to details in picking and packing will tend greatly to better marketing of our apples.

Therefore, I say: Grow good fruit. Pick carefully. Pack well and honestly, and you will have but little difficulty in disposing of your crop. But we must learn to do all these things well before we lay all the blame for poor prices on the commission merchant. No doubt he has much to answer for, but so has the slovenly, indifferent grower and shipper who fails to grow good fruit through neglect, handles it roughly and packs recklessly and ships indiscriminately.—H. M. Dunlap.

FALL VEGETABLES.

The good garden is never a source of more pride and satisfaction than in these crisp days of early autumn, when it adds so much to the resources of a good table. There is almost a plethora of the very best material, while the consciousness that frosts will soon come inclines us to crowd as much as possible into every day's enjoyment. Looking around the garden in the morning, the sober "two vegetables" which so many cooking teachers declare entirely sufficient for one dinner strikes one as a niggardly allowance. It is easier to sympathize with the proud young housekeeper whose delight in her garden culminated last week in the written comment; "Five vegetables at dinner to-day!" Here are the five, with some good ways of cooking them: Corn, lima beans, tomatoes, cauliflower, celery.

Succotash.—The corn and beans combine so perfectly in this distinctively American dish that it should not be ignored. A common error in making it is to cook the corn too long. The beans should be cooked for half an hour before adding the corn, as long cooking only serves to harden green sweet corn, which is cooked to perfection in a very few minutes. The water used in cooking the beans should be almost evaporated when the corn is added, so that the milky juice of the corn makes a very rich gravy. A cupful of sweet cream added just before taking up makes this succulent dish a feast in itself; or a generous lump of butter rolled in flour is carefully stirred in smoothly, giving a very slight thickening, which must simmer for a few minutes longer to cook the flour thoroughly. Add salt to taste just before taking up. A pint of beans to a quart of corn cut from the cob is the usual allowance, but proportions vary to suit convenience.

Lima Beans with macaroni or spaghetti makes another excellent combination. Cook separately and arrange in layers in a baking dish. Moisten with a cream sauce, cover with cracker dust, and top with cheese or not, to suit the taste. Brown lightly in a hot oven.

Green corn in fritters, corn custard or omelet makes a welcome breakfast or supper dish. Green corn is, in fact, available at every meal, in various ways, and as the season lasts, with repeated sowings, from July until the time of hard frosts, there is no green vegetable of more practical importance in the domestic economy. To most persons it is one of the best of foods, wholesome, delicious, and highly nutritious also. It ought to be used more freely and generously than it is.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, draw-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to Corn Omelet.— Allow one egg to each rather small ear. Score the ears lengthwise, slice off the top of the kernels and press out the pulp with the back of the knife. Mix with a beaten egg, season lightly with salt and pepper, and add a spoonful of cream for each egg. Cook quickly in the usual way; fold over, and dish on a hot platter. Serve at once.

Corn Fritters.—To a cupful of corn allow half a cupful of cracker dust and half a cupful of milk and two well-beaten eggs. Season lightly with salt and pepper, and cook in small cakes on a very hot griddle. Turn to brown both sides, but four minutes is long enough for a beautiful golden brown, and as the flour is cooked the fritters will have the greatest delicacy and lightness.

No. 2.—A more common rule calls for the ordinary fritter batter of two or three eggs to a pint of milk and a cupful of flour. Mix with the corn, and fry in deep fat. Corn fritters go admirably with fried chicken.

Of the numberless ways of cooking the ever useful tomato, one of the best and simplest also at command, hearty enough to serve as a main dish, is by baking. Remove the skins and the stem ends from smooth, solid, even-sized tomatoes. Set side by side in a baking pan, and either use a filling for the cup-shaped depression or simply crumb the tops with a seasoning sprinkled over, and bake for forty minutes to an hour. The filling may be of any fine, highly-seasoned mince of pork, mutton or beef, of diced bacon with shavings of onion and bread crumbs, or of other mixtures to suit individual taste.

Cauliflower with Cheese. — Cauliflower, arranged in a baking dish after simmering in salted water until tender, should be well moistened with a good white sauce, then crumbed and covered with a rich grated cheese. Bake in a hot oven to color the surface. This makes a rich and delicate dish.

Celery with Cheese.— The modern cook makes much of cheese combinations, and stewed celery is now served with cheese as an addition. Cut in inch lengths and simmer in salted water until tender. Arrange in a baking dish in layers, with a white sauce and a good sprinkling of cheese grated over each layer. Top with bread crumbs, dotted with butter and covered with cheese. Bake in a hot oven to color.

Gerald's Wife

By.... IZOLA FORRESTER

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

Broderick swung off the 4:35 express, walked quickly up the steps leading from the railroad platform and took his first look at Pineville. Those who lived in Pineville proper were content to call it Pineville. Gerald had written that they did not live in Pineville proper, but in Pineville-by-the-Sea, otherwise Pineville improper.

All that Broderick saw were pines, plenty of them, a flat white ribbon of roadway and a bit of a postoffice, roughly shingled, in the midst of the nearest clump of pines. He stepped into the postoffice as the central spot of civilization. Some one was stamping letters behind the glass inclosure, a girl with smooth dark hair. Beatrice had smooth dark hair.

He watched the girl stamping letters with interest and wondered why some one did not tell her to wear her smooth dark hair in two soft braids around her head, crown fashion, as Beatrice did.

"Where do the Vaughans live, please?" he asked finally, when the stamping ceased.

"The Vaughans? Oh, Mr. Gerald Vaughan and his wife? It's a brown house down near the shore, with a wide veranda and a funny roof. About a mile straight down the road."

A wide veranda and a funny roof. That sounded like Gerald. He wondered how Gerald's wife liked it. Beatrice was artistic, but not artistically eccentric. She had a horror of things odd, bizarre, so called bohemian, and yet she had married Gerald. And Gerald's brother knew that Gerald was utterly odd, bizarre and bohemian, so called.

He walked on down the flat white ribboned roadway and wondered whether he would find her like the girls Gerald had always admired. A lithesome, limp, blessed damozel type, with close silky gowns and loose floppy hair. Last summer she had not been that type. He thought of the trim girl figure holding the rudder of the Water Lily that last day. She had been more than the sort of a girl to fall in love with. She had been a good fellow, a stanch friend. And as he watched her he had stopped rowing, and they had drifted slowly in the sunset glow that flooded the lake while he told her.

There had been no actual engagement. He had nothing to reproach her with. He had not been in a position to ask her to be his wife then, but he had thought a girl like Beatrice had meant more by a kiss, a hand clasp, a few vague words of understanding, than other girls. He had thought she might wait until next summer. And now, in April, he had returned to New York to learn that Gerald was in disgrace, had married on nothing, eloped to Pineville-by-the-Sea, N. C., and his wife was Beatrice Stafford.

Gerald's mother had said they were penniless. Gerald's father had remarked that he didn't give a rap. They could exist upon love and art.

More or less for Beatrice's sake and a little for Gerald's, Gerald's brother had taken it upon himself to visit the bridal couple and help Gerald. Smothering his own love, he had made up his mind that as long as Beatrice had married a Vaughan she should not suffer from it.

There was no bell at the door of the little brown house with the funny roof. It was merely a bungalow in weathered shingles, and he pounded on the door lustily until it opened and Beatrice stood before him.

She was not the blessed damozel type yet. Her smooth dark hair was wound about her head in just the same crown fashion, and she wore a short dark blue linen skirt and a white shirt waist. The sleeves were rolled to her elbows, and from her finger tips to elbow dimples there was flour sprinkled.

He had not expected to see her face to face so soon or alone. Neither had he expected her to act as she did. The color rose in her cheeks, tipping even her ears with pink. It was an old habit. He remembered it.

"I thought you were in London," she said.

"You don't give a fellow a very decent welcome after he's traveled from London to this wilderness to say congratulations."

He stepped into the hall after her. She hesitated and laughed, looking at her floured hands.

"I can't shake hands with you, and—and the biscuits are in the oven. I shall have to watch them. Do you mind coming out to the kitchen?"

He didn't mind. There appeared to be only three rooms—the studio-sitting room, the dining room and the kitchen. Collapsible ready-in-a-minute studio divans were in the sitting room and dining room in lieu of bedrooms. It was all charmingly, most uncomfortably odd, bizarre and bohemian.

"Where's Gerald?" he asked when he had found a chair in the kitchen.

Beatrice knelt beside the stove to look at the biscuit. He could not see her face.

"He went to the postoffice for the last mail. You must have missed him."

"Well, what ever made him come to this lost corner?"

"Oh, because it was the chance of something definite, you know! Don't you know?" she added quickly, seeing the puzzled look on his face. "Well, Gerald's chum, Netherby Ames, broke all to pieces last fall from overwork and so on, and he was ordered down here. And he couldn't afford to come and stay indefinitely, so he pulled a few wires, and things happened. He was made postmaster here at Pineville. And he got lonesome and healthy and workful again a month ago, so Gerald's in his place, and he's in New York. Don't you see? It was really very definite and businesslike and right under the circumstances."

"Oh, certainly, under the circumstances," agreed Broderick. "So old Gerry's postmaster instead of artist."

"Both," she corrected. "He has lots of time to study, and it's good for him—the responsibility, I mean. You wouldn't know him."

"I suppose not," assented Broderick uneasily. He tried to reconcile his little circle of the universe, to make the chaotic jumble fall into place and harmonize. Gerald, Gerald the helpless, erratic, fantastic, irrational, joyous hearted, penniless artist, a person of matrimonial responsibility, a postmaster. But then he remembered the young smooth haired person stamping letters. Of course Gerald had found his usual way out of the difficulty. He had hired some Pineville lass to do the heavy work, and he drew the salary. It was like Gerald. But there was Beatrice, Beatrice making biscuit. He looked at her with troubled eyes, seeing endless vistas of Beatrices making biscuit throughout the years.

"Don't you miss New York?"

"Oh, so much!" she said. "I'll never be happy until I get back."

"Have you given up your own work?"

"Only for the time being. I shall take it up again, of course. I shall have to."

Broderick's hands tightened in a sudden grip. So she was to work again, turn out her endless succession of little wash illustrations for second rate monthly magazines. Gerald would not mind, would not see the point. He would think he was being broadminded and bohemian to let his wife carry on her own art irrespective of him. But Beatrice saw the point.

He rose from his chair suddenly, his face white with the anger and love he had smothered. Before he could stop himself the words came leaping to his lips:

"Why did you do it?"

"Do what?"

She stood beside the little bare kitchen table, her face raised to his, her eyes bright with startled wonderment at his tone.

"Why did you marry Gerald?"

"Marry Gerald! I?" Some one was coming along the white roadway. From the kitchen window two figures could be seen, and she pointed to them. "There is Gerald, and that is his wife, my sister Barbara. I am merely attendant star to the honeymoon. They brought me along to—well, to make the biscuit."

A minute later and Broderick met the bridal couple on the wide veranda under the funny roof. The bride was the girl with the smooth dark hair who had been stamping letters, and she laughed at him.

"I knew who you were, but I wanted Gerald all to myself, and I knew Beatrice would take care of you."

"She did," answered Broderick happily, and as the rest went into the house he paused to brush off traces of flour from his coat collar. But Beatrice burned the biscuit.

The "Father of Leprosy."

The gecko belongs to a family of thick tongued lizards, which are widely distributed over the tropical and subtropical countries of Europe and Asia, and in all countries where he is known he is thoroughly despised. Because of his repulsive appearance he is called the "father of leprosy." Down to times comparatively modern it was firmly believed that contact either directly or indirectly with the little reptile was sure to communicate leprosy. The investigations of modern zoologists have proved that the little animal is undeserving of his name of "father of leprosy" and that he is indeed a most harmless and useful creature. Since the old belief in the ability of this reptile to communicate leprosy to any human flesh which might come in contact with his warty, sore looking skin was exploded he has retained his objectionable name solely on account of the bad appearance he makes. His skin is one mass of scaly and tuberculous excrescences that cover his body from the tip of his tail to the end of his nose. Every quarter inch section of this repulsive looking body has a general resemblance to the thickened, callous protuberances that appear on the human body in cases of leprosy. On this account and no other the harmless little gecko was given the name of being the progenitor of the worst form of disease.

It is wise to save the first dollar that one makes in business, but wiser to save the last.

Another Authority

Dr. B. S. Bugbee, a medical specialist of Minnesota, in an address given lately before the Optical Association of that State, said, in speaking of the "PRENTICE SYSTEM": "By this method I have in the past year had more marked and gratifying results from my work than I have experienced in twenty years previous. I have absolutely cured many cases of Stammering, St. Vitus' Dance, Headache, Backache, Heart, Stomach, Female Troubles, etc., all without medicine, simply by fitting of glasses that relieve the strain and irritation at the Vital Brain and Nerve Centres, thus shutting off the waste of Nerve Energy that has previously been used up to overcome the eye and latent brain-strain, thus robbing or using up the vital energy which normally would have been used in functioning of other parts of the body." We also can testify to some remarkable results in the short time we have been practicing this system in the cure of chronic nervous diseases.

ELECTRIC POWER FOR BELLEVILLE.

Mr. J. A. Culverwell Gave the Council a Lot of Information Last Night--Thinks the Healey Falls Proposition the Only One to Tie To--The Fire Engines Incident--Canning Factory Must Observe the Law--The Speed of Autos On Bridges--Notes of An Interesting Session.

The City Fathers were last night treated to a discourse on electric power possibilities in this district, Mr. J. A. Culverwell, of Cobourg, being the gentleman who did the talking. It was quite evident that Mr. Culverwell was full of his subject, and for an hour or so information oozed out of him steadily. In his opinion the only practical solution for Belleville's problem "How shall we get cheap electric power?" is by way of Healey Falls. Mr. Culverwell painted a glowing picture of this city's bright future if the proposition of his company were agreed to, and Belleville people became stockholders in that concern. Some years ago, he said, Peterboro was as dead as any town in the country. Cheap electric power had built it up, and to-day it was lively and prosperous. The same future awaited Belleville if the proposition of the Northumberland-Durham Power Company were entertained. Mr. Culverwell rather jarred the feelings of some of the City Fathers by gently pooh-poohing the possibilities of Moira water power, and the statistics he had at hand seemed to prove his contentions.

There was a little pointed conversation in regard to the fire engines incident of Sunday night, and by the way the Mayor spoke the Belleville fire engines had, in yesterday's tests, amply proven that they were worthy of reliance if called upon. The session, which lasted two hours and a half, was one of the most interesting of the year.

Ald. Cooper, Gordon and Marsh were absent.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From the License Commissioners of West Hastings, presenting a report showing the amount collected in licenses for the year, which totalled $8897.76, the city's share being $2328.33. This was, it seems, the first report ever presented by any Board of License Commissioners, and there were cries of "frame it." Laid on table.

From Mr. J. A. Culverwell, re power proposed to be furnished this city by the Northumberland-Durham Power Co., and from Mr. E. S. C. Huyck, of Cobourg, touching the same matter. Filed.

From ex-Mayor R. J. Graham, re the resolution of thanks to the Board of Trade delegates to London, thanking the Council for their kind words, and mentioning the fact that special credit was due to Col. Ponton. Filed.

THE POWER QUESTION.

Before going into committee of the whole the Mayor announced that Mr J. A. Culverwell, of Cobourg, was waiting to address the Council in regard to electric power. They would hear him now. Mr. Culverwell was introduced. He said he represented the Northumberland-Durham Power Co., which was organized on a business basis, and in which there was no politics. The transactions of the company were subject to the rulings of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission. The report of the N.-D. Co.'s engineer showed that 3545 horse power of electric energy could be utilized in Belleville. The city's dealings with the N.-D. Co., Mr. Culverwell said, would not in any way interfere with their application to the Hydro-Electric Commission, in fact, he rather thought the latter body would advise Belleville to deal with that company. In answer to questions regarding the possibility of obtaining water power from the Moira, Mr. Culverwell did not think that would meet Belleville's needs. Only about 2000 horse power could be obtained from the Moira altogether, and that at vast expense, whereas this city needed about 4000 h. p. at present, and the Lehigh Valley Cement Company was coming in, which would need 3000 h.p. more. In a few years 10,000 h.p. would be needed in Belleville. Mr. Culverwell instanced the case of Peterboro, which, he said, was practically dead till it obtained cheap electric energy. Belleville was in quite as good a position as Peterboro in regard to getting electric power, though she might not get it quite so cheap. This he could tell the Council, though, that with power transmitted from Healey Falls the N.-D. Company would be able to cut steam prices in half in this city. Belleville, as a manufacturing centre, was better off than Peterboro because we had water transportation, while they had not. There were, he felt absolutely certain, large possibilities for Belleville if she had cheap power. They wanted Belleville people in the N.-D. Company, and wanted them on the board of directors. He felt sure that the N.-D. Company, with power from Healey Falls, presented the only satisfactory solution to Belleville's cheap power problem.

In answer to questions Mr. Culverwell said the question of transmission of power cut a small figure nowadays. There was a fall of 72 feet at Healey Falls, whereas at Trenton there was only 14. At Healey Falls they would be able to obtain 9600 h.p. at low water, and there would be no trouble with anchor ice in winter time. There would be no favored customers; all coons would look alike to the N.-D. Co. The price of the Healey Falls power would be fixed by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission. The N.-D. Co. had an authorized capital of $750,000, and they would be able to deliver power to Belleville within nine months after work started. The N.-D. Co.'s lease of the Healey Falls site was for 30 years, and could be renewed. Here, he felt sure, was Belleville's golden opportunity.

The Mayor said they had been edified and instructed by Mr. Culverwell's remarks.

Ald. Panter felt that the thanks of the Council were due Mr. Culverwell for his lucid and interesting address.

Ald. Sinclair agreed, but thought the Council should continue its dealings with the Power Commission, and ascertaining what this city's prospects really were. They could, he thought, negotiate with the Commission and the company, too.

There was considerable discussion, and the matter was pretty well gone over again. Finally it was resolved to deal with the business in its proper orders, and the Council went into

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Ald. Sinclair in the chair.

The reports of the various standing committees, as already published, were passed with only trifling changes.

Speaking of the License Commissioners' report, the Mayor said it was gratifying to see that business methods now prevailed in Government matters.

It was resolved to permit Miss Bogart to obtain sewer connection at a cost of $20, instead of $40, as before recommended.

THE FIRE ENGINES.

Under the head of "Enquiries" Ald. Panter asked if it were not true that the city had been asked, at different times, to spend large amounts of money on the fire engines, yet, when assistance was asked by Colborne on Sunday night, and the engines were proposed to be sent there, they were informed by the City Engineer, Mr. McCurdy, that the engines would be of little use if sent there. He (Ald. Panter) would like to know if the money spent on the engines had been wasted.

The Mayor said he had ordered a test of the engines, but the report of the test had not yet come in.

Ald. McCrodan said No. 1 engine had thrown a stream 140 feet out of 500 feet of hose. He had not yet heard what the other engine had done.

Ald. Green — "It seems that the fault lies with the city engineer rather than the engines."

The Mayor said Mr. McCurdy told him the engines needed new valves, etc. He (the Mayor), told Mr. McCurdy that he should have seen to the repairs of the engines if they needed any, and reported if there was anything wrong. However, His Worship said, the matter was under consideration.

AUTOS ON BRIDGES.

Ald McCrodan asked if there was any regulation limiting the speed of automobiles on bridges. Some of them ran as fast as they pleased, and there was an accident, the other day, to a farmer's outfit. Horses were not allowed to go faster than a walk over bridges, and autos should have a speed limit, also.

The Mayor agreed, but said they had no by-law in regard to autos: only the statute. The matter should be taken up.

Ald. Knox, the Council's automobile expert, agreed that autos should go slow over bridges, but said it was next to impossible to make an auto go as slow as some horses walked.

THAT OVERHEAD BRIDGE.

The Mayor said he had been driving over the city with a G.T.R. official, and the latter had asked if the Council would agree to a level crossing being substituted for the bridge which now crosses the G.T.R. tracks on the road leading to Sidney Town Hall. If a level crossing were instituted the G.T.R. would, of course, assume statutory liability.

There was a lot of conversation over the matter, and finally it was resolved that a committee consisting of the Mayor, Ald. Panter and Green interview the County Council in regard to the matter.

THE FAIR STATEMENT.

Ald. Sinclair said he had seen in The Intelligencer a letter stating that, inasmuch as the city had granted $300 to the Belleville fair, the directors of the fair should issue a statement letting the citizens see how the money had been expended. The letter was, he thought, a reasonable one, and the request perfectly fair.

The Mayor said a statement would, he understood, be published after the annual meeting of the Belleville and East Hastings Fair Association.

ALD. GREEN WANTS TO KNOW

Ald. Green said he had some questions to ask the Chairman of Gas, 1st. Had the Gas department a place in which to store unused pipe belonging to the department? 2nd. Why was the unused gas pipe on Bridge St. west allowed to lay on the street and gradually disappear? 3rd. Was it true that the gas service was to be extended to Albert College and be used for the benefit of residents of Thurlow township?

Ald. Sinclair said yes. The Gas department had a storehouse, and unused material was supposed to be placed therein. As to the second question, he had noticed the unused gas pipe lying on Bridge St. west, and had called Mr. Thomson's attention to it. Mr. Thomson had neglected his duty, which was to look after the pipe. 3rd. Yes. The gas service was to be extended to Albert College, but the college would be the only customer in Thurlow township; all the rest of the users in that locality would be inside the corporation. The college had city water and should have city gas.

Ald. Green said he had no desire to oppose the College's wish to obtain gas from the city, but would object to any other residents of Thurlow getting it.

Ald. Sinclair said no other residents of Thurlow would get it.

MOTIONS.

Ald. Vermilyea moved that the Solicitor notify the Belleville Canning Company that they must not open city hydrants any more without the consent of the manager of the Waterworks.—Carried.

The Mayor said the Canning Company had been using a hydrant without permission, and the practise must be stopped.

Ald. McCrodan moved that an application be made to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission for an estimate of the price at which 3200 h. p. of electric energy, or more, can be delivered to consumers in this city. —Carried.

— Ald. Sinclair moved that the Northumberland-Durham Power Co. be asked to give an estimate of the price for which they will deliver 3200 h.p., or more, to consumers in Belleville.

Ald. Panter did not see the need of the motion. The N.-D. Co. was under the control of the Power Commission.

There was some little discussion, during which Ald. Sinclair said that, though a Liberal, he believed the Whitney Government meant well and was honest. They had not been bought, as some papers insinuated.

The motion was carried.

Ald. Gordon was, on motion, given three months leave of absence on account of ill-health.

Council adjourned.

Children and Matches

Shortly before four o'clock yesterday afternoon the fire brigade was called to Foster street, in the eastern part of the city. It appears that some children playing with matches set fire to a stack of pea straw upon Mr. Benjamin McConnell's premises. The destruction of the stack was the only damage sustained.

McINTOSH BROS.

WESTERN LAND DEALS

and Wilson were really the Great West Land Co.?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"I'm not certain of that. I was told in a very indirect way that Mr. Wilson had purchased nearly all the stock in the company."

"Then you were not aware of the relationship of these three gentlemen to the Great West Co. as managers or controlling directors?"

Mr. Stevenson was not.

"I know, however, that Messrs. Foster, McGillivray, Wilson and Chancellor Boyd were directors of the Great West Co., and also of the Union Trust Co."

"And the money for the Great West Co. was all advanced from the Union Trust Co.?"

"Every dollar of it."

"Then, whatever was acquired by the company was due to the use of the funds of the Union Trust Co.?"

"Yes."

Mr. Foster Takes the Stand.

When the examination resumed Mr. Shepley read the letter to Mr. Wilson, wherein Dr. Oronhyatekha protested that the 100 shares of stock in the Great West Land Co., which he had intended to transfer to the Union Trust Co. had in realization been transferred to the group in the company that borrowed money from the I. O. F. to engage in the speculation.

At this juncture, after 15 minutes' delay, Hon. George E. Foster took the witness stand.

From June, 1901, to May, 1906, witness was manager of the Union Trust Co.. Mr. Foster had no written agreement with the company, except a verbal contract with Mr. McGillivray and Dr. Oronhyatekha. Witness was to receive $5,000 per year for five years. He was also to have freedom with his public work in politics and other business that he was in previous to that.

Witness is the present secretary of the Great West Land Co. He is also a director of that company. He had the custody of the books of the company and an agreement between the C. P. R. and Pope & Fowler, dated April 24, 1903, also an agreement of June 24, 1903, with the Town and Farm Sites Co., Limited, and himself.

Mr. Shepley asked Mr. Foster if he had numerous papers, agreements, etc., of the Great West Land Co., and other books, to which witness replied that he had them in his possession.

"Have you the letter-book of the 'syndicate'?"

"I don't think so."

"Has it been destroyed?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"Will you produce these books and documents?"

"I have no authority to produce any books or documents unless the company says so. I have no intention except to assist the commission in getting all the information necessary for the legitimate purposes of enquiry. I will produce all the books and documents except the stock book."

"You do not want to take the attitude that anyone in this country is above a royal commission?"

"No, not at all, as long as the commission was within its powers."

There was another delay of 12 minutes at this point, while the messenger went for the books.

Mr. Stevenson took the stand.

A Series of Agreements.

Mr. Shepley took up, first, the charter of the North Ontario Farm and Town Sites Co., dated March 5, 1903. There were 10,000 shares of stock, value $100 each. The provisional directorate were Messrs. Boeckh, Diver, Duseau, Kydd, Vandusen. The company was to do a general land business.

The next document was the agreement of the original option obtained April 24, 1903, from the C. P. R. by Pope & Fowler for the purchase of 200,000 acres of land in the Northwest at $3.50 per acre, of which one-sixth was to be paid in cash and the balance in five consecutive annual payments.

The agreement of May 30, 1903, between Pope & Fowler and the Union Trust Co. was read. This document provided for the Union Trust Co. to pay Pope & Fowler $23,520 for the right or option to purchase said lands, and a further payment of $33,146.66. The agreement also recited the payment of $60,000 to the parties of the first part (the money they had given to the C. P. R.) by the Union Trust Co. The transaction simply meant that Pope & Fowler transferred the land to the Union Trust Co. at an advance of $1 per acre, and the Union Trust Co. in turn gave it to the Town and Farm Sites Syndicate at $5 per acre.

Mr. Shepley went further into the minute book of the Union Trust Co. One minute provided for the loan of $140,000 by the Union Trust Co. to the Town and Farm Sites Co. Witness became aware of this in the spring of 1904.

Mr. Shepley produced another document an agreement between the directors of the North Ontario Town and Farm Sites Syndicate, on the first part the original incorporators, the second part, and Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Col. J. A. McGillivray and Matthew Wilson as the third part. The intention of the agreement was to vest a one-half interest in the land deal in these three—Foster, Wilson and McGillivray

Mr. Shepley read the minutes of a shareholders' meeting of the New Ontario Co., also a letter from Mr. Foster, offering an option of western land for 1,000 shares in capital stock in that company.

Mr. Shepley then took up the minutes again. One minute provided for the resignation of the provisional board of directors and named Messrs. McGillivray, Foster, Schofield, Wilson, Hon. Robert Rogers and Sir John Boyd as the permanent directors of the New Ontario Farm and Town Site Co.

Division of Stock.

In June there was an agreement between Messrs. Foster, MacGillivray and Wilson, owners; the Union Trust Co., bankers; Dr. Oronhyatekha, Messrs. Wilson, Boyd and Schofield, shareholders, and the New Ontario Syndicate, Messrs. Vandusen, Kydd, Shaw, Murray and Dale. This provided for a distribution of stock of the company as follows: Fosters, McGillivray and Wilson as owners, 445 shares; Foster, 17 1-2 shares; Wilson, 10 shares; McGillivray, 10 shares; The Union Trust Co., 237 1-2 shares; Dr. Oronhyatekha, 100 shares; Rogers, 10 shares; Sir John Boyd, 10 shares; A. Schofield, 10 shares, and the company itself 100 shares. Pope & Fowler were to get fifty shares as promised in a previous agreement. This made up the 1,000 share of the Great West Land Co., as it was afterwards named.

When Mr. Shepley had finished, Mr. Stevenson called his attention to the signatures on the agreement, and it was noted that the signatures of Hon. Robert Rogers and Dr. Oronhyatekha had been written in lead pencil. They had not signed the agreement.

Among further documents read by Mr. Shepley was a minute authorizing the direct conveyance of the land from Pope & Fowler to the Union Trust Co.

PALMA'S ONLY WAY OUT

Decides to Concede All to the Rebels and Liberals.

United States Secretary of War Taft Arranges Armistice, Which Probably Means the Finish of Cuba's Little Opera Bouffe War—Text of the Terms of the Armistice Agreed Upon by the Opposing Forces.

Havana, Sept. 25.—It was rumored late yesterday afternoon that the Government and the moderates had tacitly decided to concede practically every thing to the Liberals and rebels.

Terms of Armistice.

The following are the terms of the armistice agreed upon by the opposing forces:

"1. No movement of troops shall take place on either side without a notification to the opposing authorities, viz., the secretary of the interior of Cuba; Alfred Zayas, representing the Liberal party, and the American peace commission.

"2. This peace shall be effective throughout Cuba.

"3. If either party violates any of the expressed conditions the opposing party shall not take hostile action until after a complaint notification to the peace commission.

"4. Hostilities shall not be resumed for at least 24 hours after notification to the peace commission."

The Cuban Secretary of State agreed, upon the condition that he should notify Secretary Taft instead of Senator Zayas (president of the Liberal party), if the Government desired to move troops.

NO CHANGE MADE.

Methodist Pastoral Term Remains As It Was—Mission Board.

Montreal, Sept. 25.—At the Methodist general conference yesterday the improvement of The Guardian was discussed. The price of the paper was fixed at $1.50 a year.

No change was made in the pastoral term, although there was a warm debate on the motion for an unlimited pastorate.

The new mission board is composed of Revs. Dr. Ryckman, Dr. Huestis, Dr. Langford, Dr. Young, Dr. Briggs and T. Albert Moore and Messrs. Powell, Flavelle, Cushing, Koenleyside, MacLaren, Abram Shaw.

At motion was carried to pay the price of the keep of a horse where such was required, the cost being set at $100. This practically raises the minimum stipend to $900.

The widow of a pastor will be paid salary and permitted to occupy the manse for the balance of the year in which his death occurs.

CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

C. P. R. Conductor Murphy Severely Injured at Eton Bridge.

London, Sept. 25.—Ellwood Murphy, a C. P. R. conductor, was severely injured at Eton bridge on the Port Burwell branch of the C. P. R., a heavy piece of timber falling from a car breaking his leg and severely injuring him internally.

William Cooley and a man named Bolton were injured yesterday afternoon while working under a Pere Marquette car. The engine shunted into the car and the men were caught underneath. Cooley had his leg and foot badly crushed, but Bolton was only slightly injured.

Ald. Forristal, who injured his knee in Quebec a month ago, suffered a similar injury on Saturday night by the sudden jolt of a street car.

Six Killed In Train Collision.

Minneapolis, Sept. 25.—Six persons are dead and a score or more injured in a rear-end collision on the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad about noon yesterday at New Prague, Minn. The southbound passenger train leaving Minneapolis at 9.35 a. m. crashed into a freight train, which was on a siding, splintering the first three cars on the former and derailing the entire train. Both engine crews were killed.

Get $50 Each.

Quebec, Sept. 25.—Eleven veterans of Levis have recently received cheques for $50 in lieu of land grants from the Government of Ontario in reward for their services on the frontier in connection with the troubles in 1864-65.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, Sept. 24.—(Special.)—Cables from Liverpool on Canadian cattle were easier at 10c, and those from London were ½c to 1c lower, at 10c to 10½c. Ranch cattle in Liverpool were ½c lower, at 8½c to 9c. Shipments last week were 3401 cattle; receipts to-day were 1800 cattle, 25 milch cows, 1200 sheep and lambs, 400 calves, 1400 hogs. Receipts of hogs were fairly large, there being 1400 on the market, but out of this number one leading packing concern had contracted for 1000 in the west, consequently the supply for sale was very limited, for which the demand was good and this, coupled with higher cables on Canadian bacon from London, Liverpool and Bristol, credited a stronger feeling here for hogs and prices advanced 15c to 25c per cwt., with sales at $6.75 to $6.90 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

Among the offerings were a number of prime northwest cattle, which sold at 4¼c to 4½c per lb.; pretty good cattle sold at 3½c to 4c and the common stock, 2¼c to 3c per lb. Milch cows sold at $25 to $50 each. The calves were nearly all grassers, and some of them very lean at that. These sold at 2c to 3½c per lb; good, at 5c to 5½c per lb. Sheep, sold at 3¾c to 4c per lb.; lambs, at 5c to 5½c per lb.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, Sept. 24.—Beeves—Receipts, 5800; choice steers, steady; good to prime, shade lower; others, 10c to 15c off; light bulls, 10c to 15c off. Medium and good cows, 10c to 25c lower; common, steady; steers, $4 to $5.90; one car choice, $6.15; oxen and stags, $3.80 to $4.15; bulls, $2.40 to $3.40; cows, $1.15 to $3.50. Exports tomorrow, 900 cattle and 2000 quarters of beef.

Calves—Receipts, 1816; veals, 25c to 50c higher; grassers and westerns, 50c higher. Veals, $5 to $9.25; culls, $4.50 to $5; grassers, $3.50 to $4; westerns, $4.50.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 8105; sheep, steady; good and prime lambs, 15c to 25c higher; state stock, steady; sheep, $3.50 to $5.50; culls, $2.50 to $3; lambs, $6 to $8.12½; culls, $4 to $5.00; Canada lambs, $8.

Hogs—Receipts, 10,120; market, firmer; state and Pennsylvania hogs, $6.90 to $7.10.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—Cattle—Receipts, about 30,000; best steady; others, 10c lower; common to prime steers, $3.75 to $6.95; cows, $2.70 to $4.75; heifers, $2.60 to $5.25; bulls, $2.40 to $4.30; calves, $3 to $8; stockers and feeders, $2.60 to $4.50.

Hogs—Receipts, about 28,000; 5c to 10c higher; choice to prime heavy, $6.55 to $6.65; medium to good heavy, $6.25 to $6.45; butchers' weights, $6.65 to $6.70; good to choice mixed, $6.40 to $6.60; packing, $5.75 to $6.40; pigs, $5.80 to $6.60.

Sheep—Receipts, about 25,000; best, steady; others, dull and lower; sheep, $4.50 to $4.75½; yearlings, $5.75 to $6.15; lambs, $6 to $7.75.

BRITISH CATTLE MARKET.

London, Sept. 24.—Canadian cattle in the British markets are quoted at 10c to 11½c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 9½c to 9¾c per pound.

CHEESE MARKETS.

Winchester, Ont., Sept. 24.—At a meeting of the cheese board held here to-night, 331 colored and 261 white were registered. A few boxes sold on the board at 13½c and 13 3-16c; balance probably sold on curb. Three buyers present.

Union Men Only.

Edmonton, Alta., Sept. 25.—The builders' laborers' strike has been settled by compromise. The men get $2.25 for nine hours until April 14, and then $2.20 for eight hours. The exchange will employ union men only.

J. C. SAVIGNAC'S CRIME

Former Preacher Tries to Kill His Wife and Her Mother.

Ottawa Turkish Bath Man, Crazed by Liquor, Shoots Both Women Twice—Victims of the Would-Be Murderer Will Recover, But Their Assailant Escapes—Story of a Life Ruined by the Drink Habit.

Ottawa, Sept. 25.—A mother and her daughter are lying in the Protestant Hospital in a precarious condition. They were shot late yesterday afternoon by the husband of the daughter.

Joseph C. Savignac has been running a Turkish bath establishment in Ottawa, but the profits have been for the most part spent in liquor. Finding, after the unproductive summer months, his resources at an end, he announced to his wife that he was going to Florida to claim the estate of his father, who was recently killed, and left no will.

The wife objected, and her parents refused to allow her to go. He insisted, however, that Mrs. Savignac accompany him and last night they were to travel.

Buys Revolver.

About midday Savignac left their pretty little home near Cummings' Bridge, and after visiting one or two saloons in Ottawa, purchased a revolver, 32 calibre, and returned to Cummings' Bridge. David Mitchell, his father-in-law, was there with a rig to take away some of the unsold furniture. Mrs. Mitchell was also there.

While he was upstairs, Mr. Mitchell says he heard sounds as of the breaking of furniture and he rushed down stairs to see what was wrong. In the dining room he saw his wife and daughter lying apparently dead and Savignac with a smoking revolver in his hand.

This Savignac pointed at Mitchell, saying: "I may as well finish the business." He pressed the trigger, but it snapped and Mitchell was saved.

Savignac produced another revolver, and leveled it at his father-in-law, but apparently changing his mind did not fire.

Feign Death to Escape.

Mrs. Mitchell and Mrs. A. Savignac were not dead, but it seems had agreed to feign death to escape. Seeing her husband leave the room the latter made a dash for the cellar with her 20 months old child in her arms. Fearing that her husband would discover her there she scrambled through the narrow window and rushed down the roadway towards the toll house, where friends lived, but after proceeding a quarter of a mile she fell unconscious. She was shot through both shoulders just below the shoulder blades. A neighbor took care of her.

Mrs. Mitchell was also shot in two places. Her left arm was splintered and a bullet entered her back.

Murderer Escapes.

Meanwhile Savignac walked leisurely across the fields in an easterly direction and had at least half an hour's start of the police, who were summoned by telephone.

Both wounded women may recover One of Mrs. Savignac's lungs was slightly pierced, but the other wound is not so dangerous. One bullet was extracted.

Ordained to Ministry.

About fifteen years ago Savignac and Miss Mitchell were students at the French Presbyterian College, Pointe Aux Trembles. They became lovers. Savignac was a native of France and a Roman Catholic, but had become converted to Protestantism. Savignac went to the Presbyterian College in Montreal, and eventually was licensed to preach. He was ordained to the Presbyterian Church of Canada at Thurso, Que., a little later.

Eleven years ago the young couple were married in Ottawa, and with every bright prospect Rev. J. C. Savignac accepted a call to Lowell, Mass. There he ministered with success and conducted evangelistic missions among the French-speaking people of the state.

Drink Unsettled His Mind.

Apparently tiring of his work he came to Ottawa in 1901 and started literary work, contributing for the most part to American newspapers and periodicals. He was successful for a time, and, according to Mr. Mitchell, saved money. But the drink habit seemed to grow and his mind became unsettled. He removed to Florida, to which his father had migrated from France and became a Baptist preacher. Two years of this sufficed and he came back to Ottawa. There were no Turkish baths in the city so he established one and called himself "doctor." He flourished, but the demon drink had him in his grip and his profits were squandered.

PALMA REJECTS PEACE

Which Secretary Taft Says Was Honorable to Him.

United States Mediator Is Not Hopeful and Says the Situation Is Most Disgusting—Elections Were Thoroughly Rotten—Roosevelt Appeals to Palma to Accept Only Conditions by Which Calm Can Be Restored.

Havana, Sept. 26.—Secretary Taft yesterday afternoon said:

"The Government officials, instead of co-operating with us to save the republic, have resorted to every kind of obstruction with the object of continuing their control of the administration. President Palma and his advisers have rejected terms of peace which were honorable to them, though in the form of a compromise with their opponents.

"We are still striving to arrange a settlement, and we trust the American people will give us credit for doing everything possible to accomplish a settlement without resorting to force.

A Disgusting Situation.

"I cannot say that we are hopeful, for I have never known a more disgusting situation.

"Investigation convinces us that the elections were thoroughly rotten.

"We do not want to intervene, but the conditions [illegible] may necessitate it. Our reports show that the insurgent commanders have lost control of their forces, which are now lawless bands which at any moment might loot and burn. The situation seems to demand the use of force."

The American commissioners have decided not to keep their engagement to revisit President Palma because of his attitude yesterday.

Secretary Taft added that the terms agreed upon retain Palma as president, but he had listened to the bad counsel of the Cabinet Ministers, who were less fortunate.

Appeal From Roosevelt.

President Roosevelt has cabled to President Palma, appealing to the latter's patriotism to accept the terms suggested by Messrs. Taft and Bacon as being the only conditions under which calm political conditions could be restored.

Guard British Railway.

Secretary Taft has ordered the commander of the United States gunboat Marietta to despatch thirty men to Sagua La Grande, Province of Santa Clara, to guard the shops of the Cuban Central Railway, a British concern, which contains a million dollars worth of supplies. The manager of the road declares that it already has been damaged to the extent of $100,000.

In Dresden 300 years ago "epicures" used to eat Venetian oysters that had been on the way three weeks.

Thought He Was A Bear.

Joseph Bellaine Surrenders For Shooting Boy Keyes.

Sad Details of Accident Which Deceased Fire Ranger of St. Catharines in Cobalt District Received—Hit By a Stray Bullet in Mistake by a Hunter After Bear—Had No Motive Otherwise For Deed.

St. Catharines, Sept. 26.—Full details of the fatal accident to Roy Keyes, only son of Barrister Jas. A Keyes, have been received from Charles Henderson of Sudbury. The young man left camp on Thursday, saying he was going to try for a partridge, and taking his revolver with him. As he did not return that night searching parties were formed, and about 7 o'clock on Saturday night they found his body about forty yards from the road, with the revolver, all chambers loaded, about two feet away. He had been shot through the body. It is thought he was hit by a stray bullet, or that he may have been taken for a bear and killed by a hunter. The body was brought to St. Catharines on Monday, and the funeral took place yesterday.

Thought Keyes a Bear.

Toronto, Sept. 26.—The Attorney-General's department has received a despatch from Sudbury stating that one Joseph Bellaine has given himself up and admitted that it was he who shot and killed Roy Keyes of St. Catharines, the fire ranger, whose body was last week found in the Cobalt district.

Bellaine claims that he shot, believing at the time that it was a bear. When Keyes was found he was wearing a black sweater, which makes Bellaine's statement more probable.

Besides, so far as known, there was no motive for the deed.

OFFICIAL NOTES DESTROYED.

Evidence of 1897 Text Book Commission Lost to Present Inquisitors.

Toronto, Sept. 26.—At yesterday's meeting of the Provincial School Book Commission, Frank N. Nudel, assistant registrar of the Board of Education, who was secretary of the Commission appointed to ascertain the cost of production of school books by the Government in November, 1897, said that at the request of Judge Morgan, after the report had been issued, he had destroyed his notes. One copy of the evidence had been given Wallace Nesbitt, counsel for the publishers, and two copies to Judge Morgan.

John Macdonald, secretary-treasurer of the Kingston Board of Education, told of the method of handling free text books in Kingston under the fee system, and said there was a saving effected all round.

Commission resumes this morning.

U. S. Railways Kill 26 a Day.

Washington, Sept. 26.—During the year ending June 30, 1905, according to a statement issued yesterday by the interstate commerce commission, an average of 26 persons a day were killed and 288 injured on railroads in the United States. The total number killed during the year was 9,703, while the injured number 86,008.

Crushed Under Train.

Hamilton, Sept. 26.—John Larmer, a painter, who lives at 71 West Main street, was run over by a Michigan Central train at Welland Monday night, and was so badly crushed that little hope of his recovery is entertained.

Hold-Up At Fort William.

Fort William, Sept. 26.—Robert Moore was held up on the C.P.R. track Monday afternoon. Three Danes flourished a knife and took his watch and chain and $60 in cash. The Danes got away.

Will Recover.

Ottawa, Sept. 26.—The victims of Monday's shooting affair, Mrs. Joseph Savignac and her mother, are doing nicely and are likely to recover. Savignac, the husband of the former, is still at large.

Baby Cast Away.

Windsor, Sept. 26.—The body of a new-born baby was found in the river near Grassy Island Monday. An examination revealed that it was alive when placed in the water.

Babe Drinks Acid.

Brockville, Sept. 26.—Robert Ames, aged two years, got possession of a bottle of carbolic acid and drank considerable of the poison. He lingered for a few hours.

F. C. Wade Succeeds Mr. Duff.

Vancouver, Sept. 26.—F. C. Wade, formerly of Toronto, will succeed Mr. Justice Duff on the supreme court bench of British Columbia.

The Methodist Conference.

Montreal, Sept. 26.—With the acceptance of the report on the superannuation fund most of the important business of the general conference of the Methodist Church was completed yesterday. Elections are going forward and there are routine and committee reports to keep the conference in session over Thursday.

The report of the committee was adopted. Aggregate payments remain as as present. Annuitants of 35 years service get $12 or $13 extra, and those under 35 years are decreased by $13 a year.

C. P. R. Gives $200,000.

Winnipeg, Sept. 26.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and William Whyte, president and second vice-president, respectively, of the C. P. R., met the mayor and aldermen of Winnipeg informally yesterday afternoon, and Sir Thomas, on behalf of his company, made a voluntary donation of $200,000 towards assisting the city in securing an adequate and suitable water supply.

Marries to Spite His Wife.

St. Catharines, Sept. 26.—George William Gough, to spite his wife, formerly Miss Ethel Blackwood, who is said to have run away with one of the boarders, married a girl, Mary Montanio, and now he is resting in the county jail, awaiting trial on the charge of bigamy.

Drunk; Shoots Policeman.

Fort William, Sept. 26.—Policeman Miller was shot Monday night by a drunken man he was arresting at West Fort. The bullet went through his right side, inflicting a painful but not dangerous wound. The officer placed the man under arrest.

Fire In Amherst, N. S.

Amherst, N. S., Sept. 26.—E. J. Hilliker & Co.'s extensive buildings were totally destroyed by fire yesterday. One hundred and fifty men were employed in the factory. The company's loss is about $40,000, with insurance for about one-half.

Cuba Revolution.

The popular impression concerning the Cuban revolution is that it is essentially the old revolution of Spanish times over again. There is, to be sure, a change of Government, and the former dependency of Spain is called a republic, but the differences are only superficial. The real factors are what they always have been—a turbulent lot of ignorant negro field laborers, under the leadership of guerilla chieftains and discontented politicians, and the conservative classes who desire the preservation of order and who adhere to a Government that is able to control elections by fraudulent methods that are held to be Spanish inheritance.

A pretty thorough exposition of the idea appears in the last issue of The Outlook, which indicates that, aside from racial weaknesses and bad political traditions, there can be no adequate cause for the uprising. Trade has grown, there has been a boom in railroad building, immigration has been as great proportionally as in the United States. But Palma went over from the Liberals to the Moderates, and his sudden change "was followed by the resignation of his Cabinet, by the selection of a new body of administrators, and this in turn by the wholesale removal, over the entire island, of municipal officers who represented the Liberal party in peace and the revolutionary army in the period which succeeded the rising of 1895." The Liberals, being dished pursued the usual course and latterly economic conditions have been favorable to their designs. The price of both sugar and tobacco has fallen, planters are in difficulties, plantation hands are unemployed, and the raw material for a rebel army is provided.

If such an explanation of causes is accepted without qualifications it becomes apparent at once that the recurrence of revolution at short intervals is probable, especially in view of the fact that a large part of Cuba is a wilderness, beautifully adapted to the needs of cutthroats and plantation burners. But as against the element from which the revolutionary armies are made there is an increase of the other elements. "Cuba is now two-thirds white, though in 1846 the races were evenly divided." Immigration, heavy investments of capital, extension of railroads, the spread of education where it was almost unknown should strengthen the forces of law and order, and if the probabilities of insurrection should diminish there would be hope of cleaner politics generally.

The balance of the pipe now lying on west Bridge St., Mr. Thomson says, will be used on Dunbar street.

Cement is the coming building material. Railroads are renewing their steel iron and stone piers, abutments culverts, etc., with it. Drop a sack of dry cement in the bottom of a river, says the New York Press, and in a few minutes you have a solid stone that never will wear away. Drop 1,000 sacks on top of it and round it and presently you will have a foundation that will sustain for all time a million-ton bridge.

Somebody writes thus from this city to a Toronto paper:

"Several years ago I sold my farm and stock for thirteen thousand dollars, and bought a house in Belleville, assessed for thirteen hundred dollars. This amount I am assessed for as real estate. The balance is invested in mortgages, for which I receive an income of $500 per year, which is my living. Now, what I want to know, can the city legally tax me on the income, without allowing me any exemption to live on whatever? My health is not the best."

This was the answer he received:

"Yes, there is no exemption on income over $300 coming from mortgages."

At the Knox College conference in Toronto yesterday, Rev. Dr. Milligan, speaking on the question, "Should questions of interest be discussed in the pulpit?" said that in church men met to worship, not to discuss party politics. Great principles might be advocated, but a man should not in the pulpit expound his special views on politics. If a clergyman wanted to discuss political matters, let him go on the public platform and do it as a private citizen, not as a minister. Great public questions, such as involved a great marked evil, might claim attention in the pulpit, but it all depended mainly upon the spirit and tact of the man. A preacher of strong spiritual bent might treat such a theme in a becoming and helpful way, while one who lacked those qualities would rather do harm by touching them. Dr. Milligan's last sentence seems to leave the matter very much open, for, of course, every preacher is of "a strong spiritual bent."

A Curious Case

Ottawa, Sept. 25.—A curious case was before Judge Anglin, at the Assizes to-day. The Grant sisters, Misses Ellen, Theresa and Catherine, furriers, of Ottawa, and a fourth, Mrs. Daniel McCallum, of St. Thomas, Ont., want $5,000 damages because Robert Brown, marble cutter, Bay street, removed a tombstone from their family plot in Notre Dame Cemetery.

Miss Theresa Grant told of entering into an agreement to purchase a monument in 1899. She was questioned at length, and at times her evidence was not quite clear. She told the court that the monument, including corner-stones and everything, and the inscribing of names of deceased relatives, was to cost $85. Of this $74 had been paid and the statement of claim set forth that the balance had been offered. She claimed that in 1903 Brown had forcibly gone to the cemetery and removed the stone to his place of business at the corner of Bay and Sparks streets. She and other members of the family had suffered great humiliation and disgrace through this, the more so as the names remained on the monument some time after it was removed to Brown's shop. For the alleged desecration of the family plot, the disgrace and effect on their health, the plaintiffs sued for $5,000. Brown's defence is that he made efforts to get his money, and when he could not, removed the stone. He makes a curious claim in his statement of defence when he asks $10 for retaking, $10 for relettering, and $20 loss, as he had to sell the monument for $135 instead of $155, as he first asked.

The verdict will be rendered to-morrow.

Wedding Bells.

GRAHAM—PARKS.

A large and fashionable wedding took place on Wednesday evening, Sept. 19th, 1906, at 8 o'clock, when Miss Carrie L. Parks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Parks, of Plainfield, was married to Mr. Richard Thomas Graham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Graham, of Tweed. The ceremony took place on the verandah, and was performed by the pastor of the bride. Rev. W. H. Buckler. Miss Porter, cousin of the groom, played the wedding march, while about one hundred and eighty guests were assembled on the lawn. The bride, who was given away by her brother, Mr. Blake Parks, looked extremely pretty in her wedding gown of cream crepe de chene. The waist was very dainty, the yoke being of tucked white chiffon and Eton jacket of baby Irish lace. She also wore the traditional bridal veil and carried a bouquet of white roses, tied with white satin ribbon and wore lilies of the valley in her hair. The bridesmaid, Miss Della Hall, looked very charming and graceful in a handsome dress of cream crepe de chene, trimmed with baby Irish lace. She also carried a bouquet of white roses, tied with pink satin ribbon. The best man was Mr W. H. Morton, of Thomasburg. At the conclusion of the ceremony the guests sat down to a magnificent supper, which was held in the drive house, on the lawn, the same being artistically decorated in white and green. The evening was pleasantly spent in music and song. Seldom has a bride received so many costly and beautiful presents. The groom's present to the bride was a gold watch and chain; to the bridesmaid a gold brooch set with pearls and opals; to the groomsman a pair of cuff links. Mr. and Mrs. Graham will reside in Tweed.

What Part ?

What particular part of the nerve-centres should we expect to have the greatest influence in affecting and controlling the general nervous system?

Reasonably it would be the largest and most sensitive. Well now, of all the centres in the nervous system, the largest most delicate sense, the sense most constantly in use, the largest brain "gray-matter" area is that of SIGHT.

For an average of 16 hours daily continuously, the feeling in the visual centres is constant. No other sense in the nerve centres is capable of such continued endurance.

With the proper glasses this severe drain upon the brain and nerves is prevented from causing a breakdown in the general health.

BASEBALL.

Pea Canners Were Trimmed.

A goodly number of spectators yesterday afternoon assembled at the Driving Park to witness a baseball match played between the Maple Leaf team, of this city, and the Picton team. Considerable interest was manifested in the game owing to the fact that when the local team visited Picton they were defeated, and they were determined, if at all possible, to reverse the result. And they did. The game was by no means a first-class exhibition of ball, as many errors were recorded against the players. In the first innings the Maple Leafs virtually won the game by securing five runs to the visitors' nil. Collier, the south-paw twirler for the Picton team, is looked upon as being one of the best pitchers in this section of the country, but yesterday he was certainly erratic and gave a number of men bases on balls. His throwing to bases was also wild. Both teams fielded well in spots Draycott, for the home team, pitched an excellent game, and Ross, catcher, gave him good support. The result of the match was that the Maple Leafs scored 13 runs to Picton's 10, and the winners did not find it necessary to take their last innings. Owing to the game not starting on time it was not concluded until six o'clock.

Mr. Wm. Cochrane was umpire, and he was very impartial.

The teams were:

Picton — Curry 1b, Wilder c, Watson 2b, Collier p, Sullivan rf, Ilsey ss, Derry cf, Burns 3b, Croft lf.

Maple Leafs — Cornell cf, Young 1b, Coon 2b, Ross c, Bawden lf, Quince, ss, Tuite rf, Connell 3b, Draycott p.

Score by Innings.

Picton — 0 3 1 0 1 0 3 0 2 — 10
Maple Leafs—5 0 0 3 0 1 4 0 x — 13

HOCKEY.

Game May be Semi-Professional.

Hockey may come under the sway of semi-professional ideas in the coming season. A prominent resident of the Metropolis and close to the hockey men, states that the clubs of that city were prepared to follow in the footsteps of the lacrosse people. If such is the case, the athletic atmosphere in Eastern Canada will be cleared, as the football men are only too anxious to take up the idea.

The Montreal man stated that Gardiner, Pitre, Laviolette, Liffiton and several other men now under the ban of the Canadian Amateur Union will remain in Canada this winter, as they have tempting offers from home clubs. Last season there were many open charges of professionalism made against certain teams, and it looks as if the men behind the clubs intend to be in a position to snap their fingers this season at the amateur bodies.

Another interesting rumor gathered from the same source is that there will not be a Wanderer team this year unless a new body of players is secured. It is stated that the men of last year are not at all satisfied with the treatment received from the management and will desert in a body to the Montreal club. However, it is unlikely that the backers of the champions will allow the franchise and the big cup to slip away without a big effort being made to place a winning seven on the ice.

LACROSSE.

Jury Disagreed in Finlayson Case.

Toronto, Sept. 26. — The jury hearing the case of George Finlayson, the Montreal lacrosse player, accused of assaulting Charles Querrie, of the Tecumseh Lacrosse Club, failed to agree on a verdict and Finlayson was remanded till called on. The jury was out about two hours.

Finlayson and Thomas Carlind, President of the Montreal Lacrosse Club, left for Montreal last night.

"I was somewhat surprised at Querrie saying that the case should not have been brought into court, but that the matter should have been left to the Lacrosse Association to deal with," said Judge Winchester, in charging the jury. "Such a claim was entirely wrong, and baseball, lacrosse and other sports must be amenable to law. This was a matter for the authorities to deal with. There was no doubt of the actual bodily harm, because Querrie was marked for life. Lacrosse is known as a rough game and it is time to put a stop to rough playing in any kind of games."

Charles Querrie admitted that he was very much against the police prosecuting players committing assaults at lacrosse games. He thought it was the duty of the association to punish Finlayson if the circumstances warranted it. He said that he knew very little of the assault.

Finlayson considered that he was making a proper check, when he accidentally struck Querrie. Mr. Drayton asked him if it wasn't an "old game" on the part of some players to try and put out a good player on an opposing team by disabling him in some way. The witness replied that he never indulged in that kind of play.

Those who gave evidence for the Crown were Messrs. J. G. Ramsden, Ald Hay, Percy Quinn, Dr. Stacey and Detective George Guthrie.

SONS OF BRITAIN MET IN ST. PAUL.

SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL ADDRESSED THE FIRST MEETING —SAYS UNITED STATES FORCED CANADA INTO ITS PRESENT TRADE POSITION.

(St. Paul Pioneer Press.)

Over sixty former British subjects, including Englishmen, Scotchmen, Welshmen and Canadians, met last evening at 624 Endicott building, and took the first steps toward the organization of a club to be known as the Sons of the British Empire. Most of those present were from St. Paul, but there were several present from Minneapolis, and with the assurance that there are many former Britishers living in Minneapolis who wish to join, the club will be made a Twin City organization.

No plan of organization was perfected or suggested last evening, but a committee on organization was appointed by the temporary chairman, C. B. Hamilton, with instructions to report at an adjourned meeting one week from last night at a place to be designated by the committee. The committee is composed of L. G. Hoffmann, George W. Dodds, John Copeland, L. L. May and Dr. Howard Lankester. From the enthusiasm shown last evening the club should be a great success. It was decided that last night's meeting place would not be large enough for the next meeting and another hall will be engaged.

Perhaps much of the enthusiasm last evening was due to the presence of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, former Premier of Canada, who is visiting in St. Paul. Mr. Bowell made an interesting address, in which he heartily approved the motives which drew the men together.

It is the intention of the club to keep out of politics. Several of those present last evening stated that they would join the club only on that condition.

After the organization is perfected, it is the intention of the club to hold an elaborate banquet, to which Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Premier of Canada, will be invited.

TRADE WITH CANADA.

In speaking of the present relations between the United States and Canada, Sir Mackenzie Bowell said:

"It is fitting that you former British subjects should have some organization as the one proposed, because no matter where you go or what country you adopt, as good Englishmen you will always have a sense of love and pride for your native land. It is right that you should be true to your adopted country. Every man who was a good citizen in his own country will make a good citizen in the country of his adoption and every man who was a poor citizen in his own country does not amount to much wherever he goes.

"The present relations between the United States and England are for peace, harmony and the adoption of a policy which leads to peaceful relations.

"In regard to the present trade relations between the United States and Canada, the United States drove Canada to its present policy when it cut off its products and adopted a policy of higher protection. Since that time the Canadians have been forced to produce those protected articles themselves, and now are not dependent upon the United States as they were a few years ago. I am willing and anxious to extend trade between the United States and Canada, and although we are not dependent upon the United States the way we were before the reciprocity treaty was annuled, we are almost one people and the relations between the two countries should be most intimate. There is no reason why Canada and America should ever have trouble that cannot be arbitrated, as the tendency of the age is against war."

CANADA AMERICANIZED.

Sir Mackenzie called attention to the statement that is often made that the large number of Americans who are settling the Northwest country will eventually Americanize the country. He stated that the country is already Americanized so far as the methods of living are concerned, but that the country will no more be Americanized as to form of Government than the United States will be Canadianized by the Canadians who come here.

"Some of our best and most influential citizens are of American birth," he said.

"I believe it is natural that Englishmen and Canadians should move to America and that Americans should take up their residence in Canada. It is a characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon race never to be content to settle down and plug away. They must be moving. One reason why so many young Canadians succeed here and why so many young Americans succeed so well in Canada is that when they are away from home they will do that which their pride will not permit them to do while at home, and thus they prosper."

In speaking of our relations with Cuba, Sir Mackenzie thought it would be to the advantage of Cuba to come under English or American protection. "But I question if it wouldn't tend to weaken the military power of this country if such a move were made. I have somewhat democratic views in this respect," he said. He thought that when the Philippines are thoroughly under American control that they would become wealthy and more prosperous.

Sir Mackenzie, in referring to our primary system, thought that we have a queer method of selecting our candidates. "Most intelligent Americans who become Canadians are of the opinion that our constitution is more democratic than their own after a careful study. The Canadian people have a more intimate and direct power over the powers that be than do the Americans.

AQUATICS.

Harvard Men Are Not Good Losers.

New York, September 24. —Seven members of the Harvard crew arrived home yesterday on the American line steamer St. Louis. A few friends of the oarsmen were at the dock, but there were no demonstrations. The members who returned were Francis M. Blagden, E. D. Morgan, Sidney W. Fish, R. M. Tappan, John Richardson, jr., Robert L. Bacon and Philip W. Flint. Capt. O. D. Tilley and D. S. Newhall will return by a later steamer. Capt. Tilley's mother and sister are residing in England, and he will remain a couple of weeks with them. Robert M. Tappan, in discussing the crew's defeat by Cambridge, said:

"I do not want it to be understood that we are trying to find excuses for not winning from Cambridge. We rowed the best we knew how, and lost, but there are one or two conditions which favored our opponents, and which, had they been reversed, would have changed the result of the contest. The winning of the toss gave Cambridge the advantage of about a length; then, in addition, we lost fully another length through our coxswain steering wide at the bend of the river, and, in addition to this, our lack of knowledge as to the tidal conditions of the course gave our opponents a big advantage.

"Had the race been rowed at New London, or had both crews been equally unfamiliar with the course, I am satisfied the result would have been reversed. Our time trial was very much better than that of Cambridge, and while time trials do not win races, yet they give an indication of the speed and stamina of a crew, and show that, all things being equal, we had an excellent chance to win.

"There was a big difference in the condition of the two crews at the end of the race. The pace had told on Cambridge to such an extent that several members of their crew missed their strokes, and the boat rocked a deal. They were able to steady it in time to hold us. The Cambridge men were thoroughly exhausted after crossing the line, completely rowed out, and that is sufficient evidence that we pushed them the entire distance. Our boys were very tired, too, but they were all able to keep their seats.

"There is no doubt about the Cambridge crew being a splendid one. Every man in the boat was a finished oarsman, and not an ounce of unnecessary strength was expended. Of course, they have one advantage at Oxford and Cambridge, in that nearly every student is an expert waterman before he enters the university. It is a part of a boy's education in England, and they take advantage of it every time they go out on the water.

"Every courtesy was extended to us, and every assistance before the race. I think it very probable that the race can be made an annual event, which would do much toward helping college rowing."

Funeral Reform

(Christian Guardian.)

At the twentieth annual convention of the cemetery superintendents, held a week or so ago, a suggestion was made that is well worthy of consideration. As every one knows, the expenses following a death in a family are oftentimes excessive, and quite beyond the financial ability of people of moderate incomes. Extravagant charges on the part of undertakers, and the following out of the expensive and elaborate customs sanctioned by long usage, have been responsible for much needless pinching and suffering after the loved one has gone. The proposal of this convention is to have the cemeteries take entire charge of funeral rites, and their estimate is that a saving of nearly seventy-five per cent. might be realized by this method, and still fair remuneration be given for the work done. Whether that estimate is an extravagant one we are not in a position to say, but we do know that a movement in favor of greater simplicity and less expense in this connection is much needed. Surely ostentation and display are out of place at a funeral, if anywhere, and yet many of the customs connected with our burial rites are absurdly expensive. The instructions given by the late Dr. Langtry regarding his own funeral serve to call attention to this matter, and show at least that some are thinking seriously in the direction of a much needed reform.

The Bancroft Fair

The Bancroft Fall fair of 1906, says the Times, is now a matter of history and will be remembered as one of the most successful since the society was organized in 1903.

The weather was ideal, and there were probably 3,000 people on the grounds. Fifteen coaches came in over the C. O. R., and from early morning a constant stream of rigs poured in from the surrounding country.

There was a slight falling off in the exhibits in the hall, due to the fact that the show was two weeks earlier than in former years and the farmers had not threshed their grain. The extremely warm weather seriously affected the show of live stock, many intending exhibitors thinking it unwise to attempt to bring stock any distance. On the whole the work of the export judges —Messrs. Mallory, Belleville; Yuill, Almonte; and Bradley, Oshawa, was good—although the latter came in for a good deal of criticism among the horsemen for the manner in which he placed his awards.

The Madoc band did their part in helping to enliven the proceedings, and Bensley, "the man with the wheel," gave a clever performance during the afternoon.

The big attraction, however, was the baseball match between Maynooth and Frankford, and although the boys from the north fought it out all the way they were up against a strong combination and were defeated by a score of 18 to 5. The game was called at the end of the seventh innings in order to allow the Frankford team to catch the train. Mr. Jas. Hurst, of Belleville, made a capable umpire.

The receipts amounted to $538.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. EDMUND DRACUP.

Mrs. Edmund Dracup passed away on Sunday, Sept. 16th. Mrs. Dracup a little over a year ago had quite a severe illness, but had sufficiently recovered to enjoy fairly good health. On Wednesday previous to her death she went to Norwood to visit her aunt, Mrs. James Vandervoort. On Sunday she went to church in the morning, spent the afternoon in her usual health, and was preparing to go to church in the evening, when she was suddenly taken with a paralytic stroke and died in less than two hours. The family was notified of the sad news and the remains were brought home on Monday and interment took place on Wednesday at Wellman's Corners cemetery. The late Mrs. Dracup was the daughter of Francis Vandervoort, and was born and died on the same farm, in the seventh concession of Rawdon. She was married some forty-five years ago to Edmund Dracup, who passed away over eight years ago. To them were born four children, three sons and one daughter, Walter, Charles and Selbourne, all of Rawdon, and Mrs. H. B. Chisholm, of Thurlow. She had been an active member of the Methodist church all her life.

REV. NEIL A. McDIARMID.

Rev. Neil A. McDiarmid, late Methodist minister at Madoc, an ex-president of the Bay of Quinte conference, and chairman of the Madoc district, after an illness of six weeks' duration from typhoid-pneumonia, passed consciously and peacefully away on Sunday last, at noon. The funeral took place from the parsonage to the Methodist Church, where the remains were viewed by many friends for some time preceding the obsequies. The funeral service, held on Tuesday, in the church, was conducted by Rev. J. P. Wilson, B. A., ex-president of the Bay of Quinte conference, who was assisted by Rev. Mr. McKay, Presbyterian minister at Madoc, and Rev. Messrs. Burns, Connell, Balfour, Kenney, Brown, Sanderson and Leitch. Many feeling and kindly eulogies were made upon the deceased gentleman. A large congregation, including many ministers, was present, and every evidence of deep sorrow at Rev. Mr. McDiarmid's death and sympathy with the family was shown. A widow, son and two daughters survive. The son, Frederick, is a barrister in Fenelon Falls. The widow and daughters remain at home.

SHAKESPEARE'S LIMITATIONS.

When Shakespeare wrote his plays and things
He had no rhyming dictionary,
And no thesaurus lent him wings
By helping him his words to vary;
No ready reference books he had,
All nicely filled with apt quotations—
I grant his work is not so bad
Considering those limitations.

When William Shakespeare wrote his verse
His gray goose quill was apt to linger,
He had no fountain pen—and worse,
No type machine he had to finger.
These things had been a precious boon
To him, had he but known about them,
But William lived a while too soon,
Alas he had to do without them!

To-day we've every kind of aid
To make the art of writing easy;
We've books of every kind and grade
To help us make our fancy breezy.
On prose and verse, both night and day,
The type-machines go clicking, clacking—
Yet Shakespeare beats us still, they say.
I wonder what the deuce is lacking?

—Denis A. McCarthy.

Mr. Bryan at St. Louis asked how many trust magnates President Roosevelt had put in the penitentiary in his five years of power? The answer is none, and the situation is embarrassing.

Mr. Hyman told the Elgin electors the other day that with an expenditure of eighty millions a year it was not surprising that scandals should arise. How would it do to escape the scandals by reducing the expenditure to the needs of honest Government, as the Liberal platform suggested?

The ill-repute of American food goods in London will be understood by the returns of one agency for a Chicago packing company. The company had leased an extensive shop on Regent street. During the month of August 30 customers entered the premises. The business done was just five pounds less than nothing — that is to say, a grocer, the only purchaser, who had bought five pounds worth of the goods, brought them back.

A Toronto paper says: The packing of some blueberries from the Province of Quebec on the Toronto markets lately reminds one of the early ages. Lumber an inch thick, slabs and uneven pieces were nailed into boxes to hold this tempting fruit. Good careful packing would have increased sales immensely.

Secretary Taft, who weighs three hundred pounds, has been sent to Cuba to pacify that distracted country. Even if he doesn't wholly succeed in his mission, the genial secretary will tilt whatever side of the island he happens to be on toward the United States.

Toronto's medical health officer is quoted as saying that one-third of the milk sold in his city is watered, and that the farmers do the watering, sometimes to the extent of 12 1-2 per cent. of the contents of a can. Parliament some years ago appointed a special committee to investigate frauds on farmers. There is cause in some parts of the country, it would seem, to investigate frauds by farmers, and it might be most effectively done by a police magistrate.

Everybody knows that the average mad dog of the street or public place is no madder than the people who run away from and occasionally shoot him. But it is news to learn, on the authority of "Our Dumb Animals," that the average human hydrophobia case is a pure fake, and that probably there is no such thing as hydrophobia at all. The theory, apparently, is that what passes for hydrophobia is a nervous affection induced by fear and auto-suggestion. Dr. Charles W. Dulles, who has been appointed examiner for a number of medical societies to investigate alleged rabies cases, inclines to think that there is no such specific disease. The usual symptoms, inability to swallow water and so forth, can, it is said, be induced by certain diseases of the lungs.

NEW YORK DAILY MARKET.

New York, Sept. 25.—Butter—Steady, unchanged; receipts, 12,849.

Cheese—Firm, unchanged; receipts, 7033.

Eggs—Firm, unchanged; receipts, 12,686.

CATTLE MARKETS.

British Markets Unchanged—Sheep Lower, Hogs Higher at Chicago.

London, Sept. 25.—Canadian cattle in the British markets are quoted at 10c to 11½c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 9¼c to 9⅝c per pound.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, Sept. 25.—Receipts of live stock at the city market since Friday last, as reported by the railways, were 61 car loads, composed of 774 cattle, 265 hogs, 1480 sheep and lambs and 112 calves.

Exporters.

Two or three loads sold at $4.50 to $4.60 per cwt. Export bulls are worth from $3.50 to $4 per cwt.

Butchers.

The best butchers sold from $4.25 to $4.50; medium at $3.75 to $4; common, $3.25 to $3.50; cows from $2.50 to $3.25; canners, $1.75 to $2.25 per cwt. It will be seen that the bulk of the butchers' cattle sold under $4 per cwt., few sales being quoted above that price.

Feeders and Stockers.

Trade in feeders and stockers was limited, few fresh lots being offered, the bulk of sales being cattle held over from last week. Harry Murby, who bought about 300 fresh cattle, reports little change in prices as follows: Best feeders, 900 to 1050 lbs. each, at $3.40 to $3.75; feeders, 800 to 900 lbs. each, at $3.10 to $3.40; best stockers, 600 to 700 lbs., at $2.90 to $3.10; common to medium stockers, $2.25 to $2.75 per cwt.

Milch Cows.

Trade was good, considering the numbers and the quality of those offered. Prices ranged from $30 to $53 each.

Veal Calves.

The market continues to be strong, and prices ranged all the way from $3 to $7 per cwt., the bulk selling at $5 to $6 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Market strong and prices firmer both for sheep and lambs. Export ewes sold at $4.25 to $4.50; export bucks sold at $3 to $3.50; lambs for butchers' purposes were firmer at $5.50 to $6.25, the bulk going from $5.50 to $5.90; feeding lambs sold at $5.25 to $5.75, the bulk going at about $5.50 per cwt.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris reports prices 10c per cwt. higher, at $6.50 for selects and $6.25 for light fats.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET

East Buffalo, Sept. 25.—Cattle—Receipts, 150 head; fairly active and a shade easier; prices unchanged; veals slow and 25c lower, $4.50 to $8.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 3300 head; active; pigs steady; others a shade higher; heavy and mixed, $6.95 to $7, a few $7.05; pigs, $6.70 to $6.75; roughs, $5.50 to $5.80; stags, $4.25 to $4.75; dairies, $6 to $6.85.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 2400 head; sheep slow; lambs active and 5c to 10c higher; lambs, $5 to $8; Canada lambs, $7.00 to $7.80.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, Sept. 25.—Beeves—Receipts, 202; no trading; feeling steady; exports to-day, 900 cattle and 2000 quarters of beef; to-morrow, 3400 quarters of beef.

Calves—Receipts, 304, mainly consigned direct; steady; veals, $5.50 to $9; no really prime here; good westerns, $5; grassers nominal.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 1216; sheep steady; lambs firm to 15c higher; sheep, $4 to $4.50, all common; culls, $1.50; lambs, $6 to $8.25; culls, $4 to $5.50; Canada lambs, $8.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 2490; market steady; state and Pennsylvania hogs, $6.95 to $7.10.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, Sept. 25.—Cattle—Receipts, 13,000; steady but weak; common to prime steers, $3.75 to $6.95; cows, $2.70 to $4.75; heifers, $2.60 to $5.35; bulls, $2.40 to $4.50; calves, $3 to $8; stockers and feeders, $2.60 to $4.50.

Hogs—Receipts, about 14,000; steady to 5c higher; choice to prime heavy, $5.50 to $6.75; medium to good heavy, $6.30 to $6.40; butchers' weights, $6.65 to $6.75; good to choice mixed, $6.40 to $6.60; packers, $4.65 to $6.50, pigs, $5.80 to $6.50.

Sheep—Receipts, about 30,000; steady; others weak to 10c lower; sheep, $4.50 to $5.75; yearlings, $5.75 to $6; lambs, $6 to $7.65.

CHEESE MARKETS.

Campbellford, Sept. 25.—Ten hundred and seventy boxes offered. Sales: Hodgsons, 280; Cook, 275 at 12 15-16c; Brenton, 180; Magrath, 90 at 12⅞c; balance refused same.

An Open Verdict.

St. Catharines, Sept. 26.—The inquest touching the death of Clifford Liddycoat, shot at Thorold on Friday last by James Wilkinson, was concluded last night before Coroner Herod. The jury returned an open verdict, saying the death may have been accidental, and adding a caution against persons allowing boys the free use of fire arms.

The Atlanta Race Riots.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 26.—Yesterday morning two negroes who were creating trouble were killed by officers after a desperate fight. The police captured ten of the attacking party which killed Policeman Heard in South Atlanta. In the Brownsville suburb one negro was killed and 250 negroes placed under arrest.

Hecla Furnaces are fuel savers.

Because the cast iron combustion chamber is corrugated in such a way as to add about ⅓ to the heating surface, with the result that from the same fire a "Hecla" will extract a proportionately greater amount of heat than will a furnace built with a smooth combustion chamber.

After Treatment.

He was surprised at how the sores healed—"I took your New Method Treatment for a serious blood disease with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians, taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the New Method Treatment for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. My boy, three years old, is sound and healthy. I certainly can recommend your treatment with all my heart. You can refer any person to me privately, but you can use this testimonial as you wish." W. The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

ed on her foremost, her dainty gaff sails vanished and were replaced by serviceable trysails, and the midship house was soiled by the addition of a coat of crude white lead above the trimly polished teak and straddled over by a clumsy iron bridge defended by ill-fitting canvas dodgers and awnings.

There was no making the expert believe, of course, that she was a mere trader that had always been a trader. But to the nautical eye she was unsuspicious; she looked one of those ex-yachts that have been sold out of the petticoat cruising service of Cowes, and had been adapted to the more homely needs of the mercantile marine; and in the Mediterranean, the Australian seas and China waters, there are many of this breed of craft making a humble living for the owners. A couple of weeks' neglect will make any brasswork look unyachtlike, and a little withholding of the paint brush soon makes all small traders wonderfully kin.

Rechristening of course is but a clumsy device, and one which is (the gentle novelist notwithstanding) most seldom used. A ship at her birth is given a name, and endowed with a passport in the shape of "papers." Without her papers she cannot enter a civilized port; she could not "clear" at any custom-house; and to attempt doing so would be a blatant confession of "something wrong." So when the paint brushes went round, the name Vestris on counter boats and lifebuoys was exchanged for Governor L. C. Walthrop (which seemed to carry a slight American flavor), a half sigh went up from some of the ship's company, and a queer little thrill passed through the rest, according to their temperaments. They were making themselves sea pariahs from that moment onwards, until they should deem fit to discard the alias.

Capt. Kettle himself finished lettering the last of the lifebuoys and put down his brush and shook his head.

Carnforth was watching him from a deck chair. "You don't like it?" he said.

"I never did such a thing before," said Kettle, "and I never heard of it being done and come to any good. We're nobodies now, and it's everyone's business to meddle with a nobody. If you're a somebody, only the proper people can interfere."

"I can't help it," said Carnforth. "The Vestris is well known at home, and I'm well known, too; and we've just got to see this business through one way or the other, under pursers' names. She's the Governor L. C. Walthrop, and I'm Mr. Martin and you can be what you like."

"I'll still use my own name, sir. I've carried it a good many years now, through most kinds of weather, and it's had so many stones thrown at it that a few more won't hurt. If we get through with this little game, all right: if we get interrupted, I guess the only thing left will be to attend our own funerals. I'm not going to taste the inside of a Japanese jail at any price."

"I never saw such a fellow for looking at the gloomy side of things," said Carnforth irritably.

"It's the gloomy side that's mostly come my way, sir."

"I wish to goodness I'd never been idiot enough to come out here on this harebrained scheme."

"Why!" said Kettle in surprise, "you've got the remedy to your hand. You give your orders, Mr. Carnforth, and I'll boutship this minute and take you home."

"And don't you want to go through with it, skipper?"

"I don't see my tastes need be mentioned," said the sailor stiffly. "You are my owner, sir. I'm here to do as I'm bid."

"Capt. Owen Kettle," said the other, with a laugh that had got some sour earnest at the back of it, "you're a cantankerous little beggar. I sailed with you before, and found you the most delightful of shipmates. I sail with you now, and you keep me always at boathook's length away from you. Be hanged if I see what I've done to stiffen you."

"Sir," said Kettle, "on the Sultan of Borneo you were my guest; on this yacht you are my owner; there's all the difference in the world."

"You wish to point out, I suppose, that a shipmaster looks upon an owner as his natural enemy, as he does the board of trade. Still, I don't think I personally have deserved that."

"I am as I have been made, sir, and I suppose I can't help it."

"You are a man with some wonderfully developed weaknesses. However, as to going back, I'm not going to stultify myself by doing that now. We'll see the thing through now, whatever happens."

Martin Carnforth nodded curtly, and got up and walked the deck. He was conscious of a fine sense of disappointment and disillusionment. He had started off on this expedition filled with a warm glow of romance. He had been crubbing along at distasteful business pursuits for the larger part of his life, and adventure, as looked at from the outside, had always lured him strongly. Once in Kettle's company he had tasted of the realities of adventure among Cuban revolutionists; had got back safely, and settled down to business again for a time; and then once more had grown restless. He had the virus of adventure in his blood, and he was beginning to learn that it was a cumulative poison.

So, once more he had started off, but this time he was being chilled from the outside. Properly treated, the prospects of the trip would have been rosy enough. Handled by Capt. Owen Kettle, the whole affair was made to assume the aspect of a commercial speculation of more than doubtful sanity. And, as he walked, he cursed Kettle from his inmost heart for bringing him to earth and keeping him there among sordid considerations.

The little mariner himself was seated in a deck chair under an awning, turning in the frayed sleeve of a white drill jacket. His sewing tackle stood in a pictured tin biscuit box on the deck beside him. He unripped the old stitches with a pocket knife, and resewed the sleeves with exquisite accuracy and neatness. His fierce eyes were intent on the work. To look at his nimble fingers, one would think that they had never held anything more deadly than the ordinary utensils of tailoring. Carnforth broke off his walk, and stood for a moment beside him.

"Skipper," he said, "you're a queer mixture. You've lived one of the most exciting lives any man's ever gone through, and yet you seem to turn your more peaceful moments to tailoring or poetry indifferently, and enjoy them with gusto."

"Mr. Carnforth," said the little sailor "I guess we're all discontented animals. We always like most what we get least of."

"Well, I suppose that's intended to sum up my character as well as your own," said Carnforth, and sat down and watched the sewing.

The mate on the yacht's upper bridge picked up the reef with his glasses that evening a couple of hours after sundown. The night was velvet black, with only a few stars showing. A sullen groundswell rolled the seas into oily hills and valleys, and the reefs ahead showed themselves in a blaze of phosphorescence where the swell broke into thunderous surf. It seemed as though the yacht was steaming towards the glow and din of some distant marine volcano. The watch below were all on deck, drawn there by curiosity, and along one bulwark the watch on duty were handling the deep-sea lead. At intervals came the report, trolled in a minor key, of "No bottom."

The engines were running half speed ahead, and presently they stopped, and the order was given for the yacht to lay to where she was till daybreak. A light breeze had sprung up, bringing with it a queer taint into the sweet sea air.

For a long time Carnforth had been snuffing diligently. "I'm sure I smell something," he said at last.

"It's there, said Kettle. "Have you ever been in a north country. Norwegian port, sir?"

"By Jove! yes, skipper. It's just the same. Decaying fish."

"There's not another stink like it on this earth. You know what it means here?"

"I suppose some other fellows are in the lagoon before us and they're rotting out shell."

"That's it," said Kettle: "and we're going to have our work cut out to get a cargo. But we'll do it, Mr. Carnforth, never you fear. I suppose there'll be trouble, but that'll have to be got over. We've not come all this way to go back with empty holds."

Carnforth looked at the little man slily. Here was a very different Capt. Kettle from the fellow who had been mending the white drill coat half a dozen hours before. He was rubbing his hands, his eye was bright, his whole frame had stiffened. He was whistling a jaunty tune and was staring keenly out at the phosphorescent blaze of the breakers as though he could see what was behind them, and was planning to overcome all obstacles. An hour before Martin Carnforth had been cursing the tedium of his expedition. A little chill went through him now. Before many more hours were past he had a strong notion he would be scared at its liveliness. He had seen Capt. Kettle's methods before when things went contrary to his plans and wishes.

Slowly the night dragged through, and by degrees the blackness thinned. The eastern waters grew gray and the sky above them changed to dull sulphur yellow. Then a coal of crimson fire burned out on the horizon and grew quickly to a great half dish of scarlet; and then the rest of the sun was shot up, as an orange pip is slipped from the fingers; and it was brilliant, staring, tropical day.

For full an hour the yacht had been under weigh at half steam with lead going, circling round the noisy reefs. The place was alive with the shout of breakers and the scream of seafowl. Inside, beyond the hedge of spouting waters, were three small turtlebacks of yellow sand, and a lugger at anchor.

The water outside was clear as bottle-green glass, and of enormous depth. The only entrance to the lagoon was a narrow canal between the reefs, shown up vividly by the gap in the ring of creaming surf. It was not likely that any one from the lugger would lend a hand for pilotage—or be trusted if they offered. So Kettle steamed the yacht to some half-mile off the entrance, called away the whaleboat, and went off in her himself with a crew and a couple of leadsmen to survey the channel. He did it with all deliberation; returned; took his perch in the forecrosstrees, where he could see the coral floor through the clear water beneath, and conned the yacht in himself. Carnforth leant over the bridge-end and watched.

The coral floor with its wondrous growths came up towards him out of the deep water. The yacht rolled into the pass on the backs of the great ocean swells, and the reef-ends on either side boomed like a salute of heavy guns. The white froth of the surges spewed up against her sides, upon her deck planks. The stink of the place grew stronger every minute.

Then she shot through into a mirror of still, smooth water, slowed to half-speed, and with hand lead going diligently steamed up to an anchorage in 16 fathoms off one of the sandy islets. A white whaleboat put off from the lugger, rowed by three Kanakas, and by the time the yacht's cable was bitted, a man from her had stepped up the accommodation ladder, and was looking about him on deck.

He was a biggish man in striped pajamas, barefooted, roughly-bearded, and wearing a crumpled pith helmet well down on the back of his head. His face was burnt to a fine mahogany color by the sun, and, dangling over his chest at the end of a piece of fine sennit, were gold-rimmed eyeglasses which glittered like diamonds when they caught the sun. He touched his helmet to Kettle.

"You've brought a fine day with you, captain," said he.

"Rather warm," said Kettle. "I haven't looked at the glass this morning. I hope it's going to keep steady."

The visitor glanced round and sized up the yacht and its resources. "O, I should say it's likely to for the present. You've a nice little boat here, and a likely looking lot of men. You'll be having 10 of a crew all-told, captain, eh?"

"Thirteen," said Kettle.

"Humph, it's an unlucky number. Well, captain, if I were you I wouldn't stay here too long. The weather's a bit uncertain, you know, in these seas."

"We want some pearls and shell before we go."

"I might have guessed that. Well, it's a nuisance from our point of view, because we thought we'd the lagoon to ourselves if the Japs didn't interrupt. But, take the tip, captain, and don't be too greedy. If you stay too long, the glass may fall suddenly and——"

"Take care, my lad," snapped Kettle, "I'm a man that accepts threats from no man living."

"O, all right," said the stranger carelessly. "But who have we here?" And he stuck the glass into his eye and whistled.

Capt. Kettle made a formal introduction. "My owner, sir, Mr. Martin of New York."

"Humph!" said the visitor; "you used to be Carnforth up at Cambridge, didn't you? Mr. Carnforth, I remember, and M. might possibly stand for Martin."

Capt. Kettle smiled grimly and Carnforth swore.

"Bit of a surprise to find you pearl-poaching, Carnforth. I see your name in the Australian papers now and again, and got a notion you were something big at home. Had a bust-up?"

"No," said Carnforth. "I'm all right there. Come below and have a drink and talk. By the way, it's awfully rude of me; I haven't tumbled yet to who you are."

"Never mind my name," said the visitor coolly. "I don't suppose you'd remember me. I was a reading man up there, and you weren't. You did your best to torment my life out. I took a big degree and made a fizzle of after-life. You got plowed and became a commercial success. So, you see, we've little enough in common; and, besides, I was here first, and resent your coming."

"O, rubbish, man! Come below and have a cocktail."

"Thanks, no. I prefer not to be under the tie of bread and salt with—er—trade rivals." He dropped his eyeglass and walked to the head of the accommodation ladder. "Look here, Master Carnforth," he said, "I'll give you a useful tip. Clear out!" Then he went down into his whaleboat, and the brown men pulled him back to the lugger.

"Curse that beggar's impudence," said Carnforth, hotly. "I wonder who the deuce he is?"

"Maybe we'll find out," said Kettle. "I tried to catch your eye whilst he was speaking. If I had my way, he'd be on board now, kept snug till we were through with our business here. He'd have been a lot safer that way."

"O, no!" said Carnforth. "We couldn't have done the high-handed like that on the little he said. Wonder who he can be, though? Some poor beggar whose corns I trod on up at Cambridge. Well, anyway, 20 years and that beard have completely changed him out of memory. However, if he chooses to come round and be civil he can; and if he doesn't I won't worry. And now, captain—pearls. The sooner we get to work the more chance we have of getting a cargo under hatches and slipping away undisturbed."

"Right-o," said Capt. Kettle. "They've got the other two sandbanks, and, by the stink, they're doing a roaring business. We'll bag this empty one near us and set about fishing this very hour, and plant our shell to rot there. It'll smell a bit different to a rose garden, Mr. Carnforth, but it'll be a sight more valuable."

Then began a period of frantic toil and labor. Every man on board was "on shares," for it had pleased Carnforth's whim to use this old buccaneer's inventive. Half of the profits went to the ship, and the rest to the crew. Each man had so many shares, according to his rating. Carnforth himself, in addition to his earnings as owner, earned also as an ordinary seaman, and sweated, and strained like any of the hands. From an hour before daybreak to an hour after sunset he was away in the boats, under the dews of morn and eve, or the blazing torrent of midday sunshine. Every night he tumbled into his bed-place dog-tired, and exulting in his tiredness. Every morning he woke eager for the fierce toil. He was unshaven, sunburned, blood-smeared from the scratches of the shell, filthy with rank sea mud. But withal he was entirely happy.

Kettle toiled with equal vigor, working violently himself, and violently exhorting the others. Neither his arms nor his tongue were ever tired. But he was always neat, and seldom unclean. Dirt seemed to have an antipathy for the man, and against his dishevelled owner, he looked like a park dandy beside a ragpicker.

At the other side of the lagoon the white man from Cambridge, and a white friend, and their crew of 10 Kanakas, worked with similar industry. The ring of the lagoon was some half mile in diameter, with lanes of deep water running through its floor where divers could not work. There was no clashing of the two parties. One of these water lanes seemed to set out a natural boundary and neither transgressed it. On each submarine territory there was enough shell to work on for the present, and each party toiled with the same frantic energy, and spread out the shell on the sunbaked sandbanks, and poisoned heaven with the scent of decay. But there was no further intercourse between the two bodies of men, nor indeed any attempt at it. How the others were doing, the yacht's party neither knew nor cared. Theirs was a race against time for wealth, and not one striver among them all had leisure to be curious about his neighbors.

In a nicer life, the smells of the place would have offended them monstrously; here they were a matter for congratulation. The more the putrefaction, the more the profit. They ripped the shells from the sea and spread them upon the beaches. The roasting sun beat upon the spread out shellfish and melted away their soft tissues in horrible decay.

The value was all a gamble. There might be merely so much mother-o'-pearl for inlay work; or seed pearls such as the Chinese grind up for medicine; or larger pearls of any size and color and shape, from the humble opalescent sphere worth its merger half-a-crown, to the black pearl worth its score of pounds, or the great pear-shaped pink pearl worth a prince's ransom. It was all a gamble, but none the less fascinating for that. Carnforth was mad over the work; Kettle, with all his nonchalance gone, was nearly as bad.

But the process of realizing their wealth was none too fast, and, in fact, seemed to them tedious beyond words. Every filled shell, with its latest possibilities of treasure lying out there upon the sand, was so much capital left in a perilously insecure investment. They were so bitterly afraid of interruptions. The dark shadow of Japan was always before their eyes.

Still at last came the first moment of realization. They had toiled a month, and they had collected that day the fruits of their first day's labor. The mother-o'-pearl shell was packed in the hold; the little crop of pearls stood in a basin on the cabin table, and they gloated over them as they supped.

Carnforth stirred them lovingly with the butt of his fork. "Pretty little peas, aren't they, skipper?"

"For those they amuse, though I like to see a bit more color in a woman's ornaments myself."

"Matter of taste and matter of fashion. Pearls are all the rage just now. Diamonds are slightly commonplace; but women will spend their money on something, and so the price of pearls is up."

"So much the better for us, sir. It's a pity, though some of them seem a bit off color, like that big gray chap for instance."

"Gray, man! Why, that's a black pearl, and probably worth any ten of the rest put together."

"Well," said Kettle, "I don't set up for being a pearl merchant. Poaching them's trouble enough for me."

"Pass the biscuit, will you?" said Carnforth, yawning. "I suppose that little lot—is worth—worth—anything over—a thousand pound," and with that he dropped back dead asleep in his chair with a forkful of food in mid-air. Captain Kettle finished his meal, but he, too, man of wire though he was, suddenly tumbled forward and went to sleep with his head on the table. It was no new thing for them to do. They had dropped off like this into unconsciousness more than once during that month of savage toil.

The next day they had a smaller crop ready to glean—a bare five hundred pounds' worth, in fact. But they did not lament. There would be an enormous quantity ready for the morrow.

That further realization of their wealth, however, never came. During the night another lugger sailed into the lagoon and upset all their plans. She was the consort of the lugger commanded by the Cambridge man, and she had taken away to a safe place their first crop of pearls and shell. Further she was manned by 14 whites, all armed, and all quite ready to defend what they considered their poachers' monopoly. As a consequence they pulled across to the yacht some two hours before daybreak, and Carnforth and Capt. Kettle found themselves waked by three men, who carried Marlin repeating rifles, and were quite ready to use them if pressed.

But the little sailor was not easily cowed. "By James!" he cried, "this is piracy!"

"It'll be a funeral," said the man with the eyeglass, "if you don't bring your hand out from under that pillow, and bring it out empty. Now, don't risk it skipper. I'm a good snap shot myself, and this is only a two-pound trigger."

Capt. Kettle did not chuck his life away uselessly. He let go his revolver and drew out his hand. "Well," he said, "what are you grimy pirates going to do next? By the look of you, you've come here to steal our soap and hair-brushes."

"Carnforth," shouted the man with the eyeglass, "come in here and be told what's going to happen. I say, you fellows, bring Carnforth into the skipper's room."

Martin Carnforth came into Kettle's room sullenly enough with his hands in his pockets.

"Now I'll give you the whole case packed small," said the spokesman. "A crowd of us found this place and discovered the pearls and the shell. We were all badly in want of a pile, and

One Ingredient of

Zutoo

Is soda—just old-fashioned soda, that our grandmothers took to settle the stomach.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. It won't hurt you any more than will the soda.

The other ingredients of Zutoo are just as harmless.

If you knew what the drug cures contain, and their ultimate effect on the system, you would discard them at once and take Zutoo, which is harmless as Soda.

Horses Killed By Stings Of Bees.

Toronto, Sept. 25. — The Divisional Court has confirmed the award of $400 to Freeman Lucas to be paid by Morley Pettit, a neighbor, of Windham, Norfolk County.

Pettit was the owner of 160 to 170 hives of bees, located on his own land, about 20 feet from the road. The highway was 56 feet wide, and on the other side was a field of buckwheat belonging to Freeman. Early in August the bees appear to have decided on a picnic, and migrated to the buckwheat field. Freeman, unaware of the presence of uninvited guests in his field, on the 10th of August proceeded with a team and reaper to cut his crop. No sooner were the bees disturbed than they formed their battalions and attacked Freeman and his team in most approved style. The horses bolted, and were only stopped by the fence. Freeman did his utmost to drive the bees away, but his efforts were fruitless, and one of the horses died on the spot while the other succumbed the following day. Freeman, himself only survived by abandoning the field of action, and running to a brook, where he immersed himself, and then covered with mud all the exposed parts of his person that had been stung by the bees.

An idea of the number of bees engaged may be formed from the number usually housed in one hive. Authorities give the number as 15,000 to 50,000. After the fray, some three bushels of dead bees were picked up from the field of battle.

Pettit claimed that the offending bees must have been a strange flight, and not a swarm from his own hives. The Court declined to accept the theory of Pettit, and held that although he was at liberty to keep bees he must be responsible as their owner for damages done by them.

HUNTINGDON COUNCIL.

Town Hall, Moira, Sept. 18, 1906.

Council met to-day; members all present: minutes of last meeting read and adopted.

A letter was read from L. W. Seeley asking Council to have obstructions removed off concession road near Tanner's store.

It being stated to the satisfaction of Council that the obstructions referred to were being removed as fast as possible, the matter dropped.

A by-law was passed appointing Murney Coulter, collector of taxes for 1906.

Wm John Gay applied for a grant of $100 on swamp between 11 and 12 concessions, west of John Gordon's, the parties' interested having subscribed a like amount.

Moved by W. E. Tummon, seconded by J. G. Elliott, That this Council deposit in the Dominion Bank, Madoc, on or before the 24th inst., an equal amount to that deposited by the parties interested, for the purpose of repairing the road in question.—Carried.

Moved by W. E. Tummon, seconded by J. Gay, That whereas the Dominion Bank, Madoc, has signified its willingness to receive the taxes from any ratepayers of the Township and receipt their bills, and place the taxes so received to the credit of Murney Coulter, collector,

Be it therefore resolved, that the said proposition be accepted, and confirmed by this Council, said taxes to be paid on or before the 15th day of December, 1906.—Carried.

Moved by S. Ray, seconded by J. G. Elliott, That an order be drawn to pay G. R. Post, treasurer, his expenses meeting Provincial Auditor at Belleville.—Carried.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Touching pimples with turpentine will often heal them quickly. Remove the cause by hygienic living.

Don't go for the medicine bottle until everything else has failed. Let nature, which means fresh air, do the work of cure.

An old fashioned remedy for sore throat that is said to be quite effective is a nutmeg worn on a silk thread about the neck. The nutmeg can be pierced with a redhot awl.

If a pan of sliced raw onions is placed in a room in which there is diphtheria they will absorb the poison and prevent the disease from spreading. The onions should be renewed every day.

For severe stomach ache wring a square of house flannel out of boiling water, fold into a soft pad, lightly sprinkle a small teaspoonful of turpentine over it and apply as hot as possible. This is also excellent treatment for chest colds.

Misdirected Energy.

Frances, a girl of thirteen, was destined by her mother to be a fine musician. While still a little child she was taught to read the notes and her tiny fingers were placed on the keyboard. Year in and year out the child was obliged to practice, and she acquired a measured amount of skill, but her playing was wooden and spiritless. In despair her mother said to her, "What do you expect to be when you are grown-up?"

The girl sighed. "When I am grown-up, mother, if I have a house of my own the first thing I shall do will be to order the piano chopped up for kindling wood. I want to be a doctor."

As time passed musical studies were dropped, and duly Frances went to the medical college. At last she was allowed liberty to grow in her own proper direction. She is a successful physician, treating nervous disorders with rare sympathy and understanding.—Margaret E. Sangster in Woman's Home Companion.

Unjust Partiality.

Does any one know why it is that in a family where there is one child especially dowered with good looks the prettiest clothes are showered on this particular one and apparently most care lavished on their selection? That child would look well in almost any ordinarily presentable attire. It is the lanky boy or the girl lacking in grace who needs the physical and mental support of attire that covers deficiencies and brings out the good points that they obscure. Really intelligent selection of the child's clothes does exactly this and is responsible for all sorts of good results in his mental attitude, courage and good manners. Shyness is more often than not the result of an uneasy self consciousness that has been engendered by seeing that some other child is surrounded by more appreciation, and the too great attention lavished on the beauty is quite as harmful in its way.

THE FRENCHMAN'S DINNER.

Happy and Care Free In the Evening Is the True Parisian.

The Frenchman, with all his politeness and little niceties, is not a good dresser. He is nowhere near the class of the London man, nor can be equal the Baltimore man who gives thought to his wardrobe. This, of course, applies to generalities. There are exceptions where the Frenchman is a model of the tailor's and haberdasher's skill.

As a rule, however, there are other things that mean much more to him than mere clothes. For instance he likes to dine. Every Frenchman, in the proper sense of the word, dines in the evening. He prefers highly seasoned food if he can get it and service of a corresponding degree of excellence. But dine he must and dine he will—if not a good dinner, then a poor one. He must have his soup, his fish, a roast, an entree, some salad, dessert and a bit of cheese. With this he has wine, the vintage regulated by the size of his bank roll. His coffee, in the summer time, he will take outside with a cigarette or cigar, and his enjoyment is not complete unless he hears the strains of an orchestra.

He is not, perhaps, so passionately fond of music as the German, but still he likes it and will have it if he can afford it. He is gay and happy in the evenings, is the Frenchman, and his cares, whatever they are, he dismisses temporarily. He rises late, and he dines late. Nine o'clock is about the proper hour for the coffee, after he has paid his respects to the various courses. Then he is ready for the gay life. When London is going to bed Paris is just beginning to warm up.—Letter in Baltimore News.

THE FATE OF CAPTAIN LEE.

A Debt of Gratitude That This Country Owes to Spain.

During the summer of 1776 Captain John Lee of Marblehead, cruising under a commission from congress, having taken and sent home five valuable prizes, entered the port of Bilbao in Spain. The captains of two of his prizes and a part of their crews were on board. These officers immediately protested against their capture and had Captain Lee arrested on a charge of piracy. The local authorities sent the documents in the case to Madrid, together with the commission granted by this new and unknown power.

In the decision of the Spanish ministry depended not alone the fate of Captain Lee, but whether some of the most important ports in Europe should be opened or closed to American cruisers and privateers. The English minister in Spain brought all his influence to bear against Captain Lee. At this moment the Declaration of the Fourth of July reached Madrid. The complaint against Captain Lee was dismissed, supplies for his ship and aid in repairing it were furnished, and public declaration was made that in Spanish ports the new flag of America was as free and as welcome as was the flag of England.

Spain, like France, also helped the United States with 1,000,000 francs and with cargoes of military stores.

The "Longest Resident."

The poverty of the English language is exemplified by a circular which is making the rounds of a suburb and invites subscriptions to a testimonial to the station master. It comes from one who styles himself "the longest resident," the sad physical fact being that he is probably the shortest, although in bulk and rotundity he makes up for the inches he lacks in height. Here is a case in which the very clumsiness of the German language would be an inestimable help, for then this gentleman could quite correctly describe himself "the for-the-longest-time-herein residing" or even perhaps "the for-the-longest-time-herein-residingest" individual. Those compound adjectives of the Teutons may be awkward, but they express what the user means and insure accuracy.—London Standard.

A Taste That Age Withers.

According to a member of the candy loving sex, there is no sadder evidence of age in a woman than being able to pass a bonbon shop without being tempted by the wares. "When a woman can do this," she says, "she is frankly middle aged. During your school days chocolates are a recognized necessity of existence. During the early bud period of matinee hero worship they are indispensable to the enjoyment of a performance. When your mouth does not water at the mere idea of a caramel or a marshmallow begin to search for the first gray hair."

Good For Evil.

There are some people who turn gray, but do not grow hoary; whose faces are furrowed, but not wrinkled; whose hearts are sore wounded in many places, but are not dead. There is a youth that bids defiance to old age, and there is a kindness which laughs at the world's usage. These are they who have returned good for evil. Whom the gods love die young, and they die young because they never grow old.

True Education.

The first, last and closest trial question to any living creature is, "What do you like?" and the entire object of true education is to make people not merely do the right things, but enjoy the right things.—John Ruskin.

Perfectly Safe.

Patient—Doctor, I'm horribly afraid of being buried alive. Doctor—Don't worry for an instant, my friend. I'll see to that all right.

The world's an inn and death the journey's end.—Dryden.

TRY SMILING.

When the weather suits you not,
Try smiling.
When your coffee isn't hot,
Try smiling.
When your neighbors don't do right,
Or your relatives all fight,
Sure it's hard, but then you might
Try smiling.
Doesn't change the things, of course,
Just smiling;
But it cannot make them worse—
Just smiling.
And it seems to help your case,
Brightens up a gloomy place;
Then it sort o' rests your face—
Just smiling.

WORK OF D'ARCY M'GEE.

Experiences as a Rebel in Ireland and a Citizen of United States.

An address of rare feeling and eloquence was delivered before the Toronto Empire Club by Dr. J. K. Foran of Ottawa on "Thomas D'Arcy McGee as Empire-Builder." He might, the speaker said, speak of him as a historian, an orator or a poet, but those were mere accidents in the life of a man, the ripples on the surface of his life-stream, that added picturesqueness perhaps and covered to a certain degree the deep, broad current underneath of prophetic statesmanship. Dr. Foran said he would only undertake to lift a corner of the curtain which covered that other phase of his life. McGee was a man who had changed from one who was opposed to constitutional authority to a stout upholder of it. McGee's early life and the companionship of Duffy, Davis and O'Brien and others in the days when they were counted as rebels in Ireland was followed by his arrival years later in Canada, where he found a field for his talents, and joined in the work of confederation. In 1863, lecturing in Toronto, he said: "How does it come that a man who spent his youth in fighting that Government should to-day be the strongest advocate of British constitutional rule in this Dominion. My answer is this; Were my country governed at the time as Canada is to-day, I would have been the strongest conservative constitutional advocate in Great Britain."

Having spent some years in the United States, McGee could compare theirs with the British constitution. He believed the former lacked stability, and said that Canada wanted something that was time-defying and liberty-imparting, possessed of stability, and that could be found alone in the British constitution.

McGee believed that nothing better could be adopted for Canada than the British constitution, but he succeeded finally in persuading many of his opponents that that was the only system whereby this country could be raised and made the polished buckle in the belt of empire that engirdled the world. We were yet too near him to truly appreciate his proportions; but he believed the historian of the future would be able to assign to him his proper place in the Valhalla of Canadian statesmanship. His prophecy that before 1925 the Canadian west would be girdled with railways, and that the Dominion would have 20,000,000 people, was in a fair way to be fulfilled.

Wolfe—Neglected Hero.

Mr. F. C. Wade, K. C., of Vancouver, addressed the Winnipeg Canadian Club on the duty of Canada to Wolfe's grave recently, and pleaded for a national acknowledgment of the achievements of the hero of Quebec. Concluding his address Mr. Wade said: "In contemplating the grave of Wolfe at the old parish church of St. Alphage in Greenwich one cannot but recall his marvellous bravery and brilliant generalship that planned the attack at the Anse du Foulon, which led to the capture of Quebec and the cession of this continent to the Anglo-Saxon race. The first impulse is to look around for some great monument, some vast mausoleum, or, in default of that, some memorial window, brass or mural tablet, some indication of the love and sympathy or at the least some sign of gratitude on the part of the Canadian people. But there is nothing. The dark, mysterious crypt is there, as is the iron grating which is pointed to as indicating the exact position of the tomb. These are cold and forbidding enough, but that is all. Canada has done nothing; New England and its lineal successors, the United States, have done nothing. Had it not been for the efforts of private and unknown persons, by whom a beautiful memorial window was placed in the church in 1896, nearly a century and a half after the fall of Quebec, there would be nothing at St. Alphage to indicate that to Wolfe the Anglo-Saxon race on this continent almost owes its existence. Do not the people of Canada owe it to themselves, as well as to the memory of the great Wolfe, to take some action which will fittingly express their appreciation of the heroism of the illustrious peer to whom this continent owes so much?"

The Club, after hearing the address, appointed a committee to set wheels in motion towards concerted action by all sister clubs in erecting a suitable monument.

A Parrot's Little Joke.

There is hanging from the porch of a prominent down-town hotel every day a cage in which is housed a parrot, says The Toronto News. This bird seems to take a fiendish delight in screeching at the top of his voice something that sounds like "Help." Pedestrians a block away, when they hear the cry, hasten in the direction from whence it comes, with thoughts of a hundred different kinds of crimes and heroic rescues fleeting through their brain, only to look as sheepish as can be when they arrive on the spot only to see a green parrot jabbering away to itself and possibly seeing the joke itself.

Working For the Tribe.

Portuguese South Africa furnishes an excellent example of "collectivism" as it works out in a primitive society. Every year the chiefs of the tribes send a band of their young men to the Transvaal to earn the hut tax for the whole tribe. By this arrangement the majority of the tribe lives in ease, while a small portion of their number work underground for perhaps nine months, at the end of which time they return home and surrender 80 or 90 per cent. of their earnings to the chief for the uses of the tribe.

STRANGE FIND IN A CAVE.

Skeleton and Old Books—New Brunswick Men Discover Traces of Dwelling Used 200 Years Ago.

A remarkable discovery was made on a recent Sunday afternoon, by Charles E. Stewart and his uncle, J. E. Stewart, near Johnsville, N. B., about eight miles back of the village of Bath, where the bones of a human being were found in a blockaded cave. The Stewarts, who have long been desirous of investigating, went to the cave, and with dynamite the obstruction to the cave was demolished. The men found twelve stone steps leading to a passage seven feet long and two feet wide, this opening into a main room about twelve feet square, where they found the bones of a human being lying on a bunk of stone.

No trace of flesh was there and the bones were dry and crumbly. Near the bones was a gold ring on which was inscribed "John Long, Dec. 1779." A few inches away was a silver watch, which bore the date 1740. Underneath the bones were found several traces of coarse hair, which would indicate that the body had lain on a skin or something of that nature. Underneath the bunk were found three books, two in Latin, the third written in English.

One of the Latin books was Suetonius' History of Rome, dated 1647, and on the fly leaf were several Latin inscriptions. Inside was written: "B. A. Strong, Oxford College, May 24, 1676." Underneath this appeared the name James Hayward, 1685. The other book was Seneca's Tragedies, and it was marked the date 1659.

In the English book was written the names of David Fowles and Michael Carney. Around the books, which were in a good state of preservation, was a large piece of bark on which were marks believed to be plans of other caves. At one end of the room and immediately underneath the little hole in the roof was an old fireplace. What this signifies the people here do not know, but the investigation will be continued.

Though several persons by the name of Strong have figured on the rolls of Oxford University, none of them bore the initials "B. A." Moreover, there was no one by the name of Strong at the university in 1676, or within 20 years of that date, according to Alumni Oxonenses, edited by Foster. It might also be pointed out that Oxford "college" proves an alibi, though the term might be used.

Praise For "Tom" Tait.

If you ever meet a visitor from Australia and want him to say a good thing for Canada and Canadians ask him what he thinks of Mr. Thomas Tait, the manager of the Government railways in the State of Victoria. He is sure to become enthusiastic at once, unless he is a Laborite, and even then he will admit that Mr. G. R. R. Cockburn's son-in-law is a first-class administrator.

Mr. George Harris Hays, of Melbourne, who passed through Canada en route to England, was most emphatic in his good opinion of Mr. Tait when he said: "Our railways are in the very best possible condition. We get fine service, we haven't had a block in two years, and, furthermore, the roads are paying, and all that is due to the man you sent out from here to run them, Thomas Tait. He has done a great work there, a work which no other man has ever been able to do. He tackled in those railways one of the toughest jobs a man ever ran into. Railways in our country, you know, are owned and worked by the Government. So when Tait came along deputations came to him from all over the country to ask him for reduced rates and all kinds of favors, and the politicians got after him and every one was trying to work him for all he was worth. Why, I tried to do it myself.

"I went to see him with a great big deputation, and we told him he was oppressing the poor people and small farmers. All he answered was, 'I am going to make the Victorian railways pay.' And he did make them pay, and furthermore, he is the only man who has ever been able to do it. Before he came along these railways showed an annual deficit of £200,000.

"Just think of that, and now they pay, and on account of this great gain the Government budget shows an increase instead of a deficit for the first time in the history of the country. Tait is a great railroad manager, and he is now getting the credit for it in Australia from the very people who, when he first came, tried to bowl him down."

George Ham's Versatility.

Wherever George Ham, the veteran newspaper man, and representative of the Canadian Pacific Railway, goes there is sure to be a trail of stories. Here are a couple of them, the first told by The Nelson Herald:

"When George Ham, the well-known C. P. R. official, was in Nelson last week; a deputation waited upon him and urged in eloquent language that the C. P. R. should build an hotel in that city to accommodate the tourist trade. George listened patiently to the harangue and at its close remarked: 'Well, boys, I don't think the C. P. R. can afford to put up an hotel here, but,' and he put his hand in his pocket and pulled out an imitation $100,000 bill given to him as an ad for Saskatoon, and handed it to the leader of the deputation, 'I am glad to contribute personally this amount towards the scheme.' Nothing more was said about the hotel."

The Vancouver Province chronicled the other yarn:

"President Roosevelt, according to the statement of Mr. George Ham, will make a tour of Canada as soon as his present term has expired, and will visit Vancouver. No doubt amid the pressure of his other duties he has had time to read our literature and inform himself of the advantages of this city as a place for settlement."

Ploughed Up Old Coin.

William White ploughed up an old Spanish silver coin of Charles III., dated 1787, on his farm in the Township of Matilda. The date coincides with that of the first settlement of the district by U. E. Loyalists from Mohawk Valley. The coin is in a good state of preservation, about the size of a 50-cent piece and is one of the last issued by Charles III.

OVER 1,000 MILES FOR CRIME.

Remarkable Record For Bravery of the Northwest Mounted Police.

When the necessity arose of extending British authority into the Great Lone Land, the Royal Northwest Mounted Police were organized. During the thirty-three years of their existence they have covered themselves with honor and have carried "pax Britannia" into the farthest corners of the Dominion — from the international boundary to the Arctic, from Keewatin to the Pacific coast.

The blue book just issued by the Government contains many narratives, told in the usual brief and official style, which have yet to find their Kipling. It furnishes many instances showing that crime within the jurisdiction of the police will be dealt with, no matter how remote the district or how dangerous the journey. The case of Inspector Genereux, of Prince Albert, who traveled 1,750 miles by canoe and dog train to inquire into an alleged murder case; of Corpl. Mapley, who left Dawson City by dog train for Fort McPherson in the dead of winter, traversing an absolutely unknown route across mountain ranges for a distance of over 500 miles; of Inspector McGinnis and Sergt Egan, who penetrated 200 miles into the wilds of Keewatin, where the Indians say the foot of white man never before trod, arresting a murderer there for a crime committed over a year previously; of Constable Pedley, who traveled from Fort Chipewayan to Fort Saskatchewan in the depth of winter, with a raving lunatic strapped to a dog sled; of Constable Conradi, who galloped to the help of a settler and his family in deadly peril from a tremendous prairie fire, and fought it, singed and almost suffocated, until the greater part of his clothing was burned off—of these and many other cases the report tells with dryness and brevity. Behind these bald and brief statements of official facts there looms up the outlines of stories of endurance and unostentatious heroism that any one with a knowledge of the country and its conditions can reconstruct.

At the time the report was issued the force consisted of 54 officers, 650 non-commissioned men, 109 interpreters, guides, and artisans, making a total force of 813. During the year the police brought 4,627 offenders before the bar of justice. The cases cover a great variety of crime, from murder to cattle stealing, and the report shows that but few offenders went unpunished.

Arrangements have been made with the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan for continuing the force, each province paying $75,000 yearly toward its maintenance.

"The Greatest of All."

Quite an amusing incident, not without a significant flavor, is told of a happening at the Provincial Parliament Buildings recently, says The Toronto News.

A couple of American lady tourists, evidently of the egotistic and newly-rich variety, drove to the buildings and while the carriage waited at the entrance, proceeded to inspect the halls. After a haughty look or two at the party of tourists being shown around by the attendants the new pair separated themselves with considerable ostentation and dignity. "We wish a special guide for ourselves," observed one of them with some dignity.

As the attendants were all engaged they waited in the upper hallway examining the pictures.

At this eventful moment Premier Whitney came swinging down the hot hall, coat off, vest unbuttoned, and arms full of papers.

"One of the servants?" queried the American in an audible whisper, training her eye-glasses upon him.

The Premier in passing caught the comment.

"Yes, madam," he said, swinging suddenly toward her in most typical and emphatic style, "I am one of the servants here—perhaps the chief public servant."

And swinging back into his stride he passed on.

The imperious Americans wilted under the manner, more than the words, of the Premier, and those who witnessed the incident enjoyed hugely the more quiet and courteous way in which the ladies subsequently secured an attendant and "tipped" him handsomely.

He Could Not Officiate.

Chatham the other day had an experience which, while quite a common occurrence in England, is most unusual in Ontario. A Methodist minister was asked to officiate at the funeral of one of his congregation. The Planet tells the sequel thus: "The short service was conducted in the city at the home of the deceased, according to the rites of the Methodist Church, and the procession proceeded to an English Church in the country, where the service was to be continued and concluded. The burying ground was situated just adjoining this English church. Upon arriving at the church in question the Methodist minister was informed that he would not be allowed to preach a sermon from a text in the church, and, as a result, he was just allowed to give an informal talk and was not allowed to occupy the pupit."

Used on Gen. Brock's Horses.

Joshua Culp of St. Catharines has in his possession a curiosity which he prizes very highly. It consists of a pair of blacksmith's tongs, which were made in the year 1811, and were used in shoeing the horses of Gen. Sir Isaac Brock and his staff, preparatory for the battle of Queenston Heights. When put along side of a pair of tongs of the present day they are so different that their air of antiquity is enhanced. The metal is much worn. They are 18 inches long and weigh about four pounds. Mr. Culp says he wouldn't part with the tongs for a good deal, because of their historic worth. They were made and used by his great-grandfather, whose name was also Joshua Culp.

Highest Kite Ascension.

A string of six kites sent up from the German aeronautical observatory at Lindenberg recently attained an elevation of 21,096 feet, or almost exactly four miles, says the New York Sun. This is the highest elevation yet reached by kiteflying, and it illustrates remarkable progress during the last two or three years in this method of investigating the conditions in the upper air.

GIFTS TO THE DOMINION.

Canada Gives Four Admirals and Name of a Man-o'-War—Will Now Give Some Silver.

Canada's gift to the British navy—four admirals and the name of a man-o'-war—are about to be supplemented by some handsome pieces of silver, and a fund to supply prize money for gunnery. To receive these offerings the Dominion has crossed the ocean, and her officers and men are about to taste the hospitalities of Canadians. This is the battleship's second visit to our shores, her first being occasioned some six months ago by the death of Hon. Raymond Prefontaine. By His Majesty's orders the Dominion conveyed the body of the Minister of Marine from France, an act of courtesy that was appreciated by every Canadian.

About the Dominion.

The Dominion, it is interesting to note, is one of the latest of the newer additions to the navy. She belongs to the heaviest type of battleship afloat. Although launched in 1903, there is already planned a fighting machine that will outclass her. The Admiralty has begun the construction of a more powerful vessel, of which the Dreadnought will be the first sample. This battleship will be of 18,000 tons displacement, and will mount ten 12-inch guns, instead of four, as is the case with other vessels. But she is not completed yet. The Dominion is smaller than the Dreadnought, her tonnage being 16,350. She shares with four sister ships the honor of being the most formidable man-o'-war floating the Union Jack. The other four are the King Edward VII., launched in July, 1903; the Commonwealth, named after Australia; the Hindostan, which represents India, and the New Zealand, which bears the name of another important member of the Imperial family. It seems that it is now the practice to name vessels after portions of the Empire. This is a happy idea. Our neighbors, it will be remembered, name their vessels after the various States.

A Powerful Machine.

The Dominion represents the highest type of battleship ever built, and until the Dreadnought appears is the largest vessel in the navy. Her guns are the most powerful yet constructed. They are capable of firing in one minute one projectile of 850 pounds, sixteen of 380 pounds, and twenty of 100 pounds. In pursuit of an enemy the Dominion can fire ahead of herself four projectiles of 850 pounds, eight of 380 pounds, and sixteen of 100 pounds. Anything she can approach within twelve miles she can throw a shell aboard of. Her speed is 18 1-2 knots an hour, and her officers and crew number 800 men. Her total cost was over $5,500,000. The weight of metal discharged by the Dominion in a single round is 5,920 pounds. This is greater than that of any other British warship. Experts declare that the Dominion and the four other ships of her class exemplify the new tendency of battleship designers to afford better protection to the secondary battery and to increase the calibre of the guns. The change in these regards was first tried in the Japanese battleship Mikasa, and in that case it must have been highly successful.

Improved Improvements.

At all events the improvement means that instead of having a large number of casements for firing purposes, there is a central battery, and that instead of having two large guns, there are eight or ten of bigger calibre than any as yet afloat. With all the mechanism appertaining to her, the Dominion is a wonderful vessel, and is one of the bulwarks of the Empire. That she should have been named after Canada was no small honor to the Dominion. The circumstance was duly emphasized at the launching on Aug. 24, 1903, when Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise performed the naming ceremony for us, and Pelee Island champagne was used instead of the European article. It is not a little curious that the first mission of the vessel which bears the name of Canada should be to convey to his Canadian home the remains of a Cabinet Minister, and that its second important duty should be a visit to this country to receive substantial evidence of the interest of Canadians in the British navy. It is a coincidence also that her captain, Charles E. Kingsmill, should be a Canadian, the son of a Toronto judge. Capt. Kingsmill entered the navy in 1869, and has seen active service in the Egyptian war, for which he bears a medal and the Khedive's star.

The Colonies' Gifts.

Cape Colony has given a magnificent battleship to the British Government. Australia gives a million dollars a year to the navy, New Zealand $200,000, Natal $175,000, and Newfoundland $15,000 besides fitting up a drill ship at a cost of $9,000. The Ancient Colony, moreover, maintains a naval reserve force of 600 men. Canada gives nothing.

The Son of His Father.

Mr. Gerald V. White, who has been chosen by the Conservatives as candidate for the North Renfrew seat in the House of Commons, is the second son of the late Hon. Peter White, by whose recent death the vacancy in Parliament was created. Mr. Gerald V. White was born in Pembroke in 1879 and is 27 years of age. He is a mining engineer by profession, having graduated from McGill University, Montreal, in 1901. After graduation he spent six months in British Columbia, and later one and one-half years in Sydney, Cape Breton, with the Dominion Iron & Steel Co. He returned to Pembroke three years ago on account of his father's ill health and since then has been looking after the family's interests. He is well regarded and is looked upon as a strong candidate. Mr. White is unmarried.

A Species of Hypocrisy.

The Smith's Falls News has an editor who went to church some time ago and listened to a very good sermon, as sermons go. "We enjoyed the singing and stood up with the brethren and sisters while they sang the good old hymn, 'Shall We Know Each Other There?' While the hymn was being sung we glanced about us and counted about a dozen members of the congregation and of the church who do not speak to each other when they meet on the street, or elsewhere. The thought occurred to us, why should they 'know each other there' when they seemingly don't know each other here?"

Another Authority

Dr. B. S. Bugbee, a medical specialist of Minnesota, in an address given lately before the Optical Association of that State, said, in speaking of the "PRENTICE SYSTEM": "By this method I have in the past year had more marked and gratifying results from my work than I have experienced in twenty years previous. I have absolutely cured many cases of Stammering, St. Vitus' Dance, Headache, Backache, Heart, Stomach, Female Troubles, etc., all without medicine, simply by fitting of glasses that relieve the strain and irritation at the Vital Brain and Nerve Centres, thus shutting off the waste of Nerve Energy that has previously been used up to overcome the eye and latent brain-strain, thus robbing or using up the vital energy which normally would have been used in functioning of other parts of the body." We also can testify to some remarkable results in the short time we have been practicing this system in the cure of chronic nervous diseases.

Victim Of Accident Married In Belleville

THOS WESTON, KILLED ON RAILWAY WILL BE BURIED BY LOCAL ODDFELLOWS TO-MORROW AFTERNOON.

On Friday night last, at Sunbridge, which is situated on the Northern line of the G.T.R., a head-on collision occurred between two freight trains, whereby a fireman named Forster was killed and an engineer named Thos. Weston was seriously injured.

The latter died on Monday night as a result of the injuries received, and the remains will arrive here to-night for interment.

Mr. Weston, who was 48 years of age, was born at Lansdowne. Some years ago he was married to Miss Mary E. Moxam, daughter of the late Mr. James Moxam, of this city, who died here some four weeks ago.

Mr. Weston was a member of Meaford Lodge, I.O.O.F., and the funeral here to-morrow afternoon will be under the auspices of the local lodges of Oddfellows. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers will also attend the funeral.

In addition to the widow, one son survives. A brother and three sisters are also living. Those who knew Mr. Weston speak of him in the highest terms. He was an efficient engineer and personally was popular with all the employees of the road.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE GINGERBREAD MAN."

A large audience was present at the opera house last night, when the above attraction was put on by the biggest company seen here for some time. "The Gingerbread Man" was very well received. For a musical farce, the principals are strong. Very seldom would one hear more tuneful music than that of "The Gingerbread Man," with its "John Doe," "Beautiful Land of Bon-bon," "Mazie," "Moon, Moon, Moon," "Nursery Rhymes," and "Every Little Something." In "Queen of My Dreams," Homer Lind displayed a fine voice. The costumes were most elaborate, and some of them of the abbreviated type which delighted the bald-headed row. The chorus is remarkably well trained, and presented a pretty sight as well. Mae Phelps as "Jack Horner," was good, but was suffering from a cold. Her voice gave out entirely before the end of the play. Eddie Redway, as "The Gingerbread Man," was soon a favorite with the audience. The company was, in the opinion of many in the audience, the best musical organization that has come here for a long time. Others did not think last night's attraction was as good as "Dolly Varden," so far as costumes, scenery and chorus were concerned. One thing is sure, Manager Carman is providing some excellent attractions for his patrons, and deserves commendation therefor.

New Naturalization Law

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 25.—The new law, which puts directly under Federal control the process of making citizens, is a move toward consistent naturalization laws. It takes effect next Saturday, Sept. 29, at every port of entry in the United States. Along the borders of Canada and Mexico it will mean a lot of extra work for the immigration inspectors. Heretofore, a Canadian, for instance, has never been subjected to an examination of any kind unless his condition, physical or financial, was bad enough to attract attention. Under the new law it will be compulsory for him to undergo the examination providing he ever expects to become a naturalized citizen of the United States. The questions asked relate to his place of birth, the date, his business and his personality. The examination does not in any way displace the declaration of intention, commonly referred to as "first papers," but it is essential to naturalized citizenship.

Presentation.

A very pleasant event took place at the home of Mr. James Parks, Plainfield, on Friday evening, Sept. 14th, when a number of the members and friends of the East Church, Plainfield, met to present Miss Carrie Parks with a beautiful black clock trimmed in bronze, together with an appreciative address.

SPOTLESS SERVICE.

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. One steps down at a journey's end over the Lake Shore as clean as when he boarded the train. Cleanliness is but one feature that has made The Lake Shore the most popular road in America. Others are its luxurious coaches, absolute safety, highest speed and punctuality. Tell the agent to have your ticket read "Via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for information concerning rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

DR. GOLDSMITH'S POSITION WAS NOT A PERMANENT ONE, AND, CHANGE BEING CONTEMPLATED HE IS NOW RELEASED.

Toronto, Sept. 26.—Respecting the dismissal of Dr. Goldsmith of the Provincial asylum for the Deaf at Belleville, Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, has given out the following statement:—

"Dr. Goldsmith has been acting since 1891 under an arrangement made with the former inspector of asylums and prisons and his position was not a permanent one. The department contemplated making some changes in the duties of the attending physician. Notice was given to Dr. Goldsmith that his service would not be required after the end of the month."

SULLIVAN-ORR WEDDING TO-DAY

PRETTY HOME WEDDING ON YEOMANS ST. THIS MORNING.

A quiet but pretty home wedding took place at 9 o'clock this morning, at the residence of Mrs. James Orr, Yeomans street, when her youngest daughter, Miss Lillian Maud, became the wife of Mr. Robert W. Sullivan, a bridge builder by profession, whose home is at Tweed. Rev. A. M. Hably, Rector of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, performed the ceremony. The only attendants upon the couple were two little flower girls, Ottoleen Graham, of Tweed, a niece of the groom, and Viola Anderson, of Stirling, a niece of the bride. The little girls looked very pretty in dresses of white silk and carried baskets of carnations. The bride's gown was of cream crepe de chene over silk, trimmed with baby Irish lace and chiffon, and she carried a bouquet of white roses. She was given away by her brother, Mr. Wm. Orr. At the conclusion of the ceremony a wedding breakfast was partaken of. The groom's present to the bride was a gold watch and chain, and to the flower girls gold lockets and chains. At noon Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan left for a wedding trip in the east, and will visit Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec. The many friends of the young couple will unite in wishing them every happiness in their married life.

OF INTEREST TO SCHOOL TEACHERS

AN IMPORTANT AMENDMENT MADE TO THE REGULATIONS.

An important announcement has been made from Toronto in regard to senior teachers' examinations. At present these are divided into two parts with a total of twelve subjects. Public school teachers with second class certificates cannot pass them now while they are teaching, because they would need to go to a high school to prepare. In order to remove this difficulty as far as possible and to encourage such teachers to prepare for a higher grade certificate, and in justice to those who want to make public school teaching their life work, it has been decided to divide the work into four parts, and to arrange that candidates who obtained junior leaving standing not later than 1900 may substitute a course of English literature for Latin. This is done because some teachers did not take Latin when qualifying, it not being obligatory, and others who did, and have been teaching for the last five years will have forgotten most of their Latin.

The change has been decided upon in accordance with the request of a representative deputation from the public school section of the Ontario Educational Association.

Father Gets $500 For Loss of Son.

DECISION IN CASE OF COBB VS. BELLEVILLE PORTLAND CEMENT CO. REVERSED BY COURT OF APPEAL.

At the spring assizes here the case of Cobb vs. Belleville Portland Cement Company was tried. The plaintiff sought to recover damages from the defendants for the loss of his son, who was killed whilst at work about the Point Ann Works. Chief Justice Falconbridge entered a non-suit in the action. An appeal was entered and the appeal was heard before Mulock, C. J., Anglin and Clute, JJ. The latter court set aside the non-suit and ordered judgment to be entered for the plaintiff for $500 damages and costs of action and appeal. Mr. E. Guss Porter for plaintiff, and C. A. E. DuVernet for defendants.

McQuigge vs. Campbell — Appeal by defendant from report of Local Master at Belleville in favor of the plaintiff for $500 damages. Appeal dismissed with costs, and judgment entered for plaintiff, with costs against defendant of action, reference and appeal. E. Guss Porter for plaintiff; C. Moss for defendant.

The City Treasurer tells us of a post card received by him the other day which ran thus:

"Dear Sir,—I wish to call your attention to people getting water at the neighbor's, when they have the waterworks in their own house and will not pay for it. I know for a fact that Mrs. Blank, of Blank St., gets her water at Blank's.

"TAXPAYER."

The party named had paid before this reached the Treasurer. The question that bothers him is, has the writer of the post card paid for his water?

GIVES UP STOCK BOOKS

Hon. G. E. Foster Yields After a Long Argument.

Judge MacTavish Ruled That the Public Interest Demanded It—Ex-Manager of Union Trust Resents Attitude of Commission Towards Himself—Timber Transaction In British Columbia Looms Up as Sensation.

Toronto, Sept. 26.—After strenuous objections made by himself and his solicitor, Wallace Nesbitt, K. C., and considerable talking on the part of the Dominion counsel, Hon. Mr. Foster reluctantly handed over the stock book of the Great West Land Co. to Mr. Shepley before the Insurance Commission yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Foster gave the following as the list of stockholders in his company, which Mr. Shepley will present as evidence to the Commission this morning. Hon. Robert Rogers, Winnipeg; Matthew Wilson, K. C., Chatham; Lt.-Col. J. A. McGillivray, Toronto; Hon. Geo. Eulas Foster, Toronto; Sir John Boyd, Toronto; J Walter Curry, K. C., Toronto; G. W. Fowler, M. P., Sussex, N. B.; Rufus H. Pope, M. P. A. Lefurgy, M. P., Nova Scotia; E. C. Boeckh, J. W. Vandusen, G. P. Schofield, E. A. Dusseau and Fred Diver, Toronto.

Witnesses In Contempt.

When the Commission opened Mr. Shepley stated to the Commission that George W. Fowler, M. P., and A. A. Lefurgy, M. P., had been subpoenaed, and neither had put in an appearance.

"Both of these gentlemen," he said, "are concerned in the enquiry, and both ought to be here. Neither is here, although the time has arrived. A representative of Mr. Lefurgy saw me today, and asked me when he was wanted. Mr. Fowler has gone west, and notified the Commission that he will be back after a while or 'in a short time'. That sort of thing, I desire to state publicly, cannot be permitted at all. When witnesses are subpoenaed, they must be on hand. They must obey the subpoena or be in contempt, and suffer the result."

$148,086.31 From Union Trust.

Mr. Elliott Stevenson took the box and counsel read from a statement submitted to the directors of the Great West on Feb. 23, 1904, showing receipts of the following items:

July 2, G. B. Schofield, call on stock, $500; Aug. 22, do., $600; undated, Union Trust advance, $148,086.31. The disbursements to the C. P. R. on account of land, to Pope and Fowler, and for some minor expenses, and $2,884 Union Trust interest, amounted to the same total, $148,086.31. Mr. Shepley commented that the statement seemed to indicate that whatever money was distributed was the amount received from the Union Trust coffers.

A report submitted at a later meeting recited that the Townsites Co., on July 10, 1903, took over 193,937.49 acres Pope and Fowler lands, for which $149,000 was to be paid in stock at par. On July 21 the name was changed to the Great West Land Co. On July 9, Pope and Fowler lands to the extent of 8,640 acres adjoining, at $5 per acre, making in all 202,577.49 acres the total holding of the company.

Learned Better.

Mr. Shepley went further into the affairs of the Great West, reading from the minutes of the Union Trust directors' meeting. The first item was the witness' correspondence with Mr. Wilson. Mr. Shepley read from Mr. Wilson's letter of March 3, 1904, in which Wilson said he could arrange with friends to take over lands without any relation to the Union Trust. Witness thought the suggestion was to take over the Union Trust lands and to leave the three gentlemen of the syndicate in possession of the profits. He answered Wilson that he had no particular objection to his original conception of the proposition. At the later meeting new light came to him and the facts seemed different.

"You heard that the Union Trust Co.'s funds were used for further transactions?"

"Yes."

"This removed the impression that the three gentlemen of the syndicate were financing their own interests?"

"Yes."

"What answer was made at the meeting to your protest?"

"That the matter at the outset had been referred to Boyd and Wilson as lawyers, and that they had approved."

"You might have suggested," said Mr. Shepley, "that it was not fitting for Mr. Wilson to be on the board and at the same time give advice?"

Mr. Stevenson Wondered.

"I wondered," asserted Mr. Stevenson, "if the laws of Canada were so at variance with the laws of the United States as to permit such things."

Mr. Stevenson, continuing, said that a strong objection to involving the Trust Co. in the land deal was that the Trust Co. might suffer in the event of loss.

"At all events," said Mr. Shepley, "they would be able to determine a question in their own interests and for or against the Trust Co.?"

"If they protected the company, the money would come out of their own pockets. I considered the proposition inconsistent with their connection with the Trust Co. They offered a resolution that the Trust Co. should take stock and not security."

"At that time," suggested Mr. Shepley, "all the moneys had not been advanced?"

"Only $149,000 up to that time."

"Up to November, 1905, the total was $330,000."

The next intimation was that the whole burden was to be placed on the Union Trust Co. Mr. Stevenson had asked that action be deferred until Dr. Oronhyatekha should return, or, at any rate, until a later meeting. Mr. Wilson had informed Mr. Stevenson that he, Wilson, had been in error in stating that "the three of us had paid for one-half, but I had arranged to pay Foster's share and mine, and McGillivray was mortgaging his property to raise money. Mr. Wilson had added that he could borrow at 4 1-2 per cent., instead of paying 6 per cent. to the Union Trust Co.

Mr. Foster Defends Himself.

At this point Mr. Shepley called Mr. Foster to the stand and asked him if he still declined to produce the stock book of the Great West. Mr. Foster said that he did, and went on to repeat, in his opinion, that the book was not necessary to show the validity of the security held by the Trust Co. There had been no refusal, he added, of any information he could give, and he was willing to give all such which would throw light upon the security, value of land, etc. "It doesn't seem to me that it is necessary or within the powers of the Commission to go into the stock arrangements of a company not related in any respect at all to the insurance company, and I can't see what is the connection which will illustrate the validity of the security, the quality and nature of the security. In making that statement, I do so with the utmost respect for the Commission."

"I don't want," said Mr. Shepley, "to prolong the discussion, but I want to let you see my view. You are exercising your own private judgment, and relying upon that as to the relevance of the book to the enquiry?"

"Yes."

Union Trust Co. Subject.

"Are you aware that the Commissioners ruled that the affairs of the Union Trust are subject to enquiry?"

"All the affairs of the Union Trust? I was not aware of that." In so far as any investment of or for the I. O. F. should be followed up, he had thought was the ruling; but not as to the Union Trust's own business.

"I was not."

"If you had been aware of that ruling, dealing with the capital funds so furnished as a proper subject for enquiry, would that have altered the position you have taken?"

"I don't think that it would. I think there is a very distinct difference between trust funds handed over to the Union Trust to invest under contract by the I. O. F. and funds which have became Union Trust funds by myself, or any other subscriber, subscribing for and purchasing capital stock, which then became their investment. A commission's powers are not so strong but they must have a limit, a boundary, beyond which they must not cross. They are formed, and orders are given them. I ought not to be charged with contumacy of their powers, because, in my judgment, they go beyond their powers. I must have a judgment—though humble. As a public man, I think I do understand something as to investigations."

A Witness' Rights.

"I don't know," he continued, "what rights I have."

"The same right as any witness in the box."

"I suppose that is to answer questions——"

"But I give you the right—"

"Then, privilege or right, as illustrating the difficulty of my position, you pressed a witness (Dr. Oronhyatekha) to give his opinion of my conduct as manager. He was reluctant, but did cite, as an instance, where I disobeyed orders. If I have made one, I've made thousands upon thousands of investments. I am put in that invidious position as general manager of the Trust Co., as you saw in the headlines this morning. The only way I can be put right is to review the whole situation. I may have made mistakes, no doubt, and I hope many considerations might make me not a bad average manager. If I have that right, to whom can I appeal? What is my tribunal? One of the members (Mr. Langmuir) is manager of a rival institution to the Union Trust, and it is certainly not too much to say that it is unfair and unreasonable treatment that my conduct should be open to investigation of a brother official in a rival company—"

"You must see, Mr. Foster, that if every witness' private judgment is followed, the Commissioners' power and scope must be seriously impaired."

"Each witness must judge for himself," repeated Mr. Foster, "but I am in a rather different position from the other witnesses. I could tell you why."

The court adjourned for lunch.

When the Commission resumed, Wallace Nesbitt addressed the Commission at length and argued that the stock book was not necessary to the transactions of the Foresters' money.

Judge MacTavish Rules.

Judge MacTavish said: "We think that we would not be doing our duty nor carrying out our instructions if this transaction was not thoroughly enquired into. I think it follows that any book or document that would throw any light or detail upon the subject should be placed at the service of the Commission. Of course, private interests will be respected, but this is a matter of public interest. Mr. Foster is quite proper in the position he takes, thinking it is no part of his duty to volunteer information of this kind."

Mr. Foster took the stand. He had heard the ruling and appreciated the reasons given out by the Commission, but he could not forego his private judgment. It was no use to contest the decision of the Commission at this time. He would produce the stock book, which was at his residence.

Mr. Foster dictated a note and a messenger was despatched for the book.

What the Minutes Show.

In the meantime Mr. Stevenson was recalled to the box.

Mr. Shepley took up a minute of a meeting of the directors of the Union Trust Co., held on Sept. 5, dealing with the change of name of the Farm and Town Sites Co. to the Great West Land Co. A minute of the shareholders of the Great West Land Co., Dec. 25, 1905, was gone into next, but witness was not present. It dealt with the agreement dealing with the mortgage given by the Great West Land Co. to the Union Trust Co. Messrs. Wilson, McGillivray, Foster, Schofield and Sir J. W. Boyd, and Vandusen and by proxy the Union Trust Co. Then came the members of the directorate at a meeting held last February.

The annual meeting of shareholders was held. Those present were: Messrs. Foster, McGillivray and Wilson. Mr. Wilson acted as chairman and Mr. Foster was secretary. Witness knew nothing about certain changes made in the directorate whereby Mr. Rogers dropped out and Mr. Boeckh was elected in his place. The financial statement was presented to the meeting.

Assets and Liabilities.

Assets and liabilities appeared in this statement only. The assets were $1,140,174, the liabilities were the final liability to Pope & Fowler, to the C. P. R. and the mortgage for $752,000. To the shareholders the liability was $162,320. Which counsel said would be shown to whom due when the stock book arrived.

Mr. Shepley appealed to the witness to have the minutes of the Union Trust Co. produced. There was some hitch at the office. Mr. Stevnson sent a boy for the minutes.

The stock book arrived at this point.

Mr. Shepley took up a minute of July last dealing with certain promissory notes given by the purchasers of land from the Great West Land Co. to the Union Trust Co. for endorsation. These were handled to the satisfaction of the Great West Land Co.

The Great West Land Co. owed the Union Trust Co. to date $837,237. Some of the sales had not been completed: 180,960 acres had been sold at an average price of $7 per acre. The average cost with interest added to January last was $4.86 per acre, and the net profit on the sale would be $363,000. There was $35,840 yet to be sold, which, when sold, would make a total profit for some one on the deal of $100,000.

Will Invest on Profit.

Witness stated here that the Trust Co. would insist on the ratio of profit on the 337 1-2 shares as the total amount of shares outstanding on the profit made on the expected sale of 25,840 acres. The I. O. O. F. still hold two-fifths of the capital stock of the Union Trust Co.

Mr. Shepley announced that he would make a private examination of the stock book before making it public. Chairman MacTavish assented.

The transaction in connection with the Quebec transaction was a timber proposition, proposed by same parties, McCormick, Irwin and Fowler, in British Columbia, known as the Shields-Ryan property. The option taken was dated October, 1903. This matter was to take place of the Quebec timber transaction. Messrs. McCormick, Irwin and Fowler were to put up 49 per cent., the 50 per cent. to be put up by the Union Trust Co., which was to put up money for the whole. The three gentlemen were to put up their covenant for their shares.

Shields-Ryan Timber Limit.

The proposition was to purchase the Shields-Ryan sawmill and timber limit, 100 square miles for $225,000, at Kamloops. Mr. Fowler brought the matter to the notice of Mr. Foster, who in turn brought it to the notice of the Union Trust Co. The capital of the new scheme was fixed at $500,000, and the Union Trust Co. put up $225,000 in hard cash, which was to be used as working capital. Mr. Foster, acting with and for the Trust Co., was to secure the option, Irwin and McCormick was to examine the land. The Trust Co., having agreed to furnish the money, if the report was satisfactory.

Mr. Shepley asked Mr. DuVernet to produce all the books and documents in connection with this deal.

Mr. DuVernet demurred, and Mr. Stevenson said he would get anything that was necessary without further trouble.

Peter Ryan In It Too.

Counsel went into the minute of the Union Trust Co. of Dec. 19, 1903, when a proposition was laid before the directorate to purchase certain timber limits in British Columbia from Peter Ryan and George W. Fowler.

On Jan. 26 a bargain was made between Peter Ryan, vendor, and George W. Fowler, M. P. of Sussex, purchaser. This recited the sale for $225,000 of this parcel of land to Fowler. This was satisfactorily dealt with.

The payment of the $225,000 was made by a cheque of $100,000 to Peter Ryan, and several other cheques for the balance made to the Bank of Montreal, two for $50,000 each, and one of $25,000, one of which was endorsed by Ryan. The cheques will be produced later. This closed the matter, and the company was organized as the Kamloops Lumber Co. These books of this company are in the custody of the Union Trust Co., and will also be produced.

Did Not Know Levesconte.

"What part in the matter did Mr. Levesconte have?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"I did not know him in the matter at all," said Mr. Stevenson.

The necessary expenses of the running operations of the company was forwarded from time to time, and a set of books was kept here.

The Shuschab Shingle Mill Co. was acquired by the Kamloops Lumber Co. for $40,000. Fowler also put through this deal for the Trust Co. This the Trust Co. paid. Another property at Enderly, consisting of a single hand saw mill was also acquired at $175,000. Fowler put this deal through. The purchase money was paid into the Bank of Nova Scotia to the credit of Mr. Fowler. The business was owned by a corporation called the Obanagan Lumber Co., of which Fowler, McCormick and Irwin were stockholders.

Then the Union Trust bought $42,000 worth of logs.

The Commission adjourned to meet at 10.30 to-day.

Do Your Meals Fit?

DO YOU FEEL SNUG AND COMFORTABLE AROUND YOUR WAIST LINE AFTER A HEARTY MEAL?

Did your last meal taste deliciously good to you, and did you eat all you wanted? Could you have patted your rotundity in glee and felt proud of your appetite and of your good, strong stomach? Do you feel rosy now because your last meal gave you no inconvenience whatever? If not, you have dyspepsia in some form, and probably never realized it.

If you have the least trouble in your stomach after eating, no matter how little or how much you eat, there is trouble brewing and you must correct it at once.

Most all stomach troubles come from poor, weak, scanty gastric juice, that precious liquid which ought to turn your food into rich, red blood.

If you have nausea, your gastric juice is weak. If you have sour risings or belchings, your food is fermenting: your gastric juice is weak. If you have loss of appetite, your gastric juice is weak. If you have a bloaty feeling of aversion to food your gastric juice is weak.

You need something in your stomach to supply the gastric juice which is scanty, and to give power to the weak gastric juice. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do this very thing.

Now think—one grain of one of the ingredients of these wonderful little tablets digests 3,000 grains of food. They are several times more powerful than the gastric juice in a good, strong, powerful stomach. They actually digest your food for you. Besides, they increase the flow of gastric juice, just what you need to get all the good possible out of everything you eat. You will never have that "lump of lead" in your stomach, nor any other stomach trouble after taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Then everything you eat will be digested, it will give you strength, vim, energy and a rosy disposition. You'll feel good all around your waist line after every meal and it will make you feel good all over.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will make you feel happy after eating a good, hearty meal. Take one or two after eating. You'll feel fine—then your meals will fit, no matter what or when you eat.

We want to send you a sample package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets free of charge, so you can test them yourself and be convinced. After you have tried the sample, you will be so satisfied that you will go to the nearest drug store and get a 50c box.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 52 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Immigrant Ends His Life.

Parry Sound, Sept. 26.—Two members of the C.P.R. engineer's staff, found a man 40 miles north of here suffering from a bullet wound in his forehead above the bridge of the nose. On being spoken to he said: "Let me die." He said he had shot himself, as he was tired of life and wanted rest. The man said his name was Kidd Mason, and that he was a recent emigrant from England, was a carpenter, and was sent from Montreal by the Montreal Employment Bureau. He died in the hospital here.

Arrested For Seduction.

Brockville, Sept. 26.—Charles Sangster, a switchman in the C. P. R. yards here, was placed under arrest four hours previous to the time set for his marriage to a well-known young lady of this town, and the nuptials had to be postponed indefinitely. He was charged in the police court with, in June last, seducing the 14-year-old daughter of Mrs Anthony White of Brockville. He denies the accusation, and was remanded for a week.

Candidate Retires.

Tara, Sept. 26.—At the Conservative convention yesterday to select a candidate to contest the riding of North Bruce for the House of Commons, Jas. Rushton, a prominent farmer of the Township of Amabel, was the choice. He afterwards declined the nomination for personal reasons and another convention will be held on Tuesday next at Tara.

U. S. INTERVENTION.

Seems Certain, and If So Proclamation From Oyster Bay.

Havana, Sept. 26.—It is declared on very high authority that American intervention in Cuba is certain. Furthermore, it is expected that the proclamation of intervention will be issued from Oyster Bay.

Palma Will Resign.

Havana, Sept. 26.—At the close of a meeting of the Moderate leaders, held last night, it was announced that President Palma, Vice-President Mendez Capote and the Moderate senators and representatives would all resign their offices, and call congress to-day, and place the resignations in its hands.

President Palma declined the request of the correspondent for an interview.

Marines Sail To-Day.

Washington, Sept. 26.—Fifteen hundred more American marines were ordered to Cuba yesterday by the navy department. As there are now 1,200 marines in Cuba and 3,000 blue jackets, when the vessels sailing this week arrive in Havana, the United States will be ready to land on Cuban soil a force of more than 7,000.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Sulphur soap and ichthyol soap are both good to use when the face is unsightly with pimples.

An occasional washing of the face in hot rain water, softened with two or three spoonfuls of oatmeal, is good for the complexion.

Don't rub your face downward. It makes the cheeks hang down. The forehead should be rubbed from the center to the temples.

First class complexion specialists do not steam the face except for treatment of acne. Cold water, electricity and scientific massage are more stimulating.

If the cheeks are hollow it is because the muscles have become weak. To strengthen them wet with cold water and rub gently and deeply round and round with a soft Turkish towel.

Moderates Appoint Committee to Negotiate With Rebels.

CUBA MAY YET HAVE PEACE

Speakers In National Assembly Shout Denunciations of the American Government, But When Frenzy Had Subsided Settled Down to Business and Appointed a Committee of Six to Meet the Rebels.

Havana, Sept. 27.—The Moderates have agreed to appoint a committee to negotiate terms of peace with a committee of the rebels and Liberals, leaving all points upon which no agreement is reached to the arbitration of the American commissioners. The Moderates have abandoned the condition that the rebels must first lay down their arms before negotiations can begin.

Meeting of Moderates.

A meeting of the Moderate National Assembly was hastily called yesterday to decide whether some way could be devised to settle the present difficulty without American intervention. The speakers shouted denunciation of the American Government, and hotly insisted that the Moderate party should appeal to the powers of the world for protection. When the frenzy subsided the meeting settled down to a consideration of reopening of negotiations with the Peace Commissioners.

In the meantime Senator Dolze proposed that both sides appoint committees of six to treat for peace, but with the prior condition that the rebels lay down their arms. Secretary Taft approved of this.

Committee of Six.

After hearing the views of Secretary Taft, the assistant notified him that he would appoint a committee of six to meet a similar committee from the Liberals, leaving all points of difference to the arbitration of the commissioners. It was agreed that at the session of Congress Friday the resignation of President Palma would be tabled pending negotiations. Whatever the outcome of the negotiations, it is felt here that there will be need for all the American marines within reach, as there is little confidence in the ability of the rebel leaders to control their men. Funston is expected to-morrow.

Canadians Were Injured

Buffalo Mail Ran Into Open Switch At Catlin, Ill.

Mrs. Waldsman and Her Three Little Children in the Wreck Were Burned But Not Seriously—Three Persons Known to Be Killed and Several Are Missing—The List of the Dead and Injured.

Danville, Ill., Sept. 27.—Passenger train No. 8, of the Wabash Railroad, running from Kansas City to Buffalo, N. Y., known as the Buffalo mail, ran into an open switch west of Catlin, Ill., early yesterday, and crashed into a section of a freight train. All the passenger cars but one turned over and burned. Three persons are known to have been killed. Several others are missing.

Thirty-seven injured are being taken care of at Danville hospitals. The known dead are: Engineer J. S. Butler of Peru, Ind.; W. W. Ellison, fireman, La Fayette, Ind.; Edward Harding, mail clerk, Ivesville, Ill.

Ontario Family Burned.

Among the injured are: Mrs. Luther Shoemaker, Spencerville, Ind., seriously burned; Arthur Shoemaker, eight months old, badly burned, will die; Mrs. Waldsman, Guelph, Ont., burned on face and arms, and her children, Margaret, aged 9, Vinson, 10, John, 11, all burned, but not seriously; Mrs. Nellie Livingston, Buffalo, hands and neck burned, and her children, Rose, aged 10, Gladys, 8, John, 4, Fern, 1, all badly burned, but will recover.

About 15 others were less seriously burned.

The train consisted of an engine, smoker, baggage car, two Pullmans, one chair car and a dining car. All but the diner were burned. The train was going at the rate of 60 miles an hour and nearly every passenger was asleep at the time. Nearly every one lost all their clothing except nightwear.

Father Got No News.

Guelph, Sept. 27.—J. H. Waldsman, husband of the woman whose four children are reported burned in the Catlin wreck, is a clerk in the Lion Dry Goods store here. Mr. Waldsman had no particulars of the wreck.

Second Victim.

Sundridge, Sept. 27.—Engineer Weston of the south-bound mogul freight train, No. 1002, which was recently in collision, has also died from his injuries.

Senator Lovitt's Misfortune.

Halifax, Sept. 27.—While trimming a tree in front of his residence at Yarmouth yesterday afternoon Senator Lovitt fell and broke three ribs. He fell 15 feet.

St. Kitt's Man Killed.

Detroit, Sept. 27.—Henry Wininger, 28, cook in Gies' restaurant, fell from a window in the restaurant yesterday, sustaining a fracture of his skull, which caused his death three hours later. His relatives live in St. Catharines, Ont.

COMMISSION ON SCHOOL BOOKS.

Hear That Binding and Paper In School Books Are Inferior.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—The text book commission was in session yesterday and will convene again next week.

Yesterday's session was rich in results. Expert evidence given was to the effect that the binding of school books was inferior, and that much of the paper used would not stand the test.

Inspector James L. Hughes described the workings of the free text books system in the public schools of Toronto. It was most satisfactory. The children took good care of the books; they were rebound and thus lasted several years.

Mr. H. Ballard, school inspector of Hamilton, stated that in his city the board sold the books to the children, and at a profit of between $3,000 and $4,000 per annum.

Chairman Crothers suggested that in this way an unjust share of taxation was shifted from the rich to the poor.

The Grain Commission.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—The grain commission yesterday listened to further representations touching alleged defects in the present system of grain inspection and the act in general. Flax impurities were a handicap, and the grain should be graded. The commission will find out whether the act or the inspector is at fault. The commission will wind up its Toronto session to-day.

Severn Wiped Out by Fire.

Severn, Ont., Sept. 27.—At noon yesterday fire broke out in the Severn Hotel stables, and before it could be gotten under control, had wiped out the business section of the village. Losses are $22,500; insurance $14,200. The sufferers are: Severn Hotel, W. H. Miller, J. H. Jackson, A. Keeler, butcher, G. Beatty, and Orange Hall.

Winnipeg Strikers Resume Work.

Winnipeg, Sept. 27.—After sessions all day of the strikers, it was finally decided late yesterday afternoon to call the big building strike off. An agreement between the men and the employers was signed and 4,000 men go to work this morning.

Big Steamers Grounded.

Port Colborne, Sept. 27.—A blockade, which occurred Tuesday by the grounding of the steamers Westmount and Rosedale in the entrance to the harbor, was raised at midnight, the water reacting and floating the steamers off the shoal.

Thieves at Peterboro' Fair.

Peterboro, Sept. 27.—M. M. Morrow of Brockville was arrested on the fair grounds for pocket picking. Frank Smith of Toronto was also arrested for breaking into Mrs. Dunsford's residence and stealing considerable household effects.

Bogus Checques Galore.

Montreal, Sept. 27.—A successful swindler, using the name of John Garvey, has flooded the city with bogus cheques of small denominations. No such person as Garvey is known here.

One "Innocent" Dead.

New York, Sept. 27.—Bloodgood H. Cutter, a friend of Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), and one of the characters in "Innocents Abroad," died at his home in Little Neck, Long Island, yesterday. He was 89 years of age, a farmer, and writer of poetry.

30 Families Homeless.

Montreal, Sept. 27.—Fire destroyed 14 buildings, either wholly or partly, in St. Louis de Mile End yesterday afternoon, and rendered some 30 families homeless, with a total loss of $100,000

Illicit Stills Seized.

Paakhill, Sept. 27.—Special Officer Floody of Toronto seized two illicit whisky stills from two prominent farmers in East William Township yesterday afternoon.

Two Judges Named.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—Judge Mabee and Judge Snider of Hamilton have been appointed members of the commission to revise the Statutes of Ontario.

Black Dress Goods

Black Dress Goods are this season holding a stronger position on the fashion chart than for some time, due in a great measure to the number of deaths in the Royal Families of Europe—many of the handsomest imported models being in all black or black with a touch of white.

In consequence of this demand the manufacturers have brought forward many new weaves which give a variety of choice seldom found in this staple color.

All the new ones are well represented in our fall showing. These include Amazons, Soliel Cord, Panamas, Llama Cloths, Cordiline, Thibet, Armure, German Satin Cloths, Chiffon, Broadcloths, ranging in price per yard.......................... 50c, 75c, $1, and up to $2.00

COSTUME VELVETEENS

Velvets are daily gaining in popularity for all purposes, particularly costumes.

The foremost French modistes are expending every effort in turning out most elaborate costumes of English chiffon finished "Worrall Dyed" Velveteens.

Of these goods we have now a pleasing display in all the leading shades—guaranteed fast colors.

If you are contemplating the purchase of a new suit or dress, velvets are worthy of your consideration, not only because of their stylishness, but also of their handsome appearance. Ask to see them. Prices 75c and $1.00.

Skinner's Guaranteed Sateens

This brand of Satin has won a most worthy reputation (particularly in the United States) for its exceptional wearing qualities.

It is guaranteed by the manufacturers for two season's wear and for lining jackets and furs is without doubt the best material on the market today. We are sole agents for this section. If you want a lining that will wear, ask for Skinner's guaranteed satin.

U. S. and Canadian Tariffs Compared

The difference between the tariff of the United States and that of Canada is well illustrated by the following figures showing the nature of the trade between the two countries:

	U.S. exports. to Canada.	Canadian exports to U.S.
Manufactures	$66,493,440	$ 6,923,721
Partially manufactured	24,839,813	16,886,490
Raw materials	71,707,837	46,616,554
	$166,040,890	$70,426,765

In this classification of the trade of the two countries, says the Montreal Gazette, manufactured articles are those which go direct from the importer to the retail consumer. The only profit made upon them is that of merchandising. Partially manufactured articles are those which require that further labor be expended upon them before they go into consumption. This division includes a great many articles which might be regarded as manufactured goods, such, for instance as cottons in the web, yarns, and the wide range of articles which, under the Canadian tariff manufacturers are allowed to import either free or at a reduced rate of duty for use in their factories. Raw materials include those articles which have advanced beyond their basic form and which are not produced in Canada as well as the general run of raw articles, agricultural products in their primary form, etc. By percentages the trade measures in this way:

	United States.	Canada
Manufactures	40	10
Partially manufactured	15	24
Raw materials	45	66

This makes the difference plain. Canada sends the United States a small percentage of manufactured goods, more than double the quantity of materials into which it is necessary to put more labor before they are ready for consumption, and more than six times as much raw materials the form of imports which call for the greatest expenditure of labor. On the other hand Canada takes 45 per cent of its imports from the United States in the form of raw materials, but this should be reduced by excepting coal and cotton, the former of which in the shape of bituminous Ontario finds it necessary to largely import and in the shape of anthracite is freely demanded by all of Eastern Canada, and the latter of which is not and cannot be grown in Canada. Deducting these the percentage of raw materials in Canada's imports from the United States becomes only thirty-five per cent. of the total, those of partially manufactured eighteen per cent. and those of manufactured no less than 47 per cent. or almost one-half. This record is far from being as satisfactory as that of the United States. It could very easily be bettered.

Included in the $66,500,000 of manufactured goods imported into Canada from the United States were a great variety of articles which might just as well have been manufactured in Canada, and which could have been so manufactured without increasing the cost to the consumer. For years the manufacturers of the United States refrained from establishing branches in Canada because they were assured by the Liberal party that just so soon as it reached power the Canadian market would be made more easy of access to them. The Fielding tariff of 1897 showed them that they had been entertaining a false hope, and the result was a large influx of American capital for investment in Canadian branches of their home industries. There is no doubt but that a judicious readjustment of the Canadian tariff would persuade other United States manufacturers to follow the example set them with the result that Canadian importations of manufactured goods from the United States would be considerably reduced and those of partially manufactured and raw materials correspondingly increased. No small share of the industrial improvement of Canada in recent years may be traced to the advent of these Canadian branches of United States concerns. Not only did they give more employment to Canadian workers but they also took many Canadian industries out of the rut into which they had fallen partly because of the lack of inducement to modernize methods of production created by fear of the lowering of the tariff and the consequent destruction of their home market, and partly by the increase of competition. A further influx would have an equally desirable effect. This does not mean that Canada should establish a stone wall tariff against United States manufacturers, but it does mean that a selection should be made of those lines of industrial effort in which Canada is naturally qualified to produce and which have suffered stagnation because the terms of access of United States imports have been too free.

Well, not to keep you in suspense too long, here it is: The C. P. R. proposes to run its new line right across our beautiful Queen Victoria park. "En avant, mes braves!" as our friend the professor would say.

• • •

What will our friend ex-Mayor Johnson say to that. As the discoverer of Queen Victoria park he will hardly see the railway desecrate it without a ruction. It will probably have to run over his dead body. But, if what we hear is true, run there it will.

• • •

This of course, is an age of materialism and commercialism. Sentiment and aestheticism have little chance in competition with business, and the rule of the mighty dollar is supreme. The trail of the serpent is over us all. Can this scheme be checked? Well, we have asked the same question, and have been told that a railroad can expropriate any property except a graveyard. Aha! A bright idea strikes us.

• • •

How would it be to kill Ald. Knox and bury him on Victoria park? Then it would be a graveyard, and the C.P.R. could not touch it. Of course the worthy alderman might object, but we could promise him a big funeral and a monument, and think of the undying fame he would earn and the thousands of women and children who would rise up and call his memory blessed.

• • •

All joking apart, though, does it seem reasonable that Belleville people should welcome this project? Those who went to Victoria park for "a breath of fresh air" during the past summer will testify what a blessing it was. Must we give up our splendid park, the envy of tourists and the pride of all our people, because a railway wants it? The new road will be welcome, of course, but is there no other route they could take? Must they, like King David, take away the poor man's ewe lamb?

• • •

The authorities should look into this matter. It may be that the park must be given up, but assuredly a few dollars put into the city treasury will not compensate for it. We should have a quid pro quo in the shape of another park in just as advantageous a position and with the same splendid water privileges. And where are you going to find it? Echo answers "where?"

• • •

Only seven people in Calgary attended a reception to Earl Grey, which must have made His Excellency feel blue.

They must have a riotous kind of a City Council in Brantford, judging by the following, from the Courier: "The fact of one meeting of the 1906 City Council getting through in business shape, and without a row, is enough to make the old earth wobble on its axis."

• • •

Members of the Y.M.C.A. in this city, or at least those who purchased membership tickets early in the present year, may be interested in knowing that the life or death of the work in this city will probably be settled next week, when one of the provincial secretaries will be here and local affairs thoroughly looked into. So we are told by a prominent member of the association.

• • •

Rather a good story is told us, which shows how a girl's quick wit saved her from a scolding. It seems that a family, whose home is in this city, were in another city on a visit. Paterfamilias, it seems, is a strong believer in predestination. "What is to be, will be," is his pet theory. One day, while on the above-mentioned trip, a young lady member of the family lost her mother's very handsome and costly umbrella. When the head of the family learned it he was seemingly inclined to wax wroth. But the young lady saved the day: "Now, father," she said, "it can't be helped, you know, what is to be will be." And the father smiled a sad, sweet smile and answered not a word!

• • •

How delightfully fresh everything seems after the rain. Even those young fellows who rock the footbridge, f'rinstance.

• • •

Post office is going to be a pretty place inside. Hooray! for the Government which puts in handsome fittings, underpays the clerks and causes the citizens to cuss over delayed mail matter.

• • •

'Tis said that Attorney-General Foy is preparing a bill to lessen the cost of litigation. If the story is true, Mr. Foy should have a monument, even though some of the lawyers may not give a cent towards it.

• • •

WORKS BOTH WAYS.

(Hamilton Herald.)

We notice that the Canadian Canners (Limited) have decided to increase the price of tomatoes because the crop was too large, and also to increase the price of plums because the crop was too small. The excuse crop is always large.

• • •

A gentleman shows us a copy of the Denver News, of a recent date. The "scare" head over an article says: "Another Farmers' Excursion to Alberta." The exodus from Yankeeland to the Canadian Northwest is evidently an endless affair.

Even the skies wept last night over the horrible "injustice" to Dr. Goldsmith!

ADOPTING "THE ENGLISH."

(International Review, Tokio.)

Nowadays, English is getting the most fashionable language in all the five parts of the world. The total number of English-speaking throats should exist more than two hundred millions. To us it is phonetically difficult, though we are endeavoring our very best for its imitation. So, we adopted the English in this journal.

• • •

So the local milkmen are going to advance their prices. Well, we can hardly blame them. Look at the dry summer we had, and the long distance the poor fellows had to drive their cans to water!

• • •

The daily railway accident still continues to bob up serenely.

• • •

Hearst, the yellow journal man, has been nominated by the Democrats for governor of New York. And it looks like a pretty safe bet that he will be elected.

RUBBER

When you buy rubber it pays to get it. There are few things in which quality counts for more than in rubber goods.

The demands of our trade require us to carry more than one quality of rubber goods, but each quality is sold for what it is, and is sold at an honest price. We carry practically everything in the line of Syringes, Hot-water Bottles, Sick-room Supplies, etc.

Rev. Dr. Crothers At Home

Phillipsburgh, Que., Sept. 24.—The old Methodist church at 'the Bay,' which was opened for service in 1819, was the scene of interesting services on Sunday, Sept. 21.

The first quarterly official meeting was held in this place on Sept. 25 one hundred years ago. The presiding elder was the Rev. Henry Eames, and the circuit preacher was the Rev. Reuben Harris.

At the morning service the Rev. W. T Brown, of Cowansville, preached a very impressive sermon from Acts i., 8. The pastor, the Rev. William Adams, directed the services, and led the choir. The Rev. R. Robinson, who was a former pastor of Phillipsburg, took part in the services.

The Rev. Dr. Crothers was also present, and pronounced the benediction. The old village had reason to be proud of several, who, like Dr. Crothers and the distinguished Hunter brothers, have led lives of great usefulness. Dr. Samuel and W. J. Hunter have been well known in the Montreal Conference.

Dr. Crothers stated to a friend that he owed much to the pastor of his boyhood, the Rev. Rufus Flanders, father of Dr. C. R. Flanders, of Stanstead College.

For Family Colds

A reliable cough and cold cure should be always in the house ready for use the moment the first symptoms appear.

It is always easier, cheaper and better to check a cold in the very beginning.

It is safer, too.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure, the Lung Tonic, has been tested for thirty-three years, and tens of thousands of homes in Canada and the United States to-day are never without it.

A dealer writes: "Shiloh's Consumption Cure is without doubt the best remedy for Coughs and Colds on the market. Once used, my customers will buy another.—L. Elder, Nanagawaya, Ont."

If it were anything but the best would this be so? Try it in your own family. If it does not cure, you get back all it cost you. We take all the chances. Neither you nor your dealer can lose. Isn't that fair? 25c. is the price. All dealers in medicine sell 303

Stone Cutters Must Pay $200 Damages.

Ottawa, Sept. 26. — "One or the other has lied, and it is for you to say who has lied." Again, "Some one has committed perjury, and it is for you to say who has done it." And yet once again, "It is a painful situation, but it is there, and you must find a solution." In such plain, straightaway words did Judge Anglin, addressing the jury, characterize certain portions of the evidence given by witnesses in the case of Grant v. Brown, an action brought by Misses Theresa and Ella Grant to recover damages from Robert Brown, marble dealer, at 376 Sparks street, Ottawa, for trespassing upon their plot in Notre Dame cemetery and removing from their mother's grave a monument which he had erected there, but for which, he alleged, they had not paid according to agreement.

The evidence was at times in such direct conflict on material points that the judge did not seek to reconcile their differences, but freely declared that they could not be the result of simple misunderstanding, but of wilful lying on the part of some one. The outcome of the case was a verdict for plaintiffs. They were awarded $200 damages and County Court costs.

What Part ?

What particular part of the nerve-centres should we expect to have the greatest influence in affecting and controlling the general nervous system?

Reasonably it would be the largest and most sensitive. Well now, of all the centres in the nervous system, the largest most delicate sense, the sense most constantly in use, the largest brain "gray-matter" area is that of SIGHT.

For an average of 16 hours daily continuously, the feeling in the visual centres is constant. No other sense in the nerve centres is capable of such continued endurance.

With the proper glasses this severe drain upon the brain and nerves is prevented from causing a breakdown in the general health.

SPORTING NOTES.

Toronto Star: Arrangements were concluded to-day by which "Chaucer" Elliott, of Kingston, will take charge of the Argonaut Rugby Club and coach the team for the season of 1906. It was announced previously that Elliott was to coach Queen's, but he was prevailed upon to accept the offer of the Argonauts. Elliott left Kingston at noon to-day, and will be here this afternoon in time for the Argonaut practice on Varsity Athletic Field. He will have complete control of the players, and will receive a bonus if the team lands the championship. In his day "Chaucer" was one of the best Rugby players in Canada.

The Buffalo News says: "It certainly was the Skidoo year for the Herd. Twenty-three men played on the team during the season. The season closed September 23. It's 23 for G. T. S. The last day's attendance was 9,523. Buffalo won the pennant by 23 points. The Herd went to Niagara Falls on Sept. 23 and at the hotel the dressing-room was No. 23. Brockett won 23 games. Murray had 23 two-baggers. The youngest man on the team is Vowinkle, 23. Skidoo."

Toronto Telegram: And those Toronto players are just as confident as the Tecumsehs. Since they walloped Capitals at Rosedale and drove the Shamrocks into last place in Montreal, they just naturally think they can wallop anything in the union. So you see you have all the ingredients for a great game at the Island on Saturday.

The fame of the Smith's Falls hockey team has travelled afar, says the Record. Within the last week or two a couple of hockey enthusiasts have been here from Halifax, N. S., and have held out strong inducements to some members of the team to go to that city for the winter. The most flattering offers it is said were made to at least two of them, but they were of no avail. Smith's Falls evidently proving more attractive to them than the city by the sea.

Jake Gettman, of Buffalo, played 130 games for Buffalo during 1906 in centre field and at first base, and only made four errors. He had 381 chances, an average of about three a game.

Hod Stuart, brother of Bruce, and considered the best coverpoint in the league, has a seven already signed for Pittsburg, and it is said one of his men is Jimmy Gardner, captain of last winter's Calumet team. The American Soo is also understood to have a star line-up clinched.

The Fee System For Use Of School Books

HOW IT WORKS IN KINGSTON — HAS A MARKED EFFECT ON SCHOOL ATTENDANCE, AND RATEPAYERS ARE SAVED 50 PER CENT.

The Boards of Education in many places in Ontario observe the "fee system" in connection with school text books. That is to say, the Boards purchase the books and rent them to the pupils. Inasmuch as, at different times, there has been an intermittent agitation in Belleville for the adoption of the "fee system" in the local public schools, the following, from the Kingston Whig, showing the experience of that city in the matter, may prove of interest. Here it is:

John Macdonald, secretary of Kingston School Board for fourteen years, gave evidence before the Ontario Text Book Commission, as to Kingston's experience with free books. The system regarding school books in Kingston was the fee system. The books were purchased by tender from local dealers, and they always accepted the lowest tender. He was not aware of the terms which had been made by the Government or the discount obtained.

"The difference in price to us as compared with the retail price is about twenty per cent."

"Are you aware that booksellers get thirty-five per cent. discount as a rule?" was asked Mr. Macdonald.

"I believe so, but a certain quantity has to be taken," was the reply.

The Board owned the books, and rented them to the students. They pay a fee at the beginning of each term based on the cost of supplying books to each class. The cost of books and supplies for 1905 was $1,359.28. This included pens, paper, notebooks, sewing material, etc. The revenue for 1905 from fees was just enough to cover that amount. The Board did not attempt to make a profit. If the revenue exceeded the outlay the fee was reduced. The cost of text-books since 1903 totalled $1,357.95. Last year the sum spent for new books was only $73.65. The average per pupil for the last four years figured out about fourteen cents per annum for rental of text books and forty-six cents for supplies, making a total annual fee of sixty cents. For this the pupils, for instance, in the junior third, got

Six ruled work books,
Three exercise books,
One ruler,
Three pen-holders,
Three drawing pencils,
One rubber eraser,

and the use of a third reader, making a total of seventy-nine cents received in value for the seventy-cent fee paid.

"We find that the system has a marked effect on the attendance, as strangers or poor people can send their children to school at once without having any outlay for text books. On the average under the fee system, the ratepayers were saved at least fifty per cent. of what they would otherwise have to pay. As a rule, the children took better care of the books than if they belonged to them personally, as they seemed to feel a greater sense of responsibility regarding them. During the three years the system had been in vogue in Kingston not a single case of infectious disease had been traced to the books. In case of infectious disease absolutely everything was destroyed at once. This could hardly be done if the books were owned by the parents who would probably only have them disinfected in order to save expense, and thus leave a possibility of infection."

A number of samples of books which had been used for two years were produced, and looked over by the commissioners. Although they had not been selected, but taken at random, they were in a remarkable state of preservation, and strongly supported Mr. Macdonald's statements.

Continuing, Mr. Macdonald stated that so far no great outlay had been necessary for repairs, which had so far been done by contract, and no regular system for this work yet adopted. A properly-bound school book should last five years. They always insisted on having a fresh paper covering at least three times a year to preserve the board cover. These paper covers only cost one-quarter of a cent each, and made a great difference in the life of a book.

However, his personal opinion was that from a hygienic standpoint a better system would be to get up a very cheap reader for the lower grades which would last just one year and then be destroyed. He concluded by emphatically stating that he was a strong advocate of the free school book idea.

Facts About the American Indian's Healthy Hair.

The American Indian accustomed from time immemorial to go bareheaded in all kinds of weather is never troubled with falling hair or baldness.

The close atmosphere caused by our "civilized" head-gear is conducive to the breeding of infinitesimal germs which dig into the scalp and thrive on the sap of the hair-root.

This true cause of baldness is of recent discovery and explains the non-success of all hair-vigors which treated baldness as a functional disorder.

Newbro's Herpicide is a direct exterminator of the germ. "It destroys the cause and permits the hair to grow as nature intended.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BELLEVILLE DISTRICT W. M. S. OF THE METHODIST CHURCH HELD IN FOXBORO YESTERDAY.

The annual convention of the Belleville District Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church was held Sept. 26th at Foxboro, Mrs. L. Massey, District Organizer, presiding, assisted by the efficient secretary, Mrs. J. H. P. Young.

The growing interest in missionary work, and the beautiful weather assured a good attendance, so that the morning session, at ten o'clock, opened with the church two-thirds full, the numbers increasing until the seating capacity was taxed.

Following the devotional exercises, conducted by Mrs. Massey and Rev. C. L. Thompson, the address of welcome and the reply thereto were delivered by Mesdames Thompson and C. Vandewater. Delegates from most of the societies on the district responded to the roll call, and very encouraging reports were given by the several delegates as to increase in interest, membership and finance.

A paper dealing with the importance of child culture in missionary topics, and outlining practical methods therefor, was read by Miss Wilson, of Bayside.

The praise service in song and testimony conducted by Mrs. Leitch, was impressive and helpful.

Mesdames Wilson and Buckler opened the afternoon session with scripture reading and prayer.

Mrs. H. Pringle outlined the scope and method of W. M. S. work in the various home and foreign stations, paying a high tribute to the devotion of our representatives.

Miss Gladys Vermilyea's recitation and Mrs. H. Denyes' paper on Systematic and Proportionate Giving, based on scriptural authority, must have resulted in a liberal collection taken for the work.

Mrs Henry spoke on Woman's sphere and the "Reflex Influence" of systematic work for others.

Mrs. Yeomans, treasurer of the District (also of the B. Q. branch), cheered the audience with a reported increase over last year, the District receipts being over $1700, and the Branch total about $12,000.

W. C. T. U. greetings were given by Mrs. Woodcock.

Among the Convention visitors we noticed Revs. Messrs. Smith (Presbyterian), Meyers, Wallace and Reddick; also Mrs. (Dr.) Harrison, organizer of Madoc District, and Mrs. Hoste, of the China Inland Mission, who addressed the Convention emphasizing the importance of prayer for missionaries and their work. Mrs. H. Pringle was appointed representative to the Ministerial District meeting.

Two little ladies, Misses Hazel Gardiner and Irene Prentice, served the Convention acceptably in the capacity of pages. A solo was contributed by Mrs. Scott, and a duet by Mrs. Ray and Mrs. Sprague.

Resolutions — I.—Of thanks to the Foxboro ladies, whose sumptuous dinner was so much enjoyed. II. — Of sympathy with the President of Foxboro Auxiliary, Mrs. Bryant, in her protracted illness, and hope for her speedy recovery. III.—Of regret at the contemplated removal of Mrs. W. W. Chown, for seven years Secretary of this District.

"Resolved, that this Convention desires to place on record its appreciation of the work of Mrs. W. W. Chown in the interests of the W.M. Society, and to express its deep regret that our happy relations are soon to be severed. The Bay of Quinte Branch is to lose one eminently qualified to assist in carrying on this work. May God's richest blessing be with her in the new home."

New Kind of Patato Bug

A great many complaints were heard among the farmers to-day, says an exchange, on the market regarding a grub which is destroying large quantities of potatoes. The grub seems to be operating all over the country and is particularly destructive to the potatoes planted in heavy land. It works in streaks, and one row of potatoes will be almost immune from the pest while the next will be nearly destroyed.

The grub, which is quite large, is about half an inch in length, and of a dull white color. It attacks the potato and gradually eats it until it has consumed it all, and then moves on to another tuber, where it repeats the process. In this way it does not take it very long to do an enormous lot of damage in a potato field. So far the farmers do not seem to have tried any remedy. In fact, it is just lately since they have started to dig their potatoes in quantity that they have found out how much damage the grub had really done. Some farmers estimate that about fifty per cent. of the yield will be useless and as the crop has not been so large this year as it usually is there may be a scarcity of potatoes this winter.

The Hotel Elevator

The recent fire at Ottawa by which the Gilmour Hotel was destroyed and a number of valuable lives lost affords another demonstration of the great danger of the modern hotel elevator. Unquestionably elevators are indispensable in large hostelries and other buildings such as stores, factories, &c., but it seems as if the time has arrived to compel the construction of elevators upon the side walls of large buildings, instead of in the centre of the buildings where they are generally to be found. Elevators centrally located in an hotel are a constant danger, but when the elevator is enclosed in the main stairs as it was in the case of the hotel destroyed, the danger is multiplied, for in the event of the flames sweeping up the elevator shaft as happens in fifty per cent. of hotel fires the natural means of escape from a burning building are cut off.

"HECLA" Fused Joints

Mean a Clean, Smokeless Home.

A warm air furnace, that will not leak gas or dust, provides an ideal heating system. It combines economy in first cost—and in operation, a plentiful supply of warm air and perfect ventilation. That is why "Hecla" Furnaces are made with FUSED JOINTS.

Where steel and cast-iron come together, the metals are fused or welded, so that they practically become ONE. This fusing (a Clare patented process) makes the "Hecla" absolutely dust, smoke and gas, tight.

There are a dozen and more other special features about the "Hecla" that you will appreciate almost as much as the FUSED JOINTS.

So let me send you the new Hecla catalogue, which gives all the details of construction. If you send me a rough plan of your house, I will tell you just what it will cost to install the "Hecla" Furnace. Write NOW to the "Hecla Furnace Builder" care of 30

RUSSIAN POPULAR SONGS.

(Boston Traveller.)

With a bomb in his hat,
And a bomb in his teeth,
And a bomb in his boot,
And a bomb underneath
Either tail of his coat,
Lo! a man in a mask
Seized a Duke by the throat
And proceeded to ask;

"Don't you love the smell of flowers
And the carolling of larks?
Don't you love the idle hours
Spent in Nature's sylvan parks?
Don't you, when you are a rover
'Neath the rural sky so blue,
Absolutely dote on clover,
Geese, and dairy maids. I do"

Said the Duke; "Yes, indeed,
Since my boyhood I've kept
Love of rural delights."
(Here the Terrorist wept.)
"You have soul, Duke," he said
"That can never be masked,"
Then he balanced a bomb
On one finger and asked;

"Don't you love the smell of flowers
And the owl's nocturnal hoot,
When you walk toward moonlit bowers,
Raking in a dell en route?
Don't you thrill at thrush's note?"
"Yes!" replied the Duke, "confound you!
Take your fingers off my throat!"

Then bang—bang went the bomb
And its owner said: 'Done!"
And the Duke hit the moon
On his way to the sun,
And the cop on the beat
Searched for Terrorists masked,
Most obligingly helped
By a stranger, who asked;

"Don't you love the smell of flowers?
Don't you love all plants a lot?
Both the violet that cowers
And the melon that does not
Don't you love the pretty thistle
And the tiger lily gay
Where's the brute who hurled that missile?
He cannot be far away."

One of the best fire escapes is a coil of rope in each bedroom fastened to an iron staple. This form of fire escape is not popular with hotel managers because, occasionally, it may be utilized to jump a board bill. That should not be allowed to stand in the way of its general adoption, however.

A British exchange says: It seems rather strange that the British manufacturers have not yet realised the merits of maple syrup as a constituent in various confections. Up to the present, Glasgow seems to have been the only buyer of maple sugar and maple syrup, but it is clear that there might be a big sale of this liquid. Its value for flavoring is very great, and all sweets containing it have an individuality of their own. It is not a particularly cheap article, but the feature of sugar goods just now is that the more expensive goods are selling best, and the slightly higher price would not be a consideration when English folk once tasted maple goods. In regard to quantity, the English woman or girl does not consume anything like the amount which her Canadian cousin would consider even moderate. If maple goods were widely circulated, it is likely, however, that Canadian ways would be emulated in this respect.

Taking occasion from the death of Lady Campbell-Bannerman, The New York Evening Post makes the interesting statement that Sir Alfred Harmsworth discovered her husband's growing popularity in a curious way. Having enquired of his agents how the political policy of his papers was liked, the answer came back: "It won't do to be too hard on C.B.; he is getting popular." And his popularity is still increasing.

At the last reception at Government House in Edmonton, Alberta, nine women wore gowns imported directly from Paris. Nothing can express more forcibly than this (says the Toronto Sunday World) the change that has come over the old Hudson's Bay trading post within three years. Three hundred and twenty-five miles north of the international boundary seems so very far north, indeed, that many easterners think of it as a country wrapped in snow and ice, with Eskimo styles in favor the year round. That the town can furnish this number of women who know the charms of a Paris gown and men of means enough to pay for their knowing, shows that after one hundred and eleven years and several attempts to make something of herself Edmonton is at last started on the high road to metropolitan honors.

BISON FURNACE

Twice as much heating surface is covered by the fire in a Bison Hot Water Furnace as in any other.

The flames are drawn up through the side flues, then down and to the chimney through the middle flue.

Burns all the gas and traps all the heat against the top section.

In other furnaces the fire travel is practically a direct one to the chimney, and much valuable heat escapes, the important top section getting less than any of the others.

The Bison has more good heating points than all other heaters combined.

Pandora Range

OVEN THERMOMETER. NO "BAD LUCK" BAKING DAYS.!

Twenty degrees difference in the temperature of an oven is sufficient to make "Good Luck" or "Bad Luck" in baking many kinds of food.

The heat in the oven of a range not fitted with a thermometer, or worse, fitted with a poor instrument, will easily vary twenty degrees—result is unpalatable, burned or half-baked food, a cross cook and a disappointed family at meal time.

Thermometer fitted in oven door of "Pandora" range has been a proven success for fifteen years, and every instrument is carefully adjusted, and tested by heat, before sending out—the first, best and only thermometer which is of any real value to those who do baking.

"Pandora" range is handsome, economical on fuel and a perfect baker.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

we took the risks and started in to get it. Most of us went away with the first cargo, and only two white men were left with a few Kanakas. Then you came. You were told you're not wanted, but you gently hinted at force majeure and were allowed to stay. Finally the rest of our crowd comes back, and it's force majeure on the other side, and now you've got to go. If you've the sense of oysters you'll go peacefully. There isn't enough for all of us: at any rate we don't intend to share."

"Mr. Carnforth," said Kettle. "I told you we'd better have bottled that dirty man with the window-pane eye who's been talking."

"Look here," said Carnforth hotly. "This is all nonsense. We've got as much right here as you."

"Right!" said the pearler. "Right had better not enter into the question. We're all a blooming lot of poachers, if it comes to that. You know that, Mr. Martin, or Carnforth, or whatever you choose to call yourself for the time being. You come here under a purser's name, your yacht is guyed out like a Mediterranean tunny fisher, and I guess you look upon the thing much as you did bagging knockers and brass doorplates in the old days at Cambridge—half the fun is in dodging the bobby."

"You're taking the wrong sort of tone," interrupted Carnforth. "I'm not used to being hectored at like this."

"I can believe it," said the pearler drily. "You are a successful man."

"And let me tell you this. You've got the upper hand for the present, that I admit. You may even force us out of the lagoon. But what then? I guess the account would not be closed; and when a man chooses to make me his enemy, I always see that he gets payment in full sooner or later."

"All right," said the man with the eyeglass, "pay away. Don't mind us."

"A hint at one of the Japanese ports as to what was goin' on would soon upset your little game."

"Not being fools," said the pearler coolly, "of course we've thought of that. We've—"

A hail came down the saloon skylight outside, from the deck above. "Scoot, boys, scoot! The Philistines be upon us."

"What's that?" shouted the man with the eyeglass.

"Well, it's one of those confounded Jap gunboats, if you want to know. Hurry, and we shall just get off. We'll leave these fools to pay the bill."

"Humph!" said the pearler, "that settles the matter another way. I must go, and I suppose you'll try to hook it too. Ta, ta, skipper; you're a good sort—I like you. By-by Carnforth, can't recommend the Jap jails. Hope you get caught, and that'll square up for your giving me a bad time at Cambridge."

He followed the others out on deck, and a moment later their whaleboat was pulling hard for where the luggers rode lazily at their anchors. Carnforth and Kettle went after him, and the engineers and the yacht's crew, who had been held down in the forecastle at rifle's muzzle, came on deck also.

It did not require any pressing to get the engine room staff to their work. The boilers were cold; but never were fires lit quicker. Paraffin, wood, small coal, grease, anything that would burn, was coaxed into the furnace doors. The cold gauges began to quiver, but as every man on board well knew, no human means could get a working steam pressure under half an hour.

On deck the crew had run the boats up to davits, had hove short by hand, and then stood like men on the drop, waiting their fate. The luggers had mastheaded their yards, and were beating down the lagoon against a spanking breeze. One after the other they tumbled out through the passage, and swung on the outer swell; and then, with their lugs goose-winged, fled like some scared seafowl out over the blue sun-scorched waters.

But though the yacht had canvas, Kettle knew that she could not beat to windward, and so dare not break his anchor out of the ground till the engineers had given her steam. There was nothing for it but to wait with what patience they could.

The Japanese gunboat had been sighted far enough off, and, as she was coming up from the farther side of the ring of reefs, she had to circle round them before she could gain the only entrance. Moreover, her utmost paper pace was eight knots, and she happened to be foul, and so her advance was slow. But still to the watching men it seemed that she raced up like a western ocean greyhound.

The sun rose higher. The stink of the rotting shellfish came to them in poisonous whiffs. At another time it would have spoken of wealth in sweet abundance. But now they disregarded it. Prison and disgrace were the only things before them, and these filled the mind.

Then the chief engineer called up to the bridge through the voice tube that he could give her enough steam for steerageway in another minute.

"Foredeck there!" cried Kettle. "Break out that anchor! By hand!" And the men labored with the hand gear, so as to save the precious steam. Then a thought flashed across Capt. Kettle's brain, and he quickly gave it to Carnforth. "It's only a beggarly chance, sir, but we'd better try it, I suppose?"

"Yes," said Carnforth.

"If only we hadn't painted out those names we might have done it more safely. As it is we must risk it. Off with you below, sir, and get into some decent clothes. You'd give the whole show away if you staid on the bridge here in those filthy rags. You may be a yacht owner, sir, but, by James, you look far more like an out-of-work coal trimmer."

Carnforth ran down the ladder and Kettle gave crisp orders to the hands on deck, who disappeared also, and presently came back dressed as spruce yachtsmen, in white trousers, white drill jumpers and straw hats; and by that time the yacht was under way and steaming slowly to the pass.

The gunboat was coming in with her crew at quarters, officers with swords on and everything cleared for action. The Japanese flag ran up to her peak.

Promptly an English royal yacht club burgee broke out at the poacher's main truck and a British blue ensign fluttered up to her poopstaff and dipped three times in salute.

Carnforth came up on the bridge. "Now, sir," said Kettle, "you must do the talking. I guess it's got to be lies, and lying's a thing I can't go."

"What shall I say?"

"Say what's needed," replied Kettle, concisely; "and don't say it wrong. Remember, sir, you're lying for your liberty. It's neck for nothing. She's got two big guns trained on us, and a shot from either would send us to Jones before we could get in a smack in return."

"What ship's that?" came the hail in perfect English.

"Steam yacht Vestris. Lord Martin, owner," said Carnforth, who knew the value of titles on the foreigners. "I am Lord Martin."

"What are you doing in here?"

"Been watching those poachers."

"Heave to and explain."

"I shall do nothing of the sort, and if you dare to fire on me I will bring the British fleet about your ears."

The Japanese spokesman gasped, and consulted with a superior, and the steamers drew abreast.

"But you must heave to."

"I shall do nothing of the kind."

"But you are in forbidden waters."

"Then you should put up a notice to say so. I shall report this to my admiralty in London."

"Go it," said Kettle, sotto voce. "For blooming cheek, give me an M.P."

"But you must stop," said the Japanese, "or I shall be compelled to fire."

"You can do as you please," said Carnforth. "I shall report you to your commander-in-chief at Nagasaki. I never came across such insolence. You heard my name—Lord Martin. You'll hear more of it before long."

Steam was rising in the gauges, and the yacht was getting into her stride of 12 knots. She sped out through the passage, and rolled in the trough of the glistening swells beyond. The crew of the warship still stood to their guns, but the officers were in a dilemma. These pestilential Britishers always did make such a row if any of their vessels were fired on; and this, apparently, was a yacht, though grotesquely unkempt, and tricked out with a black and red funnel; and, moreover, she was owned by a peer of the realm.

A last despairing hail came over the waters: "Are you noble?"

"Yes, haven't I told you? Lord Martin. You'll know it better when you're next in port."

And that was the last word. The gunboat turned and steamed out after them, but her turning circle was large and her speed slow. By midday she was hull down astern: by evening her mast trucks were under the water.

Carnforth strutted the deck complacently. "Rather a gorgeous bluff, eh, skipper?" he said at last.

"You're the only man on this ship that could have done it," said Kettle admiringly. "It takes a parliamentary education to lie like that."

Again the silence grew between them, and Carnforth said, musingly: "I wonder who that Cambridge man was."

"He seemed to hate you pretty tenderly."

"He did that. I suppose I must have played some practical joke on him. Well, I know I used to be up to all sorts of larks in those days, skipper, but that's long enough ago now, and all that sort of foolishness is past."

Capt. Kettle laughed. "Have you done with pearl-poaching, sir? Or are you going to have another try at it? But don't paint out the name of your ship next time. If that Jap had had the eyes of a mule he'd have seen the change, and he'd have taken his chances and fired. Gov. L. C. Walthrop is no name for an English milord's yacht."

THE RAIDING OF DONNA CLOTILDE

If anyone had announced in the captains' room at Hallett's that a man could leave that sanctum shortly before turning-out time, and be forthwith kidnapped in the open streets of South Shields, every master-mariner within hearing would have put him down contemptuously as a gratuitous liar. All opinions in the captains' room were expressed strongly, and with due maritime force of language.

The place seemed to its frequenters the embodiment of homeliness and security. There was a faint smell of varnish in the atmosphere, and always had been within the memory of the oldest habitue, and shipmasters came back to the odor with a sign of pleasure, as men do return to the neighborhood of an old and unobtrusive friend. Captains met in that room who traded to all parts of the globe, talked, and soon found acquaintances in common. It was a sort of informal club, with no subscription, and an unlimited membership. The holding of a master's "ticket" was the only entrance qualification, and it was not considered polite to ask your neighbor whether he was at that moment in or out of employment.

If you were a genuine master mariner, but of an unclubable disposition, you did not go to the captains' room at Hallett's a second time and always made a point of getting rather red and speaking of it contemptuously, when the place was mentioned afterwards. If you did not hold a master's ticket, even if you were that dashing thing, a newly-fledged mate, the barmaiden on guard spotted you on the instant, and said "that door was private," and directed you to the smoke-room down the passage.

Into this exclusive chamber Capt. Owen Kettle had made his way that day after tea, and over two modest half pints of bitter beer had done his share in the talk and the listening from 8 till 10.30 of the clock. He had exchanged views with other shipmasters on cargoes, crews, insurances, climates, and those other professional matters which the profane world (not in the shipping interest) finds so dreary; and had been listened to with deference. He was a man who commanded attention, and though you might not like what he said, would not dream of refusing to listen to it.

That special night, however, Capt. Kettle's personal views on maritime affairs were listened to with even more deference than usual. A large red-haired man swung into the captain's room some few minutes after Kettle had seated himself, and after ordering his beverage and a cigar, nodded with a whimsical smile in Kettle's direction, and asked him how he liked the neighborhood of Valparaiso as a residence.

"I forget," said the little sailor, drily enough.

"All right, captain," said the red-haired man, "don't you mind me. I never remember too much myself either. Only you did me a good turn out there, although you probably don't know it, and I'd be proud if you'd have a drink or smoke with me now in remembrance."

"You're very polite, captain."

"Don't mention it, captain," said the red-haired man, and struck the bell. "Same? Half-a-pint of bitter, please, Miss, and one of your best fourpenny smokes."

The general talk of the captains' room, which had halted for the moment, went on again. One worthy mariner had recently failed to show a clean bill of health in Barcelona, and had been sent to do 20 days' penance at the quarantine station, which is in Port Mahon, Minorca. As a natural consequence, he wanted to give his views on Spain and Spanish Government with length and bitterness, but somehow the opportunity was denied him. The red-haired man put in a sentence or two, and a question, and it was Kettle's views on the matter to which the captains' room found itself listening.

A salvage point was brought up by a stout gentleman in the Baltic timber trade who was anxious to air his sentiments; but the red-haired man skillfully intervened, and "Kettle on Salvage" was asked for and heard. And so on all through the evening. The red-haired man did his work cleverly, and no one resented it.

Now, Kettle was a man who liked being listened to, and there is no doubt that his vanity was tickled by all this deference from his professional equals. There is no doubt also that the usual security of Hallett's lulled his usual sense of wariness, which may in part account for what happened afterward. And so, without further excuse for him, it is my painful duty to record that an hour after he left the captains' room, the little sailor was entrapped and kidnapped by what, to a man of his knowledge, was one of the most vulgar of artifices.

He emptied his tumbler, stood up and said he must be going. The red-haired man looked at the round cabin clock on the wall and mentioned that it was his time also; and together they went outside into the damp, dark main street of South Shields.

"Going back to your ship, captain?" asked the big stranger.

"Why, no, captain," said Kettle, "I live here, and I'm off home."

"Then I suppose I must say good-night. Hope to meet you again, though. What boat are you on now, captain?"

"Well, I'm putting in a bit of a spell ashore just now, captain. Fact is, I haven't run across any employment quite to my taste lately. 'Tisn't every shipowner I care to serve under."

"No," said the red-haired man. "They are brutes, most of them. But look here, captain there'd be no offence in my getting you the refusal of berth, would there?"

Kettle flushed. "Captain," he said, "you're very good. You see, I'm married, with children, and I've never earned enough to put anything by. Between men, I don't mind telling you I'm on my beam ends. If I can't get hold of an advance note this week, it will mean going to the pawnshop for Mrs. Kettle's next Sunday dinner."

The red-haired man sighed. "Well, captain," he said, "you needn't thank me. It's just my duty to my employers to put this thing in your way. But we'll not speak of it here in the open. Come along off to my steamboat."

"Right," said Kettle. "Where have you got her?"

"She's lying at a buoy in the river. We can get a boat from the steps."

Nothing much more was said between them then, the big-red-haired man seemed indisposed to further talk, and Kettle was too proud to ask questions. Together they walked with their short seaman's stride, down the wet new streets of the seaport, and Capt. Kettle made his brain ache by hoping that this would not be another item to add to his long list of disappointments. He had not earned a day's wage for six months, and he was in such straits for want of money that he was growing desperate.

They got down to the steps and took a waterman's boat, turned up the piece of plank which lay in the stern sheets, and sat on the dry side, and then pushed off into the dark river. The red-haired man picked up the yoke lines and steered the boat amongst the dense shipping; past tiers of coasting schooners, and timber droghers, and out-of-work clinker-built tugs; past ungainly iron steam tramps, fishing craft, dredges, and the other resting traffic of the Tyne; and finally rounded up under a frieze of sterns, and ran alongside the gangway of a 200-ton steam yacht.

"Hullo," said Kettle, "pleasure?"

"Well, hardly that," said the red-haired man. "Step aboard, captain, and I'll pay off the waterman."

"He'd better wait to take me ashore again."

"No, let him go. We may have a long talk. I'll put you ashore in one of my own boats when you go. Now, captain, here we are. Come below to my room."

"You've got steam up, I see," said Kettle, as they walked aft along the white, wet decks.

"My orders," said the red-haired man.

"Sail soon?"

"May start any minute. We never know. My owner's a rare one for changing mind."

"Huh," said Kettle, "might be a woman."

"Devilish like a woman," said the red-haired man drily. He opened a door at the foot of the companionway and turned an electric light switch. This is my room, captain. Step right in. A drop of whiskey might be a good thing to keep out the cold while we talk. Excuse me a minute while I go get a couple of tumblers. I guess the steward's turned in."

Kettle seated himself on a velvet-covered sofa, and looked round at the elaborate fittings of the cabin. "Satin-wood panels," he commented, "nickel battens to put the charts on, glass-backed bookcase, and silk bunk curtains; no expense spared anywhere Lord, who wouldn't sell a farm and go to sea. But the old man said she wasn't pleasure! I wonder what the game is? Contraband, I guess; many a yacht's great on that. Well, anyway, I've got to hear."

The red-haired man came back with two half-filled tumblers and a water jug. "Here's the poison," said he; "mix it according to your own weight."

"That's rather more than my usual whack," said Kettle, eyeing the tumbler; "but it's a cold, wet night, so here's—by the way, captain, I'm afraid I've forgotten your name?"

"My name?" said the red-haired man. "O, yes; I'm Douglas, Capt. Douglas."

"Capt. Douglas," said Kettle, thoughtfully. "No, I can't say I recall it at present. Well, sir, anyway, here's your very good health and prosperity."

"Same," said the red-haired man, and absorbed his whiskey and water with the dexterity of an artist. Out of politeness Capt. Kettle finished his tumbler also; there is an etiquette about these matters.

Silence filled the cabin for a minute or so, broken only by the distant clatter of a shovel on a fire bar, and Kettle looked at the cabin clock. It was 11.30, and Mrs. Kettle would be expecting him home. "Hullo," he said, "firing up? O, I suppose you've got to keep steam on the donkey boiler while you're in the harbor, to run your dynamo. By the way, you were talking about some employment you could put in my way, captain?" he added suggestively.

"Employment!" said Douglas uneasily. "O, was I? Employment! [illegible] to be sure. Well, you see, captain, it was my owner I was speaking for, and I've been thinking it over, and perhaps on the whole you'd better see her for yourself."

"Her!" said Kettle. "Is there a woman at the head of this concern?"

"A lady, call her. But look here, captain, you're getting sleepy. Why not turn in here for the night, and see her yourself in the morning?"

Kettle yawned, and his head nodded. "I am sleepy, and that's a fact, though I don't know why I should be. But it wouldn't do for me to turn in here for the night. Mrs. Kettle's ex-

No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air—DRY air—constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,—carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food that's being baked.

Please visit any of our stores and see why this is the right range for your kitchen.

It certainly does do good baking.

The shipments of cheese last week from the ports of Montreal and Quebec amounted to 69,663 boxes, as against 61,467 boxes for the previous week, and 87,609 boxes for the corresponding week of last year. Total shipments since May 1, 1,561,724 boxes, as against 1,431,994 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Receipts since May 1, 1,706,142 boxes, as against 1,-660,606 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Last week's receipts amounted to 82,026 boxes, as against 81,402 boxes for the previous week, and 79,225 boxes for the corresponding week of last year.

Exports of butter last week amounted to 10,948 packages, as against 12,156 packages for the previous week and 21,920 packages for the corresponding week of last year. Total shipments since May 1, 303,304 packages, as against 460,465 packages for the corresponding period of last year. Receipts since May 1, 509,687 packages, as against 614,097 packages for the corresponding period of last year. Last week's receipts were 14,576 packages, as against 21,914 packages for the previous week, and 26,583 packages for the corresponding week of last year.

Live Like Wild Beasts

Vancouver, B.C., September 26.—A heartrending story of child neglect was brought to Vancouver yesterday by Mr. James McCormick, of Toronto, who for the past three months has been summering on Vancouver Island, and while there penetrated some of the wildest and most deserted portions away at the north end of the island, in a deserted shack, in a more deserted portion of the woods, lives a man who has two children, one ten and one six years old, and neither of these girls have been washed or had their hair combed for years. They have never worn shoes nor stockings, and are in such a state of neglect that they are almost like wild beasts. The mother of the two little girls died when the younger was born, and was buried by her husband in the yard of the shack, in which he has since lived with the two children. When the father goes into the woods, the two children follow him like dogs, and the small one often crawls on her hands and knees, like a beast. Both children are so unused to strangers that they run at the sight of one, and it was with great difficulty that Mr. McCormick was able to take a photograph of the elder girl. Her hair is matted with vermin, and her clothing absolutely filthy. The small child's hair and body is in a similar condition, and the father of the two girls is just as bad. Mr. McCormick will call on the provincial police and give the full particulars of the case to them, so that the children may either be taken away from their negligent father or some steps taken to make the man give them more attention. The shack where the three live is in the last state of neglect. There is no furniture and the children are forced to sleep and eat on the filthy floor, which has not been scrubbed for years. The children, when they are not following their father, play around the shack, and if anyone goes near them they run like frightened deer. The father of the children has developed into a mere brute. He never washes himself or combs his hair, or removes his filthy clothes.

A Boer Carbine

Minneapolis Journal: Taken from the dead hands of Colonel E. F. Bennel, of General Cronje's staff, after the battle of Paardeberg, recaptured by the Boers and again captured by the British, a Mauser carbine, now owned by P. J. Kennedy, of Minneapolis, is a weapon of great interest.

Boer marksmanship was the wonder of the world and was all that enabled the little South African republics to hold Great Britain at bay for three long years of bloody and desperate fighting. Yet this carbine is little larger than the air rifles used by the boys of this country. On its stock are carved the arms of the Transvaal republic and a record of the battles in which it was used.

Spion Kop, Reofu and Cosburg are three of the fields on which it saw service and a death's head carved on the stock hints grimly at the execution it did in the hands of its first owner. It was Colonel Bennel's turn at Paardeberg, and when the British entered the laager where Cronje made his desperate last stand, Major Scott Hardin, of the South African Light Horse, found the carbine gripped in the dead hand of Colonel Bennel.

Major Hardin evidenly knew a good weapon when he saw it, for he added the little Mauser to his armament and carried it until he was captured at Diamond Hill in June, 1900. For a while it again served a Boer master, but at Eland's Valley, Noolzedacht, it fell into the hands of J. Barkly, of the New South Wales Lancers.

At St. Louis this carbine occupied a prominent place in the Boer war exhibit. After the exhibition, Mr. Barkly passed through Minneapolis on his way west and sold the carbine to Mr. Kennedy. Since then Mr. Kennedy has refused an offer of $50 for it. While its chief value is for exhibition purposes, it is still in excellent condition.

Dooley on the Power Of the Printed Word

A Gentleman.

(Saturday Night.)

One day last spring, when the races were in full swing at the Woodbine track in Toronto, an old lady from beyond Richmond Hill, who was driving along Yonge street into the city, was worried by the automobiles that passed her heedlessly by, notwithstanding the fact that her horse had backed into the fence. At last a very large automobile came along with a gay party, one of whom told the chauffeur to stop, which he did. The man who gave the order then jumped out and enquired what was the matter. With tears the old woman told him how the other automobilists had acted, and she declared they were "no gentlemen." The man backed out the old horse and buggy and helped her in, and she asked him his name. He made inaudible reply, but she thought she caught the word "Grey," and holding out her hand, she said:

"Whether your name's White, Brown or Grey, you're a real gentleman."

He shook hands heartily, and she did not know until some weeks later that the "real gentleman" was His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada.

Dr. Orr's Mistake

(Toronto Telegram.)

The more Dr. J. O. Orr talks about the Stars and Stripes mistake at the Exhibition, the bigger that mistake grows.

Dr. Orr assumed that in flying the Stars and Stripes from the highest pinnacle in the Exhibition grounds he chose the only possible method of showing good-will to American visitors.

Such an assumption was a mistake, aggravated by Dr. Orr's subsequent intimation that hostility to the wholesale display of the Stars and Stripes at a Canadian Fair implied ill-will to the American Republic or hatred to Americans individually.

If Dr. Orr had allowed the original mistake to stand without explanation the incident would have been quickly closed. The unnecessary flaunting of the Stars and Stripes was an error that must not be repeated. There is no objection to a reasonable display of courtesy, but Dr. Orr imagined that display of courtesy was identical with an unnecessarily lavish display of Old Glory.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining or the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

TENNYSON'S MOODS.

Eccentric Manner In Which the Poet Received Some Visitors.

It was an eccentric reception that Sir Henry Rosco was given when he visited Lord Tennyson. The former had been unwilling to intrude on the poet, but consented to accompany a friend, William Summers, who had a note of introduction from Sir Lewis Morris. They found Tennyson at lunch. Sir Henry writes of it: "Tennyson at once asked me to sit by him, while Mr. Summers was held in conversation at the other side of the room by Lady Tennyson. The old man began with the words, 'Your name has been before me at every meal,' at which I expressed great astonishment, not thinking that he had ever heard of me.

"And thereupon he produced a small vial containing saccharin, on the outside of which was an advertisement containing a few lines of some appreciatory remarks respecting saccharin which I had made in a lecture at the Royal Institute. This notice I had never seen, and on my return home I wrote to the proprietors requesting them to stop issuing such notices, as I could not have my name used for advertising purposes, and this they did.

"In a few minutes, without further conversation, Tennyson rose and said: 'Well, I must bid you goodby, for I must now lie down. I am going to smoke a cigar and go to sleep.' Upon which he walked out of the room, giving a distant nod to my disconsolate friend, Will Summers, who had come on purpose to interview the poet, but with whom he had not exchanged a single word."

MATCHES ON MAIL BOXES.

The Scratcher May Afterward Get a Light on Prison Bars.

Mr. Smoker, see to it that your Uncle Samuel doesn't catch you striking a match on one of his mail boxes. He'll surely make trouble for you if he can prove that a certain scratch on the metal of one of those gray boxes on the corners was made by your drawing the tip of a lucifer across it.

That's about what the mail carrier told the fellow who is handing you this advice. It was given just after the adviser had stopped, feeling "smoky" after coming out of an office where they wouldn't let him puff the stogie he had in his pocket, to scratch a match on the mail box. He was rather surprised when the mail carrier, coming up to unlock the box, said:

"Don't do that!"

"Why not?" he queried. "I've been doing it for years. It doesn't hurt the box. Other fellows and myself have scratched matches on the top of this mail box for years, and there is only a little worn patch on the metal to show for it."

"Well, go ahead if you want to," sighed the mail carrier. "But remember that, if the inspector sees you, up you go on a charge of defacing government property. And you know that if the inspector ever gets you it's you for scratching matches on the prison bars for a day or so. By-by."

How the Great Penguin Hatches.

It may interest you to know that the great penguin of the southern circle standing with its head as high as a man's waist, hatches its eggs in a peculiar manner. These are not laid upon the ground and brooded on after the manner of most birds' eggs. The female lays two large eggs. The first she hands over to the male bird, the other she keeps. The egg is held on the upper surface of the large flat feet, and is pushed up under the waistcoat of thick feathers. It is there held close to the body, whose warmth gradually vitalizes the young bird. So tenacious are the parent birds of this grip that if you knock one of them over it will fall on its back with its feet stuck stiffly out, still clutching the egg to its body.

Tommy and His Pets.

The British soldier is inordinately fond of his animal pets and has also the reputation of coveting those of his neighbors, particularly dogs and mongooses. Parrots he simply adores, and it is calculated that their strength in the service is in the proportion of at least six birds a Tommy. He is supposed to teach them to be personal in their language, but as a matter of fact Tommy is for some unaccountable reason a very emotional man, and his birds as often as not have to submit to a sound musical education, hymns being as often taught them as the comic songs of the day.

The Same Old Dish.

Two thousand years ago the chafing dish was used by the Greeks and Romans. It was so popular that it was used for a table ornament, just as floral pieces are used now. Pliny relates that the tragic actor, Æsopus, had a dish worth 1,000 sestercii. No doubt then, as at the present time, the actor enjoyed his hot midnight meal filled with grateful appreciation of the chafing dish.

An Inspiration.

"Of course," said the new rector, "you hope eventually to reside in a heavenly mansion where"—

"Oh, yes," interrupted Miss Uppisch, "and I do hope it won't be too close to the heavenly huts of the poor."

A Good Example.

Generous Uncle—I will make you a monthly allowance; but, understand me, I will pay no debts! Nephew—All right, uncle. Neither will I.

Believe that every longing of your soul contains its own prophecy of fulfillment.—Bradbury.

Testing Prudence

....By M. J. PHILLIPS

Copyright, 1906, by Beatrix Reade

Berkeley Marshall leaned luxuriously back in the shady chair, hoisted his feet to the bed and blew a ring of smoke ceilingward from his cigar. "To recapitulate," he began, directing his remarks to the calendar which hung on the wall and from which stared back at him the face of a supposedly beautiful young woman with a fixed and sugary smile, "your left ear is confoundedly out of drawing. I beg your pardon, I'm not an artist. I'm a civil engineer—or will be next June. And that isn't what I started out to remark.

"To recapitulate, I have peddled maps over three states, and the net profits of these adventures are $531.62. I have a steady job during the college year waiting on table at three per and found. Furthermore, I have a dress suit and clothes and ties and things. Further yet, I have an invitation from my cousin, Torrence Marshall, to spend a week with him at Sylvan Cove, the swellest resort on this little old ocean. It is now Saturday night, Sept. 15, and college opens up the 25th.

"The question seems to be shall I go on peddling maps and accumulating more filthy lucre, which I may possibly need; shall I go home, which is 300 miles away; to college, which is 450, or to Sylvan Cove, which is under a hundred and where pretty young women, it is presumed, abound?"

In due parliamentary form the Sylvan Cove question was put and carried unanimously, whereupon the boy—he was little more—bowed gravely to the calendar lady and thanked her for her kindness in voting with him. Then he ran down the stairs of the country hotel to consult the time table, for he was in a hurry to be off.

Marshall found Sylvan Cove in the elaborate simplicity stage of summer resort development. Everything was costly, but very plain, for the Cove was inhabited each season mainly by wealthy people who had become accustomed to their money.

On the first day of his stay Marshall naively confided to his cousin that he believed Prudence Fairchild to be the prettiest girl at the Cove, whereupon Torrence grinned and replied, "Stung, are you?" On the second day he learned that she could swim like a seal and golf like a Scot. That evening, by virtue of four dances which she generously gave him at the pavilion party, his stock of knowledge was augmented by the fact that Miss Prudence danced like a fairy.

His approval of the tanned, red lipped and wholesome young woman deepened during a long sail the next morning, when he discovered that her taste in books and tennis rackets was identical with his own. When Torrence informed him later, however, that her father, Rufus Fairchild, was credited with more millions than there were letters to his name the young man experienced a novel and entirely unpleasant sinking of the heart.

His own financial situation did not trouble Marshall—in fact, he found humor in his poverty. Marshall's father had been rich until an industrial flurry had left him broken and penniless. Berkeley himself, a natural engineer and in love with the profession he had chosen, felt the prescient stir of genius within him, vague but real. His teachers predicted great things of him, and with the knowledge of his own powers and his burning desire to achieve, fame and wealth were merely around the next corner.

Yet the fact of Miss Fairchild's wealth depressed him. "I've almost monopolized her since I've been here," he told himself, "and she'll think it's the blooming money. I suppose half this bunch that's hanging around her would marry a Digger Indian for the old man's pile. I wish she were poor!" The latter aggrieved and sincere remark revealed to Marshall that he was dangerously near being in love.

A certain sensitive pride, for he had a morbid fear that his attitude might be misconstrued, kept Marshall out of the girl's presence most of the time thereafter. Maybe she understood, for the possession of much money often brings a woman bitter wisdom; maybe it was a feminine desire to repay him for his aloofness; at any rate, Miss Fairchild contrived to give Marshall a glance at parting, as he held her cool little hand, that thrilled his every pulse. It was like the song of a nightingale or the scent of June roses. And the memory moved him again and again that winter as he built theoretical bridges in the class room or delivered vegetable soup in the hotel dining room.

Now, a look such as that from a girl who is not a flirt dwells in her memory too. Miss Fairchild's cheeks were hot sometimes when she thought of it and of the answering glance of bewildered joy that flashed from Marshall's blue eyes. "He might take advantage of it," she said to herself in brief, delicious panic when the invitation of a chum, Nell Burrows, to come for the January hop of the seniors at Marshall's college reached her. But she went nevertheless.

The assurance with which he confiscated five of the dances on her card at the ball showed that Marshall remembered. They sat out two, which was delightful, but dangerous. There was little said, and the silence between them was intimate and significant.

Removed from the glamour of the lights and the music, from the half shielded promise of her eyes and the intoxication of her beauty, Marshall was not satisfied. "If she were only poor!" he repeated to himself. "How can she know that it's she I want and not the money? Suppose that she thinks I'm a fortune hunter? And if the money makes any difference with her, then she doesn't care for me. I wish I knew. If you only could give me a sign, sweetheart, that you had faith in my love"—

It was lunchtime, and Marshall was at his accustomed table in the hotel. His musings were broken by the opening of the door. Miss Fairchild and Miss Burrows came in. They were accompanied by Bronson and Carrick, wealthy frat men of his own class.

Out of the corner of his eye Marshall saw Miss Fairchild start a trifle when she recognized him. When the party had been seated two tables away by young Condon, another student waiter, the girl's back was toward him. He had given her no opportunity for a greeting.

For it had flashed over the young man that the sign, either of favor or of contempt for his poverty and his menial occupation, must be given. The girl would show whether her nature were gold or dross. If she were ashamed of him, if she left the room without a word, he resolved to tear the love he felt from his heart and trample it under foot.

Marshall never knew what he did before the crucial time came, the moment of the party's rising from the table after lunch, but no detail of what followed escaped him. He saw the amused lift of Bronson's eyebrows, the scowl on Carrick's forehead and Miss Burrows' undisguised interest as Prudence Fairchild, eyes softly shining, came back to where he stood.

"If the mountain will not go to Mohammed," she said smilingly, "then of course Mohammed must come to the mountain. And I mean to quarrel with you some time for turning your back when I came in. But I shan't scold now; I'm leaving for home tomorrow, and I wondered if I'll see you again."

"I will call tonight to say goodby," he replied eagerly, "and I have something important to say, if I may see you alone. I think I've been waiting all my life to say it."

Her glance thrilled him as it had that September day at the seashore.

"You may see me alone," she whispered.

The Florentine Epicure.

Your typical Florentine is epicurean to the toe tips. His enthusiasms and yearnings are quite other than those of the northerner. Give him 2 francs a day for life, and he will toil no more. He may be a marquis and seventh or eighth in direct descent, but he will be content to forego the assertion of his rank so he may thenceforward enjoy the priceless boon of leisure and independence. His leisure he will dissipate at the cafe with perhaps two three-halfpenny sweet fluids per diem, and you may study the effect of his independence in his courtly manners even though his hat be worn at the brim and his coat back be deplorably shiny. He is a pellucid brook, shallow as you please, yet engaging for his pellucidity. As he sits on the red velvet cushions and looks forth at the carriages and gowns of fashion in the Via Tornabuoni he shows no trace of envy on his open countenance. What, in effect, have these rich ones more than he save the ennui of modishness and the indigestion of high feeding? The monuments and blue skies of Florence, not to mention the glorious or stirring memories of its history, are rather more his than theirs.—Cornhill Magazine.

Disraeli's Retirement.

In 1876 Mr. Disraeli was raised by the queen to the peerage under the title of Lord Beaconsfield, and he left the house of commons before the news of his elevation to the house of lords had been made public. His withdrawal from the stage where he had played so long the leading part in a manner obviously devised to avoid any sort of ovation was in accordance with the dignity which characterized the remaining years of his life after the defeat of the Conservatives, when the general election of 1880, in consequence of the Midlothian campaign, had terminated his public career. No applicant for his opinions on any subject ever received a postal card from Lord Beaconsfield. No speech was ever made by him at railway stations. He died in 1881 as he had lived—alone, a stranger amid a strange people. After his death his memory became to English Conservatives an object of almost sentimental affection; to English Radicals it remained an object of never failing animosity. But to Englishmen of all politics, to Conservatives and Liberals alike, his life continues to be a constant puzzle, an unsolved enigma.—London Standard.

An African Sea Serpent Story.

Here is a sea serpent story from one of the great fresh water lakes of central Africa. The Globe Trotter of Nairobi, British East Africa, tells it: "According to natives on the shore and islands of Lake Victoria the real simon pure water python is a reality. Officers on board the Sibyl and the Winifred have time and again been unable to account for the unrest shown at times in the most tranquil waters. Sir Clement Hill in crossing the lake some years ago in a launch with one Macgregor, the engineer, saw this monster and described it as having a head resembling the hippopotamus, only three times broader, but much more flat and wedge shaped. The opinion of the natives regarding its length, etc., differs very much, but all agree that the reptile is amphibious and declare they have seen forty feet or more lying dormant on the bank, while the supposed tail, sixty or seventy feet from shore, created a commotion in the water resembling the wash of an ocean steamer."

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. ROSE E. WATKINS.

She Is the First Woman River Pilot In Illinois.

The honor of being the first woman in Illinois to secure a license as river pilot and master is possessed by Mrs. Rose E. Watkins, wife of Captain George T. Watkins of Lasalle county. She holds a certificate from the United States government giving her the authority to handle boats up to a capacity of 100 tons upon the waters of the Illinois river or its tributaries.

Mrs. Watkins was formerly Miss Rose Scoenheider of Peoria and was raised near the banks of the Illinois river. She taught school for several years, and when her husband, following their marriage, purchased the steamer they now own she assisted him in running it and soon completely mastered the details of navigation. Her charming personality made her popular with excursionists. Mrs. Watkins has a reputation for coolness at all times and has never lost her presence of mind while handling a steamer. Her husband acts as engineer, and his wife steers the vessel. She is proud of the honor of being the first woman pilot in Illinois.—Chicago News.

Children and Sleep.

Probably sleep is the desideratum most regularly abused by the children of the modern town and city parents. Parties, calls and social engagements of many kinds are allowed to invade the hours of rest which the growing organism absolutely requires if it is to attain its highest possibilities. Not only are boys and girls of fourteen and fifteen allowed occasionally to dance until long after midnight, but from day to day the hour at which they go to bed is permitted to vary almost as much as they may desire. It demands no prolonged experience to prove that even a person of mature years cannot practice indefinite irregularity in the amount of sleep gained daily without paying the penalty in the form of depleted vitality, and sooner or later, if the habit be carried to an extreme, in the form of nervous breakdown. How much more necessary, therefore, must adequate sleep be in the case of the growing body?—James Rowland Angell in The World Today.

For the Sewing Room.

In the sewing room fasten to the wall back of the machine or beside it a set of hanging pockets, at least a dozen in number. Mark each plainly with the sort of thread it is meant to hold—"black silk, No. A" or "white cotton, No. 60." At bottom of the pockets hang a book of flannel leaves numbered from one to ten and holding needles of sizes to match their numbers. Another set of marked pockets for bindings, stay casing, buttons, hooks and eyes, crayons, chalk, basting cotton and so on should be put up on the wall where it can be reached from the low sewing chair provided for hand work. Each set of pockets can be backed with a square of denim. Sew small brass rings to the corners to slip over screw hooks in the walls. Thus they can be put up without defacement. In a permanent sewing room it is helpful to tack up on the wall the plates after which the garments of the moment are to be fashioned.

Why Women Get Tired.

A wise counselor tells tired women that it is not the work they do that tires them; it is the way they do it. The woman whose work is never out of her mind is the woman who is always tired. The farmer's wife doing a week's work in her imagination after she goes to bed, the bookkeeper searching in her dreams through columns of figures for an obstinate balance—all these are tired because they do not know what it is to have a mind at ease. A story is told of a conscientious worrier who, hurrying about her work, slipped and fell. The result, a broken hip, placed her for weeks out of reach of "the things which must be done." Weeks of lonely rest brought her a new perspective of life and a conviction that peace of mind is more than pies and cakes. Realizing at last that the worst enemy of good work is worry, she afterward said, with a peaceful smile, "My broken hip saved my life and soul."

When Baby Is Feverish.

In a little baby a feverish cold may possibly be pneumonia. Such a case should have careful attention and treatment under a good doctor. It is nevertheless true that many times baby will have great relief when breathing is hard and fever is high and the bronchial passages seem to be closed if the stomach is emptied. An eminent physician says that an emetic at bedtime has saved many a little life. In a little helpless child the secretions sometimes gather, and the baby has not the capacity to throw them off as an active child or an adult would do, so that what really amounts to a form of strangling takes place. If the stomach is cleared the reflex action of the effort often clears out the passages. It is well known that in an attack of spasmodic croup an emetic is often effective, and one of the well known and successful croup remedies acts on this principle.

Women House Decorators.

Mrs. Davidge, who studied for more than ten years before she attempted to decorate a single house, says: "A natural gift of arrangement or tasteful instincts may be very important elements in the makeup of a furnisher, but they are by no means a sufficient ground for taking up that career. Only after long preparation and the study of the history of furniture, architecture and design is a furnisher qualified to handle the question of interior decoration." Therefore let the girl who thinks to enter the ranks of decorators without arduous training beware.—Good Housekeeping.

Emancipation of Women.

While it is impracticable to consider the law in detail, generalizing, it may be said that woman now possesses (1) complete control of her person and of her property, real and personal, (2) freedom to enter into contracts, (3) the right to sue for injuries to her character, person or property, (4) the joint custody of her children, though this is a recent development and it must be admitted that the excepted states far outnumber those where the rule is in force, (5) in four states the right of equal suffrage and in twenty-two others and two territories a restricted right, applicable only to school affairs.

Mock Prairie Chicken.

What to Eat gives a recipe for "mock prairie chicken," a glorified fricassee. Steam one or more large fowls several hours until tender. In a large skillet place a tablespoonful of butter, several slices of bacon, half a dozen peppercorns and some whole cloves. Cut up the chicken, if it was steamed whole, roll the pieces in salted flour and fry until brown. Just before serving pour in a cupful of cream. Allow it to boil up once and serve immediately.

For Anaemic Children.

This drink for anaemic children is said to be good: Place four ounces of sugar in a jar, add half a gallon of boiling water. Stir. Now add sixteen drops of strong solution of perchloride of iron. Fill up with water to make one gallon. If the proportions are kept a smaller quantity may be made. The liquid contains one drop of iron in each half pint. The dose may be one wineglassful three or four times daily.

Avoid a Shiny Face.

A greasy skin may arise from various causes, but generally from lack of cleanliness or debility of the skin. Only an astringent has any effect upon it, and a very simple, harmless one may be made from one pint of rosewater, half a pint of white wine vinegar and a few drops of essence of rose. This lotion may be applied occasionally with a piece of soft linen or a very fine sponge.

Modeling Clay.

If parents would invest in a small amount of ordinary modeling clay they would feel well repaid in seeing what a source of amusement it is for the children. They rarely tire of the work and very quickly learn to model useful household articles. Vases, jardinieres and even flower boxes can be made, and when covered with enamel paint prove useful.

A Kilt Skirt.

In pressing the plaits in a kilt skirt it often seems difficult to make them keep the fold long after the pressing has been apparently satisfactory. In order to make the plaits hard and stiff press on the wrong side with a heavy iron and over a very damp cloth. The important thing is to be sure that the cloth is entirely dry before removing the iron.

To Save Sifting Ashes.

A piece of rather fine wire netting cut to fit the ash tray under a range will save all sifting of cinders, as only the fine dust will drop through it. The netting should be cut slightly larger than the tray, so that an edge can be turned up all round it to keep it in place.

A good scheme in buying children's underwear is to select the drawers without seams up the back. When the knees begin to be worn cut off the drawers just above the knee, sew them on again, putting the worn part underneath the knee, thus making them last almost twice as long.

The safest way to cleanse bronze is to rub it with a soft cloth moistened with sweet oil, polish afterward with an oil chamois. All dust must be removed before attempting to clean and polish it.

Inflammation in the knees is a rather disagreeable form of retribution for wearing high heels. Lifelong lameness sometimes results from overindulgence in high heels.

When cooking, do not leave a spoon in anything that you want to boil quickly. A spoon conducts the heat away from the liquid.

Petticoats of all kinds are of the greatest importance toward the fit of skirts to costumes.

EYE STRAIN.

Generally, the first effects of eye-strain draw no attention to the eyes, for it may not affect the vision and often does not interfere with the use of the eyes, but it fatigues and taxes the nervous system and compels one to pay dearly for it in some other way. The great misfortune is that it is not usually discovered, nor even looked for, until the trouble is well established. All grades of disturbances may result from eye-strain, from the slightest smarting or weariness of the eyes after close work, to confirmed invalidism. It may show itself in the youngest child, as irritability or nervous excitability, or it may not appear till the burden of old age forces it into notice and uncovers the cause of many an unexplained fret or disability. It may be an unsuspected factor aggravating and intensifying some other weak spot or ailment, and may take different forms at different times; it may excite a weak heart, dull the mental powers or put the whole system out of balance. We remove all this by correcting the cause of the eye-strain.

Entertained By The Ladies' Aid.

CHOIR AND CHURCH OFFICIALS OF CHRIST CHURCH PASSED A PLEASANT EVENING IN THE FORESTERS' HALL.

The Ladies' Aid in connection with Christ Church is certainly composed of ladies who know how to entertain and provide the necessaries of life. Last evening the members of this society entertained to a supper the members of the church choir and the officials of the church. The affair took place in the Foresters' Hall, on Front street, and was a most pleasant gathering. Tables were spread in the hall, and they actually groaned under the weight of the good things provided. They were tastefully decorated with flowers. Previous to the supper being partaken of the company were entertained by selections from a gramophone and a violin solo by Miss Benjamin. Mrs. (Col.) Campbell presided at the piano with her usual ability.

After supper the balance of the evening was spent in songs and speechmaking.

The Rector of the church, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, was chairman, and in that position he could not be excelled. He proposed the various toasts in a manner that left nothing to be desired. He especially eulogized the King in proposing that toast, referring especially to the beloved personality of His Majesty.

Mr. Walter Alford responded to the toast in an appropriate manner, and took occasion to say a few kind things in regard to the chairman of the evening. He said that the congregation were much pleased to have the Rev. R. C. Blagrave as their Rector, and the wish was that he would be long spared to fill that position.

Following was the toast list of the evening and those who responded to the same:

"The Wardens"— Responded to by Mr. Frank Thompson.

"The Choir"—Miss Ockerman responded most appropriately on behalf of the lady members of the choir, and Messrs. C. C. Stewart and Robt. McCoy for the gentlemen.

"Finance Committee" — Responded to by Messrs. W. Rodbourne and J. Reid.

"Sunday School"—Messrs. F. Mills and J. R. Bell responded to this toast.

"The Brotherhood of St. Andrew" —Responded to by Messrs. B. Backus, J. and T. Boyle.

"The Ladies' Aid" — This toast brought out hearty responses from Messrs. C. Symons, K. Knox, H. Jones, E. Foster and J. Sargent.

A quartette composed of Miss H. Bell, Messrs. J. R. and B. Bell and E. Foster rendered a ditty, which created much merriment. It was composed of some fifteen verses, and in its composition was included the officials of the church and members of the choir.

"The Press."—Responded to by P. Harrison.

A toast to the chairman was fittingly acknowledged by Rev. Mr. Blagrave.

The speeches were interspersed by selections from the gramophone, which was operated by Messrs. Thompson and Vanmeer; a solo by Mr. R. McCoy and instrumental selections by Mrs. (Col.) Campbell.

The pleasant evening's gathering was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"RED FEATHER" COMING.

It is good to learn that the DeKoven, Klein and Cook comic opera, "Red Feather," is to visit this city. Manager Carman sends forth the information that the piece will be seen here on Wednesday next. There will be a fine company, and a splendid musical treat is assured. At the head of the organization, in the dual role of Countess Hilda von Draga and Red Feather, Manager Jos. M. Gaites has placed a most popular prima donna, Miss Cheridah Simpson, whose name is too well-known in the field of superior operatic entertainment to need special introduction. Miss Simpson has already visited Canada with several of the Henry W. Savage companies and her charming work with "King Dodo," "The Sultan of Sulu" and "The Prince of Pilsen" is well remembered. The company numbers seventy-five people, including a big singing chorus, selected with view to both voice and appearance. To assist in the rendition of the score there will be an augmented orchestra. Seats for the engagement will be placed on sale on Monday next.

Drunk 6,000 Times.

While the average man cannot survive more than a thousand intoxications, steady drinkers of a certain powerful massive type can get drunk as much as 2000 times before giving way. In an alcoholic career of 10 or 15 years they can put away about 2000 gallons of whiskey, or 32 barrels of pure spirits. But this is really the human limit. All records to date are held by a man of 50, who admitted, while under treatment in Bellevue Hospital, New York, that he had been drunk daily for six months in the year since he was 17; a total of over 6000 intoxications.

There is nothing more pleasing than praise if it is honest and you believe you have earned it.

Six Past Presidents Were the Bearers.

FUNERAL OF LATE JOHN C. HARRIS WAS UNDER AUSPICES OF SONS OF ENGLAND.

The funeral yesterday afternoon of the late Mr. John C. Harris was largely attended. It was under the auspices of the Sons of England, of which order deceased was a member, and the society was well represented. At the family residence, North Front street, services were conducted by the Rev. A. M. Hubly, Rector of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, who also officiated at the grave. The burial service of the S. O.E. society were also read. The bearers were all Past Presidents of Oxford Lodge, Sons of England, and were Bros. F. M. Clarke, G. A. Bennett, G. B. Warham, F. D. Ford, J. A. Vickers and J. Luscombe.

The floral tributes were most beautiful, being contributed by the following:

Pillow—Sons of England.

Wreaths — Fellow-employees, Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Lingham, J. W. Walker and Pringle Bros.

Cross—W. J. Andrews.

Heart—Mr. and Mrs. Potter.

Bouquets—Mr. and Mrs. L. George, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Mr. Record, Mr. Geo. Cornish, Mr. Coulson, Mr. G. Worrell and family, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Scantlebury and Mr. and Mrs. Christia.

Joseph Phillips May Be Tried in December

Toronto, Sept. 26.—The case of Joseph Phillips, of the York County Loan, is one of a long list that have yet to be tried in the Sessions. Crown Attorney Drayton's programme so far gives no indication when Phillips will be tried. Mr. Drayton and his staff, although in possession of all the evidence taken at the police court, have taken all the books of the concern and of the Liszt Piano Company, and are going over them minutely. When the police court examinations are analyzed, it is said, they do not furnish the basis for laying the charge that Mr. Drayton seeks to allege. If this is the case the trial of Phillips may be postponed till the December sittings.

He Pined For Belleville

Kingston News: An old man was seen on King street to-day carrying in his hand a folded slip of paper. Stopping a stranger on the corner he handed him the note, but before he could open it poured out the circumstances by which he obtained it. "I cannot either read or write," he said "so I went to Doctor ———, and asked him for a note to the mayor by which I could get transportation to Belleville, where I live. He examined me first, then wrote the note. Can you tell me, Mister Stranger, what's in the note?"

The stranger opened the missive, and read aloud the few brief but powerful words.

"This old chap has the D.T.'s. Send him up."

Before the last word had left the stranger's lips, a volley of oaths sprang from the old man's lips. "I could hear him cursing two blocks away," said the philanthropic person as he finished recounting the story to a News reporter.

Oddfellows Buried Deceased Brother

IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL SERVICES OF LATE ENGINEER THOMAS WESTON THIS AFTERNOON.

The remains of the late Mr. Thos. Weston, the G. T. R. engineer who died as the result of a collision at Sunbridge, arrived here last evening from the west. They were taken to the residence of Mrs. Biscombe, Bleecker avenue, sister-in-law of the deceased, whence the funeral took place this afternoon.

A good-sized party accompanied the remains here, namely; Dr. J. D. Hamill, and J. Muxlow, of Meaford; Messrs. G. Lawrence, T. C. Royce, L. Little, J. Little, G. St. Louis, L. De Witt, W. Peck, J. McNabb and F. Heard, of Allandale; W. W. Walker and wife, Mrs. Bryant, Miss Weston and Mr. J. R. Weston, of Perth. The gentlemen mentioned above are representatives of the various organizations to which the deceased belonged, namely, the Oddfellows, Sons of England, and Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Trainmen. All speak in the highest terms of the deceased. He was a capable employee and good comrade.

The funeral this afternoon was largely attended by members of the I.O.O.F. and the various railway Brotherhoods, in addition to many friends not members of any society. The I.O.O.F. band preceded the cortege. Services at the house were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Ockley, Methodist minister at Meaford. The funeral services of the Oddfellows was also conducted by Rev. A. L. Geen.

The bearers were chosen amongst those who accompanied the remains here and were; Dr. Hamill and J. Muxlow, representing the I. O. O. F.; T. C. Royce, of the B. of L. E.; G. St. Louis, of the B. of L. F.; F. Heard, of the O.R.C., and L De Witt, B. of R.R.

The floral tributes were magnificent, and amongst them were the following, which were brought here with the remains;

BANQUET ON BIG SCALE.

Lord Strathcona Gives Spread to 2,400 Guests, Celebrating Aberdeen University Fourth Centenary.

Aberdeen, Scotland, Sept. 27.—Lord Strathcona is to give a banquet to 2,400 guests to-day, to mark the fourth centenary celebration of Aberdeen University. As there is no hall in Aberdeen capable of accommodating so large a company, one has had to be built especially for the occasion. It has been erected adjoining the Marischal College.

The temporary hall measures 185 feet in width and 150 feet in length. and is so arranged that it will present three levels, the top table occupying the highest. The chairman's table, 170 feet in length, will face 73 other tables, filling the lowest stages, with broad gangways between. A remarkable feature of the arrangements is the assignment of these tables to separate divisions red, green, yellow and blue, the dinner tickets being colored accordingly, and lettered and numbered.

While the cooking had to be done in London, refrigerator vans being used for the conveyance of the food, the chefs and their assistants will have much finishing work to do in the specially erected kitchens. These are furnished with steam and electrical fittings, and hot and cold water service.

At a banquet celebration of students yesterday, on the representative council in connection with Aberdeen University, the students sang "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," as Lord Strathcona entered the hall. J. W. Henderson, in proposing the toast, "Our Guests," expressed how grateful they all were for everything Lord Strathcona had done for them. Lord Strathcona, replying, said they had done him a great honor in selecting him as their lord chancellor. He was quite aware how little he could do adequately to fill any such position, but his heart certainly did go with the work.

A grand function was held yesterday at Aberdeen, at which honorary degrees were conferred on 150 delegates. Lord Strathcona presided.

AGRARIAN DISORDERS.

Police Expelled and Inhabitants Are Laying Country Waste.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 27.—Grave agrarian disorders have broken out in the Province of Viatkab, the centre of disturbance being the important district of Malmuish, with a population of over 100,000, where the inhabitants of 70 villages are reported to have joined in the uprising, have disarmed and expelled the police and are pillaging and destroying the residences of the land owners and devasting the country.

Details are difficult to obtain, but it is rumored at Viatkab that the administrative police chiefs in the Malmuish district, and eight of their subordinates, have been killed. The excesses began Sept. 20, with a riot over the enrolment of army reserves for their autumn services.

Disorders have also broken out in the adjoining district of Chistopol, in Kazan Province.

FORESTRY CONVENTION.

Earl Grey Opens Sessions at Vancouver, B. C.—The Banquet.

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 27.—Yesterday morning, in the presence of a gathering of gentlemen, many of them distinguished in Canada and the United States, Governor-General Grey opened the meeting of the Canadian Forestry Association, held here in response to invitation of the British Columbia Lumber and Shingle Manufacturers' Association. The feature of the day was the eloquent and encouraging speech of Earl Grey.

The forestry convention banquet held at 9 o'clock last evening, was a great success, and Earl Grey made a happy speech.

Registrar Chisholm Dead.

Brampton, Sept. 27.—Kenneth Chisholm, county registrar, died yesterday morning from senile decay. He was born in the County of Peel on March 17, 1829, and resided in the county almost continuously. For 35 years he was one of the most prominent merchants outside of Toronto. Mr. Chisholm was elected member of the Legislative Assembly for Ontario in 1873, on the death of the sitting member, the late John Coyne, and represented the County of Peel continuously until his resignation, in 1894, being always elected by large majorities. He was a strong Liberal. In religion he was a Methodist In 1894 he was appointed registrar of the county.

Murder In Montreal.

Montreal, Sept. 27.—The body of an Italian, thought to be that of Francesco Amanti, was found lying in a pool of blood at 155 Chatham street by a driver of a beer wagon making his rounds early yesterday morning. Medical examination showed a bullet wound in the head and an empty 38-calibre revolver shell was found close by.

Suicide of a Barber.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—With his throat slashed from ear to ear, John Saunders, a barber, was found dead lying in a pool of blood in his home early yesterday morning. The razor with which he had committed suicide was still clutched in his right hand. Coroner Pickering is investigating.

MORE REVELATIONS

I.O.F. Has Been Swindled Out of Fifty-Five Thousand.

STEVENSON'S STATEMENT

Payments to G. W. Fowler, M. P., on Shields-Ryan Limit Purchase—Fictitious Option Given at $225,000 While Actual Consideration Was $170,000—Union Trust Had to Pay the Higher Figure.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—That the Union Trust Co. was swindled out of $55,000 in connection with the purchase of the Shields-Ryan timber property in British Columbia, and that the parties who profited by it will be followed, was the startling revelation which Mr. Elliot G. Stevenson, Supreme Counsellor of the I. O. F., made before the Insurance Commission yesterday morning. In support of this statement cheques aggregating $45,000, which were given by Mr. Peter Ryan, who sold the property to the trust company, to Mr. George W. Fowler, M. P., who conducted negotiations on behalf of the Union Trust Co. in the capacity, as described by Mr. Stevenson, of agent, were produced in court. Mr. Ryan's admission to a representative of the Union Trust Co. that the true consideration he received for the property was $170,000, and not $225,000, as stated in the conveyance, and as paid by the Union Trust, was also quoted.

Swindled Out of $55,000.

Mr. Shepley asked about the option on the British Columbia property.

"The first I knew about it was from a Vancouver paper, sent to me by my son, who is in the west, and containing a report of the evidence given in the case of Peter Ryan against John Shields."

"And the true consideration for the option was not $225,000, but $170,000. There were two options signed — one true one and the other overstating the amount?" said Mr. Shepley.

"Yes."

"Then the other $55,000 must have gone somewhere?"

"If that is true, we have been swindled out of $55,000, and the man who got it must account for it. We are awaiting the result of this investigation, and our solicitor has been instructed to take the necessary steps to recover such funds."

"Have you any knowledge of this latter deal—similar to the others?"

"No—nothing but the suspicion from the first transactions."

Couldn't Get Actual Price.

Mr. Stevenson had been unable to obtain any information as to the amount actually paid for the Okanagan Lumber Co.'s property, but had been assured on Saturday last by Mr. McCormack, who is now manager of the Pacific Lumber Co. at Vancouver, that he had received his full share of the purchase money, whatever that was.

In connection with the recent reorganization of the Union Trust Co., Mr. Stevneson said that Mr. Matthew Wilson, K. C., had conducted the negotiations on behalf of the I. O. F., but had not rendered a bill for his services. Mr. Wilson was entitled to compensation for the work he had done, but if he had been compensated in any other than the regular way by any one other than the I. O. F. it was wrong. He had heard rumors recently in connection with the matter, and if anyone had made any profit out of the transaction, the amount so received would have to be repaid.

Gone Out of Lumbering.

The announcement was made by Mr. Stevenson that the Union Trust Co. had gone out of the lumbering business, having sold the Kamloops Lumber Co. at a price which will repay principal and interest and $75,000 profit, in addition to which they expect to recover the $55,000 of which Mr. Stevenson said the order had been swindled in the purchase.

Two Options; Two Prices.

In the afternoon R. C. Levesconte, barrister, was first called. He had something to do with the transaction between Fowler and Peter Ryan. Mr. Ryan had instructed him to sell the limits for $250,000. Shortly after this it was suggested to him by Fowler and McCormack that if the price came down a purchaser might be secured. He was under the impression that the purchaser was a Maine man. The new price was put at $200,000, and witness drew the option for that. The option was drawn in duplicate. Fowler had one and Ryan had the other.

Mr. Shepley wanted to see the document, and Mr. Levesconte said that he had brought it. This question included the Albert Canyon limits, which had been included in the $250,000 option.

Mr. Shepley drew attention to the fact that both options were drawn on the same day, covering the same property, between the same persons, one at $200,000 and one at $250,000.

"Who told you to draw these documents?"

"Mr. Ryan and Mr. Fowler."

Exact Copy, But Unsigned.

Mr. Levesconte produced the final document, which was an exact copy, but unsigned.

Mr. Shepley read the agreement. The Albert Canyon limits were left out, and the price was quoted at $170,000. Mr. Levesconte witnessed this document. The next day Fowler and Ryan came back with a document for $225,000.

"You were not surprised or shocked?" thundered Mr. Shepley.

"No; I was not."

"What did you think about the new agreement?"

"It was to keep the price up on the sale. I suspected that Fowler was going to put forward the price that he had paid as $225,000."

Witness had nothing further to do with the matter until the date fixed for the first payment at the Union Trust Co.'s office. He drew the assignments of licenses, etc., which were made out to Mr. Foster. He also drew the deed of the mill site, made out from Mrs. Ryan to George E. Foster.

The witness' legal account was headed "Timber limits," but Mr. Ryan had promised to pay him 10 per cent. commission on the first deal. When the $170,000 deal was put through, Mr. Ryan would not come below $175,000, and his commission was reduced to $12,500.

"The deal was nearly closed, but Fowler would not come up the other $5,000. Then my commission was reduced to $10,000, which was to be paid out of the $170,000. I did not know that Mr. Ryan received the whole $225,000 until you told me just now," said Mr. Levesconte.

"How much did Ryan pay you?"

"Six thousand two hundred and fifty dollars. The balance has not yet been paid."

Chancellor Boyd Called.

At this point Mr. Shepley requested the witness to 'phone for his dockets in relation to the deal, and, in the meantime, called Sir John Boyd to the witness stand.

Sir John told that he had put the late Judge MacDougall's shares in the Union Trust Co., and had qualified for the directorate. He had $1,000 worth of stock in the Great West Land Co.

Mr. Shepley asked, in view of the evidence that had come out, if he had anything to say.

Witness replied: "As to the legal aspect of the question expressed by me as to the transaction involving the taking up of lands in the west by entering into a syndicate, as has been named, I could see no objection. I was given to understand that a substantial part of the price was to be carried by the gentlemen having the option. As to the profits, I know nothing, and I had no intimation that the directors of the Trust Co. and the Land Co. were going to borrow from the Union Trust Co. The whole situation appears to me like this: In the main transactions of the Union Trust and the very large transaction in Northwest land there was no large expenditure of money without the sanction of the Foresters. It was a most profitable venture, but I know very little about the working out of the transaction. There was no clash of interest between the directors of the Land Co. and the Union Trust. If there was, the wishes of the Foresters would carry. No one looked at the matter from an adverse standpoint. This is borne out from the fact that I put the ready money at that time that I had in my command in the stock."

"It appears," said Mr. Shepley, "that as far as the Great West Land Co. was concerned, apart from the Union Trust Co., no one put any money in it but yourself and another small shareholder."

"I did not know that, and I am very much surprised to hear it."

"The three members of the syndicate never risked any money, but at the end come out with practically all the stock for which no money had been paid?"

"I did not know."

Peter Ryan's Memory.

Peter Ryan was the next witness. He thought that he gave Mr. Levesconte an option on certain timber limits in British Columbia for $200,000. Mr. Levesconte introduced Fowler to witness. Mr. Levesconte was to receive a commission, but he did not think it was 10 per cent.

"On the same day you signed another option to Mr. Fowler for $250,000?"

"I don't remember that. The only explanation I can give is that the eastern limit, township 25, would be embodied in the larger option."

Mr. Ryan gave the dimensions of the limits in details.

"At that time were you aware of Fowler's intentions in regard to the matter?"

"No I thought he was going to operate there himself."

The agreement finally settled at $170,000. That was the real agreement.

"In reference to the $225,000 option I went to Levesconte's office, where the document was ready to pass on to another party, Mr. Foster, in trust. The day I signed the agreement, Jan. 26 conveying the limits to Fowler, I knew that the Trust Co. were getting the option, as I thought, in trust."

"What did you say when you saw the $225,000 option?"

Difference to Go to Fowler.

"Well, the understanding was that although the price I was to be paid was $225,000 the difference between that amount and $170,000 was to go back to Fowler. Fowler had made arrangements to sell it at the larger rate than he was giving me. I venture to say that the $170,000 option was not signed by me."

Mr. Shepley wanted to find from the witness what he understood from the agreement, but Mr. Ryan could not say.

"Can't you recollect what Fowler said to you?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"I would gladly give you all the information I could, but the sum and substance of the whole matter was that I signed the agreement conveyancing the property at $225,000, and that I was to give back $55,000 to Fowler, who was making a profit on the deal."

Mr. Shepley asked Mr. Ryan when he forgot the conversation with Mr. Fowler.

"Did you forget it since you got in the box?" asked Mr. Shepley.

"Oh, no."

"Have you forgotten it since the litigation in British Columbia a few weeks ago?"

"I guess I must have."

Mr. Ryan professed that he had entirely forgotten the conversation, but Mr. Shepley kept after him.

Where Did It Go.

"What did Mr. Fowler tell you about the $55,000—the destination of it?"

"Nothing was said at the time."

"Will you swear you don't know?"

"I don't remember, I can't remember it."

"Did you believe what he said."

"If he said that he wanted the money otherwise than for himself I would not believe him then nor now."

"What did Fowler tell you he was going to do with the money?" continued Mr. Shepley.

Mr. Ryan could not remember the conversation.

Counsel kept on, however, with the result that Mr. Ryan admitted that several months after Mr. Fowler had told him that he had to divide the money with someone else, but he (witness) did not believe him (Fowler) then, nor does he now.

"Did he tell you with whom he divided the money?"

"Yes."

"Who?"

"I won't answer that."

"Well, Mr. Ryan," said Mr. Shepley, "you go away and reflect on the matter and come back here on Monday morning at 10.30."

Convention Hall, Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 27.—William Randolph Hearst has been nominated by the Democratic convention The vote for governor, first ballot: Hearst 309, Sulzer 124, Dix 17; necessary to a choice 226. At 1.59 a. m. Chairman Nixon declared William Randoluh Hearst officially the candidate of the Democratic party for governor.

Hughes For Republicans.

Saratoga, N. Y., 27.—The Republican state convention adjourned sine die at 1.23 p.m. yesterday, after nominating, for governor, Charles E. Hughes of New York, and a state ticket.

The Methodist Conference.

Montreal, Sept. 27.—The Methodist general conference yesterday decided in favor of establishing young men's clubs, the department to cover much the same ground as the Anglican St. Andrew's Brotherhood.

Dr. White's motion that the scale of minister's salaries be $750, $450 and $3.50 was carried in a house of about 70.

The young people's forward movement occupied some time, Dr. F. C. Stephenson was elected secretary and raised in rank to be an officer of conference.

In place of a corresponding secretary and five local superintendents, there will be five superintendents of missions.

The committee on state of church work scored ministers who were engaging in secular work and the report stated such conduct indicated the absence of a clear sense of righteousness.

Stensland Sentenced.

Chicago, Sept. 27.—Ex-Banker Stensland appeared before Judge Kersten in the Criminal Court yesterday afternoon and pleaded guilty to two charges of embezzlement. Judge Kersten sentenced him to an indeterminate period in Joliet Penitentiary. The maximum penalty under the law is fourteen years. Stensland, in charge of a jailer, left for the Joliet Penitentiary shortly after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

John Armstrong Appointed.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—John Armstrong has been appointed to succeed Robert Glockling as head of the bureau of labor. The entire bureau may soon be reorganized. John Armstrong is one of the oldest compositors in Toronto, and is at present on The Mail and Empire, having started with The Mail on the day of its first publication.

Four Found Guilty.

City of Mexico, Sept. 27.—Of 20 defendants charged with swindling the New York Life, Mutual Life and the Equitable Life Insurance Companies, four were convicted. They received sentences ranging from 11 months to four years' imprisonment. The frauds involved approximately $300,000.

Escaped In Night Clothes.

Omemee, Sept. 27.—The Presbyterian manse was badly damaged here by fire yesterday morning. Shortly after 12 o'clock Rev. Mr. Whitelaw and family were awakened by the smoke and had a narrow escape, being forced to flee in their night robes. Loss about $1,500.

A Difference In Discipline.

Some Toronto yachtsmen had an object-lesson in the difference between Canadian and United States ideas of the behavior of a servant when a yacht from across the lake came into port the other evening. Two members of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club went out to pay a call of welcome on the skipper of the visiting yacht, Greetings were exchanged, and then the steward was called to deliver some liquid refreshments. When he brought the wet goods he was busily chewing on a big quid of tobacco, and to the horror of the visitors deliberately spat out a mouthful of tobacco juice upon the deck.

"John," protested the skipper of the yacht, "how often have I told you that you must not do that?"

"Say, boss," was the reply, "ain't I got a spitting interest in the boat "

Then the Canadians collapsed.

TAFT WILL BE GOVERNOR.

Cuban Moderates Refuse to Accept Palma's Resignation Forcing U. S. Intervention.

Havana, Sept. 28.—The assembly of Moderates last night decided to refuse to accept President Palma's resignation, in the hope of inducing him to continue in office, and thus avoid intervention.

Intervention by the installation of a provisional Government was contemplated for to-morrow, but the United States peace commissioners will await the developments in congress.

The commissioners believe that a crisis will be precipitated on the convening of the Cuban congress to-day, and they are preparing to take hold of the reins if necessary.

If a landing of American forces is required, Secretary Taft has decided to take over the Government instantly. He has received yesterdaytoFpH TEE He has received authority from President Roosevelt to take this extreme step, in which event he will proclaim himself Governor. Official reports received yesterday show that the rebels are active at many points, stealing horses and arms, notably at Guanabocoa, Campo, Florida, Batabano and Cabanas.

OPENED BY THE KING.

Annex of Aberdeen University Erected at Over a Million Cost.

Aberdeen, Scotland, Sept. 28.—The new annex of the university, a splendid granite structure erected at a cost of $1,250,000, was opened by King Edward yesterday in the presence of hundreds of learned men, who are participating in the commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the university. The King was accompanied by Queen Alexandra.

Entertained 2,500 Guests.

At the corporation luncheon, the Queen, Lord Strathcona and Lady Strathcona were among the guests with whom the King chatted. In the evening a grand banquet was given by the chancellor to 2,500 guests in a specially built wooden pavilion, where the senators, the past and present graduates, alumni, leading citizens and the delegates and scientists from abroad assembled. Prosperity to the university and city were toasted and the evening given up to friendly intercourse and enjoyment. The hall was too large for speeches. The poor of the city were also entertained through Lord Strathcona's generosity. The day concluded with a display of fireworks.

Stoessel Resigns.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 28.—The Associated Press was informed yesterday that Lieut.-Gen. Stoessel, who commanded the Russian forces at Port Arthur, yesterday submitted his resignation from the army. It is understood that it will be accepted. The resignation is said to have been due to the initiative of Emperor Nicholas, who expressed his aversion to any further discussion of the subject in open court.

Rocked Like a Ship At Sea.

City of San Juan, Porto Rico, Is Badly Shaken.

The Earthquake Shock Was General Throughout the Island—People Were Everywhere Thrown Into Panic, Women Fainting and Many Praying in the Streets—Some Of the Public Buildings Were Slightly Damaged.

San Juan, Porto Rico, Sept. 28.—The city of San Juan and the island of Porto Rico experienced a series of earthquake shocks yesterday, beginning at 10.45 a. m. The people were thrown into a condition of consternation and indescribable alarm, but the resultant damage was comparatively slight and there has been no loss of life.

The first perceptible tremors brought many people in alarm to the streets. They increased in intensity for twenty seconds and then decreased for five seconds. Following this came the most severe shocks, the earth shaking violently for five seconds more, then all was quiet.

Like Rolling Sea.

The first vibratory movements were from east to west and were followed by heavy heaving motions, such as are experienced on board ship in a heavy sea.

In San Juan people were stunned and when they suddenly realized that an earthquake was on them, consternation and alarm prevailed throughout the city.

People thought of the catastrophe of San Francisco and Valparaiso. They fled from their houses to the streets and crowded the open squares. Panic reigned and hysterical woman fainted. Many began praying in the streets.

Many clocks throughout the city stopped at forty-seven minutes past ten.

Public Buildings Damaged.

The walls of the city hall, the infantry barracks, the postoffice and the women and children's hospital were cracked in many places, but not badly damaged. The old artillery building near the sea, now occupied by the quartermaster's office was badly damaged.

Reports received here from other points on the island show that the shock was general and that it lasted for thirty seconds everywhere. School houses and churches in Humacaco, Guayamo, and Fajardo were slightly damaged.

Heavy Shock at St. Thomas.

St. Thomas, Danish West Indies, Sept. 28.—There was a sharp and prolonged earthquake shock here early yesterday morning, but no damage was done.

WORST IN A CENTURY.

Many Towns Submerged In Great Gulf Coast Storm—Winds Had Velocity of Sixty Miles an Hour.

Pensacola, Fla., Sept. 28.—The worst sea storm and hurricane that the gulf coast has experienced in a century began Wednesday night and still raged late yesterday. It is reported that many lives between the city and the navy yard have been lost.

Many streets in that section are under five to ten feet of water, and many women have been taken from the second storey windows.

The estimated property damage is three million dollars. Every house in Pensacola has suffered damage, and many roofs are blown off. Telephone and telegraph and electric light wires are among the mass. The waterfront is strewn with wreckage for miles on either side of the city, and vessels are piled on the wharves, or where the wharves once were, in utter ruins.

Big iron steamers and many lighter sailing ships are lying high and dry up in the city, where the tide has never before been known to reach. Everywhere wharves for miles around have been swept away or damaged beyond repair.

The electric power was shut off at 1 o'clock yesterday morning. There is no street car traffic, and communication with the outside world is practically cut off.

At New Orleans.

New Oreleans, Sept. 28.—For more than twelve hours a tropical hurricane has been blowing at a speed varying from 35 to 60 miles an hour.

The telegraph and telephone wires are all down between here and Gulf of Mexico points, where the storm is reported to have been the worst.

The damage reported thus far is confined mostly to the havoc of the tide driven by the wind upon the gulf coast to an unusual height.

At the mouth of the Mississippi River pilots were compelled to abandon their tows. The water is rising over the lower Mississippi Delta. The rice fields are considerably damaged in this section. No vessels have attempted to enter at the south of the Mississippi River since Tuesday night, but are riding the storm in the open gulf.

A washout is reported on the Louisville & Nashville at Lake Catherine, and the New Orleans & Northeastern Railroad reports its track under water at several places.

The damage in New Orleans is small so far.

Washouts Are Big and Numerous.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 28.—The tropical hurricane, which for 24 hours has been churning the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, and did much damage on the coast and far inland last night, is whipping through North Alabama in a northeasterly direction at a velocity but slightly less than 48 miles an hour recorded in New Orleans during the day. Damage to property is enormous.

All wire communication is seriously disarranged, and in some instances has resulted in cutting off cities completely, Mobile not having been heard from for nearly 24 hours. Numerous washouts have occurred, the interruption from this cause in one case extending thirty miles.

The damage to railroads is heavy. Reports to the officials of the Louisville & Nashville road from the superintendent of the Mobile & Montgomery division indicated that the loss approximates $1,000,000.

Forest Ranger Drowns.

Biscotasing, Sept. 28.—Two rangers, Washburn and Campbell, have just arrived from Green Lake post and report that they picked up Angus Taylor in a helpless condition on Canoe Lake. His mate, Roy O'Donnell of Brechin, Ont., was drowned by the capsizing of their canoe in a squall. Taylor and O'Donnell were rangers on the Mississauga forest reserve.

Basket Factory In Ruins

Leamington, Sept. 28.—At an early hour yesterday morning the Leamington Basket Co.'s factory, employing 60 hands, was almost ruined by fire. The fire was burning fiercely when discovered and Ephraim Stockwell, the night watchman, had a narrow escape with his life. The machinery was totally destroyed. The loss is $6,000, partly insured.

Black Dress Goods

Black Dress Goods are this season holding a stronger position on the fashion chart than for some time, due in a great measure to the number of deaths in the Royal Families of Europe—many of the handsomest imported models being in all black or black with a touch of white.

In consequence of this demand the manufacturers have brought forward many new weaves which give a variety of choice seldom found in this staple color.

All the new ones are well represented in our fall showing. These include Amazons, Soliel Cord, Panamas, Llama Cloths, Cordiline, Thibet, Armure, German Satin Cloths, Chiffon, Broadcloths, ranging in price per yard........................ 50c, 75c, $1, and up to $2.00

The U. S. and Cuba

Cuba Libre, it would appear, is doomed to an early death. Canadians, who have investments in "The Land of Sunshine," have no cause to shed tears over the fact that the end of the Cuban republic seems to have been brought into view by what has been made known during the past two or three days. The mission of Mr. Taft, the United States Secretary of War, according to what is reported of it, has not been the success that was hoped, if not expected. He is reported by the usually accurate Associated Press as saying that the recent elections which made Palma president were thoroughly rotten. This is a justification, in a way, of the revolutionists; but Palma will not recognize it, and is stated to have rejected honorable terms of compromise made to him. The insurgent leaders are reported to have lost control of their forces. Disintergration means the destruction of commerce and industry. Mr. Taft and his associate of the Department of State, Mr. Bacon, are reported as stating the situation to be that the United States does not want to intervene, but conditions afield may necessitate it. Force alone is likely to bring peace out of turmoil. Preparations for the use of force are being made. The number of United States war vessels in Cuban ports has been increased. Marines are being moved to points of embarkation, and units of the regular army are being prepared to follow them in transports that have been arranged for. General Funston is in Havana, apparently to take charge in case occupation is resolved on.

Another Western Scandal

Some surprise has been excited in the Province of Alberta that an assistant land agent employed by the Dominion Government has been given two years for extorting money and chickens from a German farmer who wanted a homestead. Frank Wilson is the name of the young man, son of the Dominion land agent at Macleod. The surprise is, says the London Free Press, that the young man, who assisted his father, was prosecuted at all.

The Calgary Herald remarks that Wilson's impression that he could "graft" with impunity while he had such an influential friend at court at the Hon. Frank Oliver, was strengthened by the scandalous leniency which was extended to his father's predecessor in office, one Mr. Nixon.

Nixon, while in charge of the Macleod land office, got away with $1500. Was he prosecuted? If Wilson deserved two years at hard labor for getting away with $25, what should Nixon's punishment have been?

To the eternal shame of the Dominion Government and of Mr. Oliver and his political advisors at Macleod, the defaulter Nixon was not only not prosecuted, but was given a better position in the public service. With such an illustrious precedent it is no wonder that Wilson thought he was justified in using his public office for private gain.

The young man, no doubt, also had in view another glaring example of the same kind of Liberal skull-duggery. There was a good Liberal office holder at Macleod named Gardiner. In his position as Collector of Customs he imitated Mr. Nixon's lead and appropriated to his own use a considerable sum of public money. Like Mr. Nixon, he also had good friends high up in the councils of the great Liberal party, and he was not prosecuted.

These must be hard facts for good Liberals of the old school to swallow, but unpleasant as they are they have to be faced.

The West will be interested in tracing the young man's prospects on his leaving the penitentiary, which may be easily facilitated under the parole system. He may be out with a gentle reprimand within two months. Then, according to the Calgary Herald, if Mr. Oliver does not wish to be charged with gross partiality he will at least treat him as well as he did Phillip Wagner, the eminent Edmonton politician, who robbed poor Galicians of their cash, served at hard labor in the Fort Saskatchewan guard room, and was given a good fat Government position, which he still holds.

Old Chronic Sores

As a dressing for old chronic sores there is nothing so good as Chamberlain's Salve. While it is not advisable to heal old sores entirely, they should be kept in a good condition for which this salve is especially valuable. For sore nipples Chamberlain's Salve has no superior. Some of the parties who were here attending the G.T.R. engineer's funeral yesterday made a few fitting remarks about the condition of Front street. It was the fiercest old thoroughfare they had ever met, and its equal could hardly be found anywhere short of the place where the streets are popularly supposed to be paved with good intentions.

• • •

There is no doubt about it. The state of the roadway on our main aisle is a disgrace to Belleville. It would almost pay the city, next year, to let other matters go and spend all the public works money on Front St. Why not import some good granite and put down a tar macadam pavement? The stone which for years has been put on the street is just about as good as pumice stone. For years and years money has been wasted in that way. Surely 'tis time for it to stop.

• • •

Well, who would believe that in this enlightened land, where every prospect pleases, and only Front street is vile, you would find a city the size of Belleville, owning its own gas plant, and yet tolerating such a measly "farthing rushlight" as that which is supposed to illuminate the interior of the city clock? Anybody who leaves his Waterbury at home these nights, and wants to find out the time, will surely have to ask a policeman. The city might put a small mortgage on the steam roller, and buy another box of candles.

A shiver ran all over this city last night when people saw that the C. P. R. contemplated running their line across Queen Victoria park. And the shiver was not caused by hay fever, either. By jiggers the C.P.R. will see pretty quickly that Belleville people are not going to stand having their beautiful park spoiled unless the railroad puts up at least fifteen cents for damages, anyhow.

"THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH."
(Toronto News.)

A member of the post-office staff said yesterday: "The post-office is practically out of the money order business now, so far as domestic orders are concerned. The express companies are doing all the Ontario business, chiefly because they have made the bookkeepers of all large firms their agents, giving them a liberal commission on orders issued through them. There is, moreover, quite a considerable difference in the amount of red tape used by the Government and the express offices, and people unfortunately prefer expedition to those absolute safeguards insisted on by the Government."

McKeown's DRUG STORE

William R. Hearst.

A MAN VERY MUCH AT PRESENT IN THE PUBLIC EYE.

A contemporary prints the following about William Randolph Hearst, Democratic candidate for Governor of the State of New York:

"With a chain of newspapers in the United States extending from ocean to ocean, and each day pouring forth for the pollution of the people 4,000,000 copies of his various yellow journals, William Randolph Hearst is the living exemplification of the influence that the press exerts on American life, particularly when much of its power is centered on the furtherance of one man's political ambitions. Born at San Francisco in 1863, the son of the late United States Senator Hearst, he was sent to Harvard, from which university he was expelled. Then his father gave him The San Francisco Examiner, much as a parent would hand his child a toy pistol. The pistol was loaded, for the young publisher at once turned his guns on some of his father's valued associates, and the Senator was helpless. It was in 1895 that The New York Journal was exploited, thus starting the wholesale movement by which the Hearst papers have appeared in the leading cities of the United States. Mr. Hearst was elected to the 58th and 59th Congresses for the 11th New York district as a Democrat. He was almost elected Mayor of New York on the municipal ownership ticket in 1905. Mrs. Hearst is an interesting and fascinating little woman, daughter of George H. Willson, editor of The San Francisco Examiner.

"Of Mr. Hearst, Mr. Driscoll said just before his nomination at Buffalo for the Governorship of New York: "His ambition is vaulting, his schemes all planned and his exchequer full. Yellow journalism is his stock in trade. He has been working those mud machines with sixty jackass power. His mercenaries are in Buffalo to-day to bully, bluff, beg or buy the regular Democracy into recognition of their chief as a Democrat."

"Here is an estimate of Mr. Hearst's character from the pen of the editor of The North American Review: 'As a journalist, though keen, enterprising and resourceful, he is a burning disgrace to the craft; as a politician, though shrewd and at times even sagacious, he is no more scrupulous than the basest of those whom he has stigmatized as criminals; as a partisan, though earnest and efficient in appealing to the masses, he is a traitor; as an officeholder he is pre-eminent in shameful neglect of his duties; as an agitator his delight consists in reveling in the incitement of evil passions; as a dual personality, though possessed of many engaging qualities, he is so utterly devoid of character, so unsteady in even his own recklessness, so faithless to his professed ideals, so scornfully disregardful of moral responsibility, so addicted to detestable practices in efforts to gratify his ambitions, so sinfully persistent in stirring the caldron of discontent, envy and hatred, as to be a living and glaring reproach to American civilization.

Boy and Revolver

The Lindsay Post of yesterday said A sad shooting fatality which resulted in the almost instantaneous death of a young lad, occurred in the near vicinity of Victoria Road on Sunday last. Full particulars are not to hand, but it seems that two youths, named LaRush and Fitzgerald, each almost 16 years of age, were out walking on the road, previous to going on a short hunting trip. From what we hear, a cartridge fell to the ground, and Fitzgerald picked it up, when he was ordered by LaRush, in a joking fashion, to hand it over or he would shoot. LaRush at the same time began to recklessly flourish a revolver he held in his hand. The weapon accidentally exploded, the discharged bullet crashing into Fitzgerald's head on the side, and slightly below the ear. The unfortunate boy expired almost instantly, much to the grief of his companion, who scarcely realized that he had killed his friend.

The funeral of young Fitzgerald took place yesterday.

What Part ?

What particular part of the nerve-centres should we expect to have the greatest influence in affecting and controlling the general nervous system?

Reasonably it would be the largest and most sensitive. Well now, of all the centres in the nervous system, the largest most delicate sense, the sense most constantly in use, the largest brain "gray-matter" area is that of SIGHT.

For an average of 16 hours daily continuously, the feeling in the visual centres is constant. No other sense in the nerve centres is capable of such continued endurance. With the proper glasses this severe drain upon the brain and nerves is prevented from causing a breakdown in the general health.

NOT HEREDITARY.

Baldness Due to a Living Minute Germ.

Many people, even unto the present day of grace, consider baldness due to hereditary influence.

Nothing is further from the truth—Baldness is caused by the onslaught of a minute organism which secretes itself beneath the scalp and attacks the roots of the hair — causing it to lose its life and fall out.

This organism cannot be got rid of except by the free and persevering use of Newbro's Herpicide.

No matter how badly the scalp is affected the Dandruff surely disappears and hair health is restored when Herpicide is applied.

"Destroy the cause, you remove the effect."

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

October Weather According to Hicks

Words and Works for October has its usual forecast of the weather for the month, and, according to Rev. Irl Hicks, this is the kind of weather we are to have during that month:

A reactionary storm period is in progress at the opening of October, with a combination of astronomic causes centering on the first half of the month that must, in all reasonable probability, bring abnormal perturbations. Earth's autumnal equinox covers up to about the 20th; the Venus period is central on the 17th and covers the whole month; the Mercury period reaches up to the 10th, and the regular Vulcan period is in force from the 2nd to the 7th. The full moon falls on the 2nd, being on the celestial equator on the same date. The probabilities are that the reactionary storms in progress as October comes in will reach their culmination on and touching the 2nd. Severe and dangerous tropical storms are indicated for southern parts of the country, with a wide and forceful storm centre coming to meet them out of the Northwest.

The regular storm period charted from the 2nd to the 7th will take up the disturbance and renew and prolong them during the first week of the month. Taking the country as a whole, every variety of storms from tropical and tornadic southward, to boreal, with early sleet and snow in the extreme north and northwest are among the probabilities at this time. We warn our readers of very disagreeable, if not destructive storms and weather, at this and the following October periods. The 2nd is the central day of a probable seismic period, extending two to three days before and after that date. Look for rushing high barometer, northwesterly gales and change to unseasonably cold, as a sequel to these disturbances. Be on the watch, in the northwest, for this boreal wave as early as the 3rd to 5th. Very cool to cold weather for the season will spread to most parts of the country, with frost and some freezing northward, during the interim preceding the next storm period.

A reactionary storm period is central on the 10th, 11th and 12th. Look at this time for a return of storm conditions—rising temperature falling barometer and return of cloudiness and autumnal rains and gales. The Venus influence all through this part of October will tend to extremes of temperature, with storms all the way from vicious lightning and thunder, to sudden change into almost winter, storms and temperatures. These autumnal storm areas will almost certainly bring severe to dangerous disturbances over the northern lakes. Let those concerned note this warning. Renewed high barometer and change to colder will progress eastwardly from about the 11th to the 15th.

A regular storm period covers the 16th to the 20th, having new moon at its centre on the 17th, moon in perigee on the 19th, and the centre of the Venus period co-incident with new moon and centre of Vulcan period on the 17th. In all probability this will prove one of the most severe to dangerous storm periods of this month, if not the whole autumn. Tropical storms, with high temperature and lightning and thunder will be natural on and about the 16th. As these conditions pass eastwardly across the country many sections will be visited with high to violent gales all followed by sudden revulsion to rising barometer with snow and marked change to colder over northern sections. Frost will work into central to southern regions from the 18th and the 22nd or dates touching. The 17th is the centre of another seismic period extending from the 15th to the 20th. This is a most probable time when some more earthquake "faults" will conclude to "let go." Read despatches from the world over and see if a maximum of such news isn't on the wing at this time.

A reactionary storm period is central on the 23rd to the 25th, at which time change to warmer, falling barometer, with cloudiness and more autumnal rain may be expected. Our agricultural readers should keep all these October periods well in mind. Navigators of the big lakes will pay for all reckless disregard for storm warnings. See if they don't! North Atlantic mariners and shippers who keep open their storm and weather eye will fare none the worse for their squinting.

A regular storm period covers the last five days of the month, embracing the second full moon in October, on the 31st and moon on the equator on the 29th. Falling barometer and change to warmer will appear in the west early in this period, storm areas will develop in the same regions and during the 22th to the 31st, wide stretches of cloudiness, rain and snow will pass across the whole country from west to east. The culmination of these storms will probably centre on the 31st, on or before which date an early cold wave, with decided dashes of autumnal snow and gales, will be well on their sweep from the northwest. Readers of these forecasts, who put some grains of reason and common sense into things generally, will know that precipitating or retarding influence may affect storm and weather problems of a day or two without violating the laws governing the storm periods, and without, in any practical degree, lessening the correctness and value of these forecasts. Unsound, fallacious criticisms of truth and righteousness and God, based on the weakness and littleness and ignorance of men. Just as the wisdom and power and largeness of truth and God should be looked at, and not the littleness and weakness of men; so the great truth that manifestly underlies the principles upon which these forecasts are based, should be thoughtfully and impartially considered, and not the lack of power to grasp and fully explain and apply that truth.

Bleeding Piles Cured

—after Years of Suffering.

Miracle-days may be past—but the day of saving people from suffering is ever-present.

What is more distressing than itching, Bleeding Piles? Some say the only cure is the knife. We say, operations are unnecessary. Read this letter:

"For years I had Piles, which protruded and bled freely. The itching pain was sometimes almost unbearable. Often I suffered so severely it was next to impossible to remain on duty. It was a hardship to walk. I tried many remedies, but with poor success.

"This winter, in New York—at the Bench Show—I suffered greatly—was almost compelled to remain in my room. I tried several remedies—without relief.

"On my return home, Mira Ointment was advised. I used it. In only a short time, all the irritation and pain ceased. I can now walk with ease and attend my duties as a member of the Fire Department.

"I strongly recommend Mira Ointment to anyone suffering from this annoying complaint.

The Ritual Proposed by Methodist Commission.

(Toronto News.)

It has been strange for one who for some years has seen little of Methodist development to note the amount of time spent by this General Conference upon questions of liturgy. Liturgy in the Methodist Church—who would have thought it? Some of the elders don't like the word and prefer "ritual." The mass of Methodist services unquestionably are non-liturgical.

The General Conference has shown itself conservative, and has voted down the more striking of the proposed changes. But two facts must strike one. A Commission of the Ritual sat during the quadrennium. It included the General Superintendent, Chancellor Burwash, Principal Shaw and Dr. Rose. Its report startled at least one reader, belonging to another church; other non-Methodist baptismal service is substantially identical with that in the Book of Common Prayer. That has been in the Discipline since the days of John Wesley, who adapted the Anglican forms of worship for the society which he founded; but the discussion revealed the fact that the ministers exercise a very wide discretion in the use of this form. But next consider this fact. The Discipline contains a form of communion service not unlike the latter part of the form in the Book of Common Prayer. The Ritual Commission proposed a more extended form of communion service while stating at once that it was rejected by the General Conference, it may prove interesting to compare it with the Anglican form;

ANGLICAN.	PROPOSED METHODIST.
The Lord's Prayer.	The Lord's Prayer.
Collect—Almighty God.	Collect.
The Commandments, with Kyrie.	A choice between the Beatitudes and Commandments, with the Kyrie.
Prayer for the King. Collect for the day.	A choice between the Litany (shortened); and the Prayer for the Church Militant.
The Epistle.
The Gospel.	A choice between the Apostles Creed and the Nicene Creed.
The Nicene Creed.
Sentences during offertory.	Sentences during the Collection.
Prayer for the Church Militant.
Exhortation to Holy Communion — "Dearly beloved in the Lord" (optional).	Exhortation to Holy Communion (shortened.)
Exhortation to Confession—"Ye that do truly."	Exhortation to Confession.
Confession.	Confession (slightly changed).
Absolution.	Absolution (altered to a prayer).
Hear what comfortable words."	"Hear what comfortable words," etc.
"Lift up your hearts."	"Lift up your hearts." etc.
"It is very meet."	"It is very meet," etc.
"Therefore with angels."	"Therefore with angels," etc.
Sanctus.	Sanctus
Prayer of Humble Access — "We do not presume."	Prayer of Humble Access.
Prayer of Consecration, "Almighty God, our Heavenly Father."	Prayer of Consecration.
Administration.	Administration.
The Lord's Prayer.
Prayer of thanks — "O Lord and Heavenly Father," or "Almighty and Everliving God."	Prayer of thanks — "O Lord and Heavenly Father."
Gloria.	Gloria.
Benediction.	Benediction.

The prayers in the proposed Methodist form are substantially those of the Book of Common Prayer, with the few omissions and a few slight changes, most of which from a strictly literary point of view probably are regrettable. There is in addition a rubric, part of which, with its direction for "a fair white linen cloth" sounds very Anglican, while part, with its permission to ministers to do as they please, doesn't.

A SIGNIFICANT PROPOSAL.

Of course, this proposal was beaten. But is it not significant that such a proposal should be made at all? One wonders what would be the effect if some Church were to render the form already in the Discipline in the choral manner in use in Anglican Churches. The disposition to ritual seems to be growing within the Presbyterian Church. When the time-honored names have gone, when a new set of united traditions have sprung up, will there not come in some measure, at least, a separation from the habit of mind which has rendered the Methodists and Presbyterians of former generations bitterly opposed and the Methodists and Presbyterians of to-day averse, to liturgy and ritual? May not, in short, the new United Church come to have an open mind on the subject of ritual, to rest its aversion to ceremony, if aversion there be, in something other than the men of former centuries? This is a speculation, not an argument.

YUM KIPPUR

DAY OF ATONEMENT, CELEBRATED BY THE JEWS, BEGINS THIS EVENING.

The day of atonement, according to Biblical tradition, is one of the cycles of holidays instituted by Moses. It occurs on the tenth day of the seventh month "Tishrei." It comprises the elements of the great fast day of the year by abstaining for twenty-four hours from eating and drinking, bathing and anointing. Differing from any other fast days, which are four in number, instituted by the rabbis after the destruction of the temple, and resembling all Sabbath and festival days, the celebration of the day of atonement begins in the synagogue on the preceding evening in conformity with Leviticus xxiii, 32. "It shall be unto you a Sabbath to rest, and ye shall afflict your souls in the ninth day of the seventh month at even, from even to even, shall you celebrate your Sabbath." The services in the synagogue are of a very solemn and impressive character, with traditional melodies and sacred music, composed and selected for the occasion. A part of the day services represent the feature of the "Avodah," a description of the whole atonement services in the time of the temple at Jerusalem, when the magnificent ceremonial of the year was performed on the day of atonement. The central figure was the high priest, head of the whole ecclesiastical system of theocracy. The supreme moment of the service was reached when the high priest stepped into the part of the temple designated as the holy of holies, permitted to be entered but once a year, and in his capacity as high priest, performed a triple act of atonement by bringing sacrifice and burnt-offering, first for himself, then for his household, and thirdly for the whole congregation of Israel. Since the day of atonement survived the cessation of the sacrificial cult in consequence of the destruction of the temple, other means of obtaining forgiveness and peace have been resorted to. The rabbis of the talmud have declared that prayer, fasting and charity take the place of sacrifices. For the whole idea underlying atonement according to rabbinical view, is regeneration—restoration of the original state of man in his relation to God. "As vessels of gold or of glass, when broken, can be restored by undergoing the process of melting;" thus men after having sinned, find their way of recovering a state of purity by repentance and fasting. "Tshuvo," as a token of contrition, prayer, "Tfilo," expressing the sacred thoughts and charity, "Zdoko," for the works of benevolence, have atoning powers greater than those of sacrifice. Now, awe-inspired with the sacredness of the day, the Hebrews all over the world celebrate the day of atonement with much devotion, bearing a solemn and inspiring character, marked with religious rites expressing thoughtful reflections. This year it occurs Friday, Sept. 28, beginning at 6.30 p.m. and continues the following day until 6.30 p.m.

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world —you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. See that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief Ass't G. P. A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

THE LAND OF THE GAZUM.

(Chicago News.)

(Through a Philadelphia agent the King of the Gazum, in Northern Nigeria, offers special inducements to young American teachers to come and open school there. His Majesty is a cannibal.)

Where the parakeets are winging,
And the monkeys nimbly swinging,
Lives a prince of piquant palate
On an old domestic plan;
He is plain and economic,
Though of penchant gastronomic,
And in various forms and flavors
He much loves his fellow man.

In that land there are no hearses,
Few obituary verses,
There an undertaker's visage
Would increase its solemn gloom;
For no man his kindred buries,
And they have no cemeteries,
Where the tropic palms are waving
In the land of the Gazum.

Of the food, his subjects calming,
That wise king brooks no embalming
No exposures of state viands
In the papers e'er are seen;
There is every one a stranger
To all fear of ptomaine danger,
So they need no meat inspector
With a can of kerosene.

Some kind neighboring tribe produces
The chief victuals for their uses,
Save when for their 'wives' relation
They just now and then make room;
Aye, and sometimes for each other,
For there, each man loves his brother
O'er a race of beef-trust scorners
Reigns the King of the Gazum.

The question of settling the succession on the Dutch throne is worrying the wise men of Holland. Queen Wilhelmina has no children, and the suggestion that the succession should pass to a princely German family does not find favor with the leaders of political parties. They declare a preference for a republic rather than a monarchy under German influence.

During the last fifty-five years the private wealth of Switzerland has grown from two billions to three billions four hundred millions. Two-fifths of the total have been acquired by the hotel proprietors. Their annual income is estimated at upwards of $30,000,000. The London Spectator says the secret of this success is an open one — the hotel keeper makes his business the study and the science of a lifetime. More than that, the natural beauties of his land have been exploited in a steady, systematic and conservative manner.

Some startling figures of comparison have been made to show the cost of English paupers. The English poor law foots up an expense of more than $75,000,000 a year, which is as great as the entire annual expenditure of the kingdom of Holland, almost as much as that of Australia and New Zealand combined, and equal to the whole public expenditure of Denmark, Greece and Norway. It is easy to understand from these figures the enormous drain which this social and economic condition produces. The poor law meanwhile continues to grow, while the people are kept from ownership in the land, and the expenses of England's vast system of imperial greatness are maintained.

There are 2,086 women saloon keepers and 440 women bar-tenders in the United States, writes Walter Hope in the Technical World Magazine for October. But he adds that there are also 3,450 women clergymen, which, of course, more than outbalances the "bar-keepers." The author tells us that if a man wanted to build a house he could have all the work done by women. Women architects, contractors, masons, plasterers, painters, glaziers, carpenters, plumbers, paper-hangers, slaters and roofers, complete the list of artisans necessary to housebuilding, with the significant fact that there are no women ditch-diggers. But—most wonderful of all — the only occupations in which women are going backward as compared with men, are sewing, tailoring, and dressmaking.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—Receipts of live stock at the City Market, as reported by the railways yesterday, were 92 carloads, composed of 1245 cattle, 1344 hogs, 1918 sheep and lambs, with 150 calves. Besides the above-mentioned hogs, there were 748, or 8 carloads, that came to the packers direct from the country.

Exporters.

Maybee, Wilson & Hall sold 7 carloads at $4.60 to $4.80 per cwt.

Butchers.

The best butchers' sold from $4.25 to $4.60, but there were few at the latter price; medium at $3.75 to $4; common at $3 to $3.50; cows at $2.50 to $3.25; canners at $1.50 to $2.25 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Trade was slow for feeders and stockers, unless they were of good weights and quality. Harry Murby reports having handled 250 during the week at following quotations: Best feeders, 900 to 1050 lbs. each, at $3.40 to $3.75; feeders, 800 to 900 lbs. each, at $3.10 to $3.40; best stockers, 600 to 700 lbs., at $2.90 to $3.10; common to medium stockers, $2.25 to $2.75 per cwt.

About 150 feeders and stockers of the common kinds were reported as unsold at the close of the market.

Milch Cows.

There was a good trade for the best quality milkers and springers. Prices ranged from $30 to $55 each.

Veal Calves.

Trade was brisk for the best quality of calves. Prices ranged from $3.50 to $7 per cwt., about 13 calves selling at the latter price.

Sheep and Lambs.

Prices were firmer all round for sheep and lambs. Lambs sold at $5.25 to $6.10 and several selected lots brought $6.25 per cwt. Export ewes sold at $4.25 to $4.75 per cwt.; bucks at $3 to $3.75 cwt; ewes for breeding purposes sold from $4 to $5 per cwt., the latter price being paid for several select lots.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris reported the market steady at $6.50 for selects, and $6.25 for lights and fats.

GOODYEAR PROCESS.

The Foolish Fogey Way And The Other Way

Many people still cling to the grand mother idea that a perfect custom made boot cannot be produced except by hand in the good, old fashioned, foolish, fogey way.

Hand made is right. A shoe should be hand made throughout and all Slater's are, but why should a shoe maker be condensed to tediously sew a shoe with awl, wax and knife at snail speed when he can do it a hundred times quicker and a hundred times better with a Goodyear Welt machine? There's no reason, except prejudice and tradition.

Every woman knows that for strength, evenness and durability, hand sewing cannot compare with the sewing machines product. Neither can hand shoe sewing compare with Goodyear machine sewing.

If you'd like a shoe without tacks, threads, stitches, lumps, hollows or roughness under the foot; if you'd like a shoe with the lock stitch which holds the sole on until worn to the thinness of paper, get a shoe that's made by the Goodyear Welt Process. As all Slater's are made by that process—Get a Slater's.

Anywhere in Canada at $3.50 and $4.00 for women and $4.00 to $5.00 for men—$1.00 less than the best American makes and precisely the same shoe.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

pecting me at home, and I've never broken word to her since I was married. I should take it as kind, captain, if you could give me some notion about this piece of employment, now, so that I could see whether it's worth—" He yawned again, and struggled with his heavy eyelids—"You must understand, please, captain, that time is scarce with me; I must get employment at once, I can't stand by and see my missus and youngsters hungry."

Capt. Douglas swore and hit the table with his fist. "It's beastly hard!" he said, "and I hate myself for bringing you here."

"What's that noise overhead?" said Kettle. "What are your crew doing on deck?" He tried to rise, but fell back stupidly on the sofa. A harsh bell clanged from somewhere beneath, and the slop-slop of water came to him through the yacht's side.

"She's swinging around in the stream, and someone's rung 'stand-by' to the engine room.

"Sounds like it," the red-haired man admitted.

Again Kettle tried to rise, and with an immense effort tottered to his feet; but he had been given a drug too powerful for even his iron will to fight against; and he swayed, and then pitched helplessly sideways on to the carpet.

The last flickering gleams of consciousness were passing away from him, but the truth of what had happened had flashed upon him at last. "Shanghaied," he murmured; "by James, yes, Shanghaied, that's what this means. Well, I pity the man—that Shanghaied me. By—James—yes." He breathed stertorously a time or two more, as though trying to get out other words, and then dropped off into a deathly stupor.

Then the door of the stateroom creaked slyly open, and the red-haired man started violently. He turned and saw a tall, dark woman just crossing the threshold. "Donna Clotilde!" he said nervously. "I thought you were ashore. Then it was by your orders—"

"That the yacht was got under way! Si, senor, I saw you coming on board with the man we have been hunting for these last two years, and as soon as the pair of you got below, I sent word to the mate to call all hands, and get out of the Tyne as soon as the pilot could manage it." She knelt beside Kettle's prostrate body, and passed her hand caressingly over his damp forehead. "You are sure you have not overdone it?" she asked.

"I am sure of nothing like that," he answered grimly. "But I gave him the dose you measured out yourself, so what's done is your own affair. I only added enough whiskey to drown the taste, and the poor little beggar drank it all down at one mouthful."

"I don't see that you need pity him much. He will be all right when he wakes."

"When he wakes it will be at sea, and I have heard him speak of his wife and kids. That's why, I pity him, Donna Clotilde. Incidentally I'm a bit sorry for myself." He stooped over the prostrate man and took a revolver from the back pocket of his trousers. "Look there! You see the fellow took a gun with him even to Hallett's. It's grown to be a habit with him. He's a dead shot, too, and doesn't mind shooting."

"I didn't think you were a coward."

"You know quite well I'm not, senorita. But this Capt. Kettle will remember that I was the fellow that decoyed him on board and he'll be pretty anxious to square up the account when he wakes."

"You are well paid on purpose to cover all risks," said the woman with some contempt.

"And I shall be earning my pay," said the red-haired man doggedly. "This small person here's a holy terror. Well, I must be getting on deck to see the pilot take her down the river. Here, I'll put him on the bed before I go. He'll sleep it off more comfortably there."

"You shall not touch him," said Donna Clotilde. "I will do all that's needful. I have waited for this moment for three long years."

"You must be pretty keen on him if you can sit by him when he does not know you."

"I have loved him," since the first moment we met, and he knows it; and I do not mind who else knows it also. I am entirely without shame in the matter; I glory in it. I am not one of your cold blooded European women."

"Well," he said, "you're paying me to run this yacht, and I must be on up to see the pilot take her out of the river without losing us any paint." And he went out of his room, and left Donna Clotilde La Touche alone with this man by whom she was so fiercely attracted.

The yacht steamed out between Tyne pier heads, and the pilot left her in the coble which had been towing stern-first alongside. Her destination was the Mediterranean, but she did not port her helm at once. Instead, she held on straight out into the North Sea, and then turned off to make the Mediterranean, north about; that is, through the Pentland, and round Scotland. She kept clear of Ireland also, making a course for herself through the deeper wilderness of the North Atlantic, avoiding the north-and-south traffic of the bay, and, in fact, sighting scarcely a single vessels till the red-haired man at last starboarded his helm and put her east for the straits.

The voyage was not one of monotony. Capt. Kettle lay for the first 24 hours in a state of snoring unconsciousness, and when he did come to his wits again, found himself in a cabin alone. He got up and stretched. His limbs were heavy and languid, but he was not conscious of having received any hurt. He clapped a hand to the region of his loins and nodded his grim head significantly. His pistol was missing.

He looked in the glass and saw that his face about the red torpedo beard was drawn and white, and that his eyes were framed in black, dissipated looking rings. There was an evil taste in his mouth, too, which even a bottleful of water did not allay. However, all of these were minor details; they might be repaired afterward. His first requirement was revenge on the man who had lured him aboard.

His natural instincts of tidiness made him go through the ceremony of toilet, and then he put on his cap, and, spruce and pale, went out through the luxurious cabin and passageways of the yacht and found his way on deck.

The time was night; the cold air was full of moonshine; and fortune favored him, insomuch that the red-haired man whom he sought was himself standing a watch. He walked up to him without any concealment, and then, swift as light, slung out his right fist, sending every ounce of his weight after it, and caught the red-haired man squarely on the peak of the jaw.

The fellow went down as if he had been pole-axed and Kettle was promptly on top of him. The three other hands of the watch on deck were coming fast to their big captain's assistance, and Kettle made the most of his time. He had been brought up in a school where he was taught to hit hard, and hit first, and keep on hitting, and moreover he was anatomically skilled enough to know where to hit with most effect. He had no time then for punctilious fighting; he intended to mark his man in return for value received; and he did it. Then the three lusty deck hands of the watch came up and wrenched him off, and held him for their officer in turn to take vengeance on.

Kettle stood in their grip, panting, and pale, and exultant.

"You great ugly red-polled beggar," he said, "I've made your face match your head, but you needn't thank me for it. You'd dare to Shanghai me, would you? By James, I'll make your ship a perfect hell till I'm off it."

"You hit a man when he's not looking."

"Liar!" said Kettle. "You saw me plain enough. If you were half a sailor you'd never have been hit."

"You're half my size. I couldn't fight you."

"Tell your hands to set me adrift, and try."

The big man was tempted, but he swallowed down his inclination. He ordered the men who were holding Capt. Kettle to set him free and go away forward again, and then he thrust his own fists resolutely in his pockets.

"Now," he said, when they were alone, "I own up to having earned what you've given me, and I hope that'll suit you, for if it doesn't I'll shoot you like a rat with your own gun. You've handled me in a way no other man has done before, and so you can tickle your pride with that and simmer down. If you want to know, I was a man like yourself—hard up—and was paid to kidnap you, and I'd have kidnapped the devil for money just then."

"I know nothing about the devil," said Kettle, acidly; "but you've got me and you couldn't very well find a worse bargain. If you are not a fool you will set me ashore at once."

"I shall act entirely by my owner's orders."

"Then trot out your owner, and I'll pass the time of day with him next. I'm not particular, I'll kill the whole blooming ship's company if I don't get my own way."

"Man, don't you be a fool. You can't hit a woman?"

"A woman?"

"Yes, I told you before—Donna Clotilde. You know her well enough."

"Donna Clotilde, who?"

"La Touche."

The stiffening seemed suddenly to go out of the little man. He stepped wearily across the deck, and leant his elbows on the yacht's polished topgallant rail. "By James!" he murmured to the purple arch of the night. "By James! that—that woman. What a ruddy mess." And then he broke off into dreary musing. He had known this Donna Clotilde La Touche before; had entered her employ in Valparaiso; had helped her revolutionary schemes by capturing a warship for her. In return she had conceived a mad infatuation for him. But all the while he regarded her merely as his employer. In the end he had been practically set adrift at sea in an open boat as a penance for not divorcing his own wife and marrying her. And now she was come to add to his other troubles by beginning to persecute him again. It was hard, bitterly hard.

By some subtle transference of thought, the woman in her berth below became conscious of his regard, grew restless, woke, got more restless, dressed, came on deck and saw this man with whom she was so fiercely enamored staring gloomily over the bulwarks. With her lithe, silent walk she stepped across the dewy decks under the moonlight, and, without his hearing her, leaned on the rail at his side, and flung an arm across his shoulders.

Capt. Kettle woke from his musings with a start, stepped coldly aside and saluted formally. He had an eye for a good-looking woman, and this one was deliciously handsome. He was always chivalrous toward the other sex, whatever might be their characters; but the fact of his own kidnapping at the moment of Mrs. Kettle's pressing need, made him almost as hard as though a man stood before him as his enemy.

"Miss La Touche," he said, "do you wish me to remember you with hatred?"

"I do not wish you to have need to remember me at all. As you know, I wish you to stay with me always."

"That, as I have told you before, miss, is impossible for more reasons than one. You have done me infinite mischief already. I might have found employment by this time had I stayed in South Shields, and meanwhile my wife and children are hungry. Be content with that, and set me ashore."

"I repeat the offer I made you in South America. Come with me, get a divorce, and your wife shall have an income such as she never dreamed of, and such as you never could have got her in all your life otherwise. You know I am not boasting. As you must know by this, I am one of the richest women in the world."

"Thank you, but I do not accept the terms. Money is not everything."

"And meanwhile, remember, I keep you on board here, whether you like it or not; and, until you give way to what I want, your wife may starve. So if she and your children are in painful straits, you must recollect that it is entirely your fault."

"Quite so," said Kettle. "She will be content to starve when she knows the reason."

Donna Clotilde's eyes began to glitter.

"There are not many men who would refuse if I offered them myself."

"Then, miss, I must remain curious."

She stamped her foot. "I have hungered for you all this time, and I will not give you up for mere words. You will come to love me in time as I love you. I tell you you will, you must, you shall. I have got you now, and I will not let you go again."

"Then, miss," said Kettle grimly, "I shall have to show you that I am too hot to hold."

She faced him with heaving breast. "We will see who wins," she cried.

"Probably," said Capt. Kettle, and took off his cap. "Good night, Miss, for the present. We know how we stand; the game appears to begin between us from now." He turned deliberately away from her, walked forward, and went below; and, after a little waiting, Donna Clotilde shivered and went back to her own luxurious stateroom.

But if she was content to spend the rest of the night in mere empty longing, Capt. Kettle was putting his time to more practical use. He was essentially a man of action.

Cautiously, he found his way to the steward's storeroom, filled a case with meat tins and biscuit, and then coming on deck again stowed it away in the life-boat, which hung in davits outboard, without being noticed. With equal success he took the boat's breaker forward, filled it from a water tank and got it fixed on its chocks again, still without being seen. The moon was behind clouds, and the darkness favored him. He threw down the coils of the davit falls on deck, cast off one from where it was belayed, took a turn and carried the bight to the other davit so that he could lower away both tackles at once.

But he was not allowed to get much further. The disused blocks screamed like a parcel of cats as the ropes rended through them; there was a shrill whistle from the officer of the watch and half a dozen men from various parts of deck came bounding along to interfere.

Capt. Kettle let go both falls to overhaul as they chose, picked up a greenheart belaying-pin out of the pin rail, and stood on the defensive. But the forward fall kinked and jammed, and though the little man fought like a demon to keep off the watch till he got it clear, they were too many for him, and drove him to the deck by sheer weight of numbers. He had cracked one man's forearm in the scuffle, laid open another's face, and smashed in the front teeth of a third, and they were rather inclined to treat him roughly, but the red-haired skipper came up, and by sheer superior strength picked him up, kicking and struggling, and hustled him off below whether he liked it or not.

The lifeboat dangled half-swamped from the forward davit tackle, and all hands had to be piped before they could get her on board again, and by the time they had completed this job, there was another matter handy to occupy their attention. A fireman came up from below, white-faced and trembling:

"The yacht's half full of water," he said.

Now that their attention was called to it, they noticed the sluggish way she rode the water.

"She must have started a plate or something," the fireman went on excitedly. "We've got both bilge pumps running, and they won't look at it. The water's coming in like a sluice."

"Carpenter," sang out the red-haired man, "come below with me and see if we can find anything," and he led the way to the companion. Between decks they could hear the water slopping about under the flooring. It seemed a bad, almost a hopeless case.

Instinctively the red-haired man went to his own room to pocket his valuables, and by a chance he was moved to lift up the door in the floor which covered the bath beneath it. Ah, there was the mischief. The seacock which filled the bath was turned on the full, and the iron tub was gushing water on every side. The next stateroom was empty, but the bath cock there was also turned on to the full; and after going round the ship, and finally entering Kettle's room (and covering him with a revolver) and turning off his water supply he found that the sea had been pouring inboard from no fewer than eight separate apertures.

"And this is your work, you little fiend, I suppose?" said the red-haired man, savagely.

"Certainly," said Capt. Kettle. "Shoot me if you like, put me ashore if you choose, but don't grumble if you find me a deuced ugly passenger. I'm not in the habit of being made to travel where I don't wish."

That afternoon Kettle contrived to set the yacht afire in three separate places, and a good deal of damage was done (and night had fallen again) before the scared crew managed to extinguish the flames; and this time Donna Clotilde intervened. She asked for Kettle's parole that he would attempt no further mischief; and when this was flatly refused, incontinently put him in irons. The lady was somewhat tigerish in her affections.

A second time Capt. Kettle managed to get the yacht in a blaze, at the imminent peril of immolating himself, and then, from lack of further opportunity to make himself obnoxious, lay quiet in his lair till such time as the yacht would of necessity go into harbor to coal. The exasperated crew would cheerfully have murdered him if they had been given the chance, but Donna Clotilde would not permit him to be harmed. She was a young woman who, up to this, had always contrived to have her own way, and she firmly believed that she would tame Kettle in time.

When the yacht passed the straits she had four days' more coal on board, and the executive (and Kettle) expected that she would go into Gibraltar and lay alongside a hulk to rebunker. But Donna Clotilde had other notions. She had the yacht run down the Morocco coast, and brought to anchor. So long as she had Capt. Kettle in her company upon the waters, she did not vastly care whether she was moving or at a standstill.

"You cannot escape me here," she said to him when the cable had roared from the hawse pipe, and the dandy steamer had swung to a rest. "The yacht is victualed for a year, and I can stay here as long as you choose. You had far better be philosophical and give in. Marry me now, and liking will come afterward."

Kettle looked at the tigerish love and resentment which blazed from her black eyes, and answered with cold politeness that time would show what happened; though, to tell the truth, indomitable though he was as a general thing, he was at that time feeling that escape was almost impossible. And so for the while he more or less resigned himself to captivity.

Under the baking blue of a Mediterranean sky this one-sided courtship progressed. Donna Clotilde alternating her ecstasies of fierce endearment by paroxysms of invective, and Kettle enduring both in equal coldness and immobility. The crew of the yacht looked on, stolidly noninterferent, and were kept by their officers at cleaning and painting, as necessary occupiers to the mind. But one or other of them, of their own free will, always kept an eye on their guest, whether he was on deck or below. He had given them a wholesome taste of his quality, and they had an abject dread of what he might be up to next if he was left alone. They quite understood that he would destroy the yacht and all hands, if, by doing so, he could regain his personal liberty.

But others, it seems, besides those already mentioned in this narrative, were taking a lively interest in the smart yacht and her people. She was at ancnor in the bay of the Riff coast, and the gentry who inhabited the beach villages, and the villages in the hills behind the beach, had always looked upon anybody and anything they could grab as their just and lawful prey. The Sultan of Morocco, the warships of France, Spain and elsewhere, and the emissaries of other powers had time after time endeavored to school them in the science of civilization without effect, and so they still remain to-day, the only regular practicing pirates in the western world.

The yacht was sighted first from the hills; was reported to the beach villages; and was reconnoitered under cover of night by a tiny fishing boat. The report was pleasing, and word went round. Bearded brown men collected at an appointed spot, each with the arms to which he was best accustomed; and when darkness fell, four large boats were run down to the further edge of the surf. There was no indecent hurry. They did their work with method and carefulness, like men

A Grand Medicine for the Kidneys.

Don't suffer—don't experiment—don't waste money on unknown, untried remedies. There is one quick cure—one certain cure—one cure that everybody knows does cure Kidney Trouble. That's Gin Pills.

"I have been a sufferer with Kidney Trouble for years. Have tried medicines and doctors' prescriptions, but could get no permanent relief, my case being pronounced chronic. As it is generally known that the properties of gin without the alcohol is good for the kidneys, I decided to try Gin Pills, but must admit with very little faith. From the very first pill I got relief, and have since taken nearly four boxes and am COMPLETELY CURED, but am going to continue them a while longer. No dull, sickening pains in the back—no low spirits—am increasing in weight—and more vim and vigor than I have had for years—is what Gin Pills have done for me.

"H. P. HERBERT, Ottawa."

Be well and strong. Be free of pain. Be able to enjoy all the good things of life, with all your old-time vigor and enthusiasm. Gin Pills will cure those sick kidneys. Start now—to-day—and see how much better you feel to-morrow. 50c box—6 boxes for $2.50—and your money back if they don't cure.

Special offer: If you send us your name and address and tell us the name of the paper in which you read this we will send you a trial box absolutely free and post prepaid. Write today and get the medicine that cures.

THE IVORY MARKET.

One of the sights of London is the great ivory floor at the London docks, where previous to and during the periodical sales ivory may be seen literally by the acre, for the tusks are laid out in lots on the floor of one of the great warehouses for inspection by intending purchasers. For weeks previous to the actual sale the special staff of the ivory department has been busy preparing the various consignments and arranging them according to the sizes and quality and classing them into the various grades, each of which has some particular use for which it is especially adapted.

There is practically no waste in the manufacturing of articles from ivory. The smallest chip is not thrown away, but carefully preserved to be utilized for some purpose. Even the shavings from the turning down of a billiard ball have a market value for use in inlaid work. Consequently the lots in an ivory sale by no means consist of tusks and sections of tusks alone, but include the residue from many previous sales. Buyers purchase the particular class that they require for their own individual industry and subsequently return what in most other materials would be waste to be resold to manufacturers of a different class of goods.

Though there is "no waste," oddly enough the most important consideration, from a buyer's point of view, is "how much waste" will a certain lot produce in the course of transforming it into his own particular line. Thus a lot that would be dear to one would be a gift to another, and vice versa. The most valuable class of ivory is that suitable for making billiard balls. To conform to the requirements the tusk must be perfectly sound and solid, without the slightest suspicion of a crack or flaw, and, moreover, they must measure only a trifle more than the regulation size billiard ball or they will cut to waste, from the manufacturers' point of view. On the arrival of a consignment of unworked elephant ivory from abroad the first preparation for the sale floor consists of a thorough cleaning of the interior or hollow part of the tusk. This is done by means of wads attached to long sticks. The exact length of the hollow is thereby revealed, and in addition cracks and flaws that cannot be observed on the exterior are at times disclosed. Soundness is the one thing that sways every class of buyer; flaws mean waste; waste means resale at a lower figure per pound.

An Avaricious Woman.

A woman who carried love of money to an incredible extreme was Lady Margaret Jardine, sister of the first Duke of Queensbury. Although her husband was a rich man, Lady Margaret would actually carry foot passengers across the little river Annan for a halfpenny, and whenever there was a fair or market day she would sit on the banks of the stream all day long waiting for customers. She usually wore rags to save her clothes, but on the rare occasions when she visited anywhere she packed up a few decent garments which she slipped on before entering the house, exchanging them for her dirty ones when leaving.—London Queen.

The Point of View.

Zangwill, the noted writer, had an experience which convinced him that in deciding what constitutes real greatness a good deal depends upon the point of view. At a political meeting he fell into conversation with a man who knew all the speakers and pointed them out as they sat on the platform. "There," he said, "sits Senator Lodge." "What?" exclaimed Mr. Zangwill. "Do you mean Henry Cabot Lodge, the literary man—the great historian?" "No, sir-ee!" replied the other with distinct contempt. "That's Henry Cabot Lodge, United States senator from the great state of Massachusetts."

Unnecessary.

"Now, Tommy," said the boy's mother, giving him final instructions, "you must remember how to behave at the party. If you're asked to have something and you want it you must say 'Yes, thank you,' and if you don't want it you must say"—

"You needn't bother about that part of it, ma," interrupted Tommy.

The Maneuvering Mamma.

"The maneuvering mamma is practically extinct. The modern daughter has an almost free hand in managing her love transactions. The mere love marriage, which was so disturbing a thought to the mother of even twenty years ago, is seldom heard of in Mayfair in these altered circumstances, says the London Graphic.

Literary Notes.

MORE COURTSHIP AFTER MARRIAGE.

Some men seem to consider their marriage certificate as a sort of fully paid-up policy of happiness. They act as if the courtship days were those of paying premiums of compliment, cheerfulness, courtesy, consideration and chivalry, and that marriage cuts off all these premiums of lover-like attention. The only way to get an absolutely guaranteed insurance on matrimony is to keep paying the premiums. Many first-class matrimonial policies lapse just because of these suspended payments.

There is a tendency to assume that this love is known and recognized, so why speak of it? This is a dangerous taking for granted of what should be made real, pulsing and vital in thought, word and deed. There is little danger of over-telling this story: it is often the wine of life and inspiration to one hungering and thirsting for the little tendernesses of affection. There are more people on this great, big, rolling earth hungering for sweetness, tenderness, and words of appreciation, genial confidence and generous affection than are starving for bread. With husband and wife these delicate messengers of affection cost so little — sometimes only a thought: but it is the thought that is all.

Continued courtship after marriage preserves the lover in the husband and the sweetheart in the wife. But courtship is not solitaire: like a quarrel, it requires two to make it a success. It is not the wife alone who needs the gracious sweetness of concentrated comradeship, for husbands who are built on the right lines have the same hunger for loving kindness and kindly loving.

Courtship is a vessel of promise that is often wrecked on the shoals of matrimony. Courtship means two mates without a captain: marriage sometimes becomes two captains without a mate.—From the October Delineator.

Cats As Retrievers.

"It is claimed," said an antiquary, "that cats may be trained as retrievers—trained to swim to your slain birds and bring them back to you in their mouths. The thing sounds incredible. But look here." He held up the photograph of an ancient Egyptian painting. Men with spears rode on the Nile. In some of the boats large cats sat on their haunches in the stern, while toward others several cats swam with dead birds in their mouths. "This picture," said the antiquary, "proves that the Egyptians used cats for hunting dogs. If they, why not we? The original of the picture is in the British museum, where there are also several pieces of carving that display the cat in the role of a retriever."

First to Greet George Brown.

An interesting visitor to Stratford city recently was Mr. Thomas Patterson, of Bowmanville, who was the guest of Hon. Thos. Ballantyne. He is 92 years of age, and is as active as many a man of middle age. Besides having seen both Sir Walter Scott and the Duke of Wellington, he was one of the first to greet Hon. George Brown when he landed in Toronto in 1842.

"When it rains pottage you must hold up your dish"; and when it "rains bargains" at the stores you must read the ads.

There is a Danish proverb which runs, "No man is so tall that he need ever stretch; and none so small that he need never stoop." It might be added that no one is so rich that he need not read the advertisements.

WILES OF THE CHEFS

BANQUET TIDBITS ARE NOT ALWAYS WHAT THEY SEEM.

"A Cod and a French Cook Can Work Miracles"—The Breast of One "Chicken" Has Been Known to Satisfy Twelve Hungry Diners.

It has almost passed into a proverb that many of the dishes served up in cheap restaurants, where nothing is wasted, are, to put it mildly, mysteries. But, on the other hand, most people who patronise fashionable and more ambitious restaurants are generally content to accept the menu for what it is said to be. This blind trust is somewhat abused, and the amount of "faking" which goes on today in some of the well to do establishments would probably surprise those who are uninitiated in the higher branches of the culinary art.

For instance, by the addition of vegetable juice just before being dished up cod cutlets are, at seasons when salmon is very dear, set before customers as salmon cutlets and are, needless to say, charged accordingly. This deception, according to an ex-chef, is wisely practiced not only in better class restaurants, but also on some of the great liners.

Another popular trick as practiced by the restaurateur is to serve a veal beef done up overnight in salted bandages, while a skillful chef has very little difficulty in palming off flatfish for sole on epicures who pride themselves on the soundness of their judgment of cooking.

On one occasion some time ago a dinner for seventy-five people was ordered at a well known fashionable restaurant in the upper part of New York. A large consignment of salmon had been previously ordered, but, to the consternation of the chef, the dinner hour slowly approached and still no salmon arrived.

In despair the chef, a Frenchman, decided to "take the bull by the horns" and procure another fish to do duty for the coveted salmon. Accordingly he sat to work to turn cod cutlets into salmon cutlets, and this rapid transformation was soon effected by an addition of vegetable juice. The waiters, who naturally were aware of this wholesale deception, were given express orders to report any complaints to the chef at once. However, to the intense delight of the chef, all passed off well, and on hearing that his subterfuge had not been detected he gleefully exclaimed, "Ah, a cod and a French cook can work miracles."

Green peas at certain seasons of the year are naturally a luxury quite beyond the reach of the man of average means, while even caterers for fashionable hotels themselves frequently have the greatest difficulty in getting a sufficiently large quantity to meet the demand. However, to fake peas does not offer any great difficulty in times of stress, and by adding vegetable coloring matter yellow peas are quite commonly served up as green peas along with the duck and flavorless new potatoes, which more often than not come from abroad.

Roast veal served with a thick white sauce makes, says a well known chef, a most satisfactory substitute for the breast of chicken, and therefore it does not come altogether as a surprise to learn that the breast of one chicken has been known to satisfy twelve hungry diners.

"The staff take good care of the breast of a chicken," was the comment of a waiter who was being for the first time initiated into the mystery of how to feed a dozen people off one chicken.

Perhaps the cleverest deception practiced by eminent chefs is the art of manufacturing the lobster patty, so dear to the heart of the epicure. This appetizing dainty would at first sight seem to defy even the most ingenious cookery fakir. However, here again the artful chef has overcome apparently insuperable difficulties, and many toothsome looking lobster patties are thus not always quite what they are said to be.

The deception is worked in this way: A common crustacean is boiled and the meat carefully chopped off and put into a mortar, while afterward part of the shell is added. The mixture is then vigorously pounded as fine as possible, and on the addition of flavoring it would tax the powers of the most critical connoisseur to detect any difference between the gastronomic mixture and the genuine lobster patty.

"The various deceptions I have told you of," remarked a famous chef to the writer, "are naturally not practiced every day, but are only utilized in times of emergency, and these emergency moments arrive more frequently than the trustful customer would like did he but know."

Scull and Skull.

"Sculls" and "skulls" are really one word in origin, and both at various times have been spelled capriciously with a "c" or a "k." Pepys, the diarist, tells how he went on the Thames at one time "in a scull," at another in a "skuller." The origin of the word is "skulle" or "sculle," a bowl or goblet. While the cranium was obviously bowlike in shape, a distant resemblance to a bowl was also detected in the scooped out blade of a "scull" as opposed to the flat blade of an oar proper.

Talking Behind Her Back.

"Don't you know, dear," said his wife sweetly, "that it is wrong to talk behind a person's back?"

He was trying to button her waist at the time, and really there seemed to be provocation for his remarks.

In the court of his own conscience no guilty man is acquitted.—Juvenal.

PLAINT OF THE SIWASH

REASON WHY CHIEFS WILL SEEK TO SEE THE KING.

The White Man Has Broken Faith by Encroaching on the Indian Lands and the Tribesmen Want Redress—Chinook Address of Farewell Spoken by City Comptroller Gibson of Vancouver.

"Mayor Buscombe biyu sic tum tum halo chaco wawa klahowya yaka Siwash tillicum. Yaka wawa nika wawa mike tighee. King Edward potlach konoway icta mika. Tighee yaka wawa klahowya, khahowya. Klapi tenas sun kopa canim kopa mitlit illahee."

In these words Mr. Gibson, City Comptroller of Vancouver, wished bon voyage to the two Indian chiefs and their interpreter who are now on their way to London, England, their object being to see King Edward and "lay at the foot of the throne" their grievances against the white man, "who have taken away their lands and interfered with the fishing and hunting rights which their fathers enjoyed." A free translation of Mr. Gibson's Chinook address is:

"Mayor Buscombe's heart is grieved because he could not be at the station to say good-bye to his Siwash friends. He hoped King Edward would grant their wishes. He wished them a pleasant journey and a safe return in the big canoe to their own homes."

No Forked Tongue Has Joe.

The Indian chiefs hoped to reach London by the end of July. It was their intention to stop off at Kamloops where a big pow-wow was to be held, and where another chief may join them. If time permits they desire to wait on the Great White Chief Laurier at Ottawa. Chief Joe Capilano is the head of the deputation, and with him is Chief Charley of the famous fighting Cowichins. Chief Joe always speaks with a straight tongue, and he will not mince his language when he sees the King at Buckingham Palace. As King Edward cannot be expected to understand Chinook an interpreter, August, of the Coquitlam tribe, is with him and Chief Louis of Kamloops is expected to be of the party.

"I go to see the King in England," said Chief Joe as he was entraining. "I will speak to him of what his Indian subjects want. I will tell you when I come back what he says. I will shake his hand in loyalty for you. He is the King of the Indians and the whites. Under him all are one big family. When I see the King I will tell him that his subjects are all faithful in British Columbia. I will tell you all what the King says when I get back."

Picturesque at Any Rate.

"God Save the King" then struck up the Indian drum and fife band, which was at the station to play Chief Joe upon his way to the far city across the great ocean and the vast sea. A strange sight was presented at the station. Chief Joe was in kingly costume. A great fur hat of coonskin, nearly a foot high with the tail dangling down his back was as unnoticed by him as though it had been a panama, yet the day was the hottest thus far this summer. A woven reed blanket fell below his knees and almost put out of sight the ready-made white man's trousers.

The Whites Indicted.

"The whites are crowding us out, they are taking away our heritage." That is the burden of the address which the chiefs will present to the King. Missionaries have put the document in formal style so that it starts out thus: "May it please your Majesty. Perhaps we are among the most remote of your Majesty's subjects, yet we give place to none in our loyalty and devotion to your Majesty's person and to the British Crown. Our home is beyond the great Atlantic Ocean, beyond the great inland seas of Canada, beyond the vast wheat-growing prairies of Manitoba, beyond the majestic Rocky Mountains, away on the shores of the Pacific Ocean. We bring greetings to your Majesty from thousands of true and loyal hearts, which beat in unison beneath the red skins of our tribesmen, and it is because of our love to your Majesty, coupled with the desire to live in harmony with the white people who are filling up our country, that we appeal to your Majesty in person."

No Treaty Indians In B. C.

The address proceeds to point out that there are no treaty Indians in British Columbia, such as there are in other provinces of Canada. Here the Indian title has never been extinguished.

"Many years ago,' it proceeds, "Sir James Douglas came to our country and told us he had been sent by her Majesty, the late Queen Victoria—whom we learned to love like a mother, and whom we continue to mourn. Sir James told us that large numbers of white people would come to our country and, in order to prevent trouble, he designated large tracts of land for our use and told us that if any white people encroached on those lands he would remove them, which he did, and that we should receive remuneration for other lands settled upon by the white people, but when we asked for anything we were refused. But when Sir James was no longer Governor whites settled upon our lands and titles were issued to them by the British Columbia Government."

Have No Pull.

The Indians naively add that, being without votes, they can get no redress, so they trust his Majesty's ear will be open to their cry. They point out that at one time the whites were glad to employ them, but now Chinese and Japanese take their places in the labor market.

"We know how to work as well as the white man," they say, "we have our families to keep as well as the white man, then why should we not have the same privileges as the white man?"

This is no doubt a reference to the lack of the franchise and perhaps to the fact that it is illegal for Indians to drink intoxicating liquors. The Indians ask the King to "send a good man, or some good men to British Columbia, who will see and hear and take back a report to your Majesty. We leave ourselves in your Majesty's hands and trust we may be able to return to our people with good news."

"LUCKY" BALDWIN.

His Whirlwind of Speculation In the Mining Regions.

In 1853 a little party of gold seekers with a meager outfit of horses and wagons started for California from the village of Racine, Wis. In command of this adventurous expedition was a young man who took with him his wife and infant daughter. His name was E. J. Baldwin and he made a wise choice in shaking from his restless feet the dust of a tamer civilization. He needed a larger theater of action for his pent-up and surging activities. While trailing through the mountains of Utah the pioneers were attacked by Indians, who were beaten off during a six hour fight in which young Baldwin killed their chief. After six months of hardship the party reached Hangtown (later called Placerville), in California.

Here Baldwin tarried and began placer mining. He appears to have been no more than an ordinary red shirted argonaut, meeting the ups and downs of mining luck until the discovery of the Comstock lode at Virginia City. Thither he drifted and discovered that his natural bent was gambling with the mines that other men had opened. Amid a whirlwind of speculation he fought his way with such success that he loomed from the smoke in a few months as "Lucky" Baldwin, the man who had cleaned up $7,500,000 in the gigantic deals in the stock of the Ophir mines.

San Francisco was the Mecca of those lucky sons of fortune who were rearing a great city by the Golden Gate. As a stock and mining speculator "Lucky" Baldwin shone resplendent, but he was also a loyal son of San Francisco. He built hotels and theaters and business blocks even while he was amazing that far from conservative community by madly freakish extravagances.

In a very lucid interval he bought all the Spanish grants he could find near Los Angeles and there spent a million in making this ranch of his not only a splendidly productive property, but also one of the most beautiful estates ever laid out in this or any other country. It was his hobby, his pet, and he planted miles of avenues with noble shade trees and made wonderful tropical gardens, surrounding his home by a paradise of vernal beauty.—Ralph D. Paine in Outing Magazine.

"TELL IT TO THE MARINES."

Pepys' Version of the Origin of the Expression by Charles II.

The saying, "Tell it to the marines," is traced to Pepys, the author of the famous "Diary," and it is said by him to have originated with Charles II. of England. "It so befell," as the story goes, "that his light hearted majesty, with an exceedingly bored expression on his swarthy face, was strolling in the shade with the ingenious Mr. Pepys, secretary to the admiralty. "I had speech yester'en at Deptford,' said Mr. Pepys, 'with the captain of the Defryance, who hath lately returned from the Indies and who told me the two most wonderful things that ever, I think, I did hear in my life.' Among the stories told were of fish flying in the air. 'Fish flying in the air!' exclaimed his majesty. 'Ha, ha! A quaint conceit, which 'twere too good to spoil wi' keeping. What ho, sir'—he turned and beckoned the colonel, Sir William Killigrew of the newly raised maritime regiment of foot, who was following in close conversation with the Duke of York—'we would discourse with you on a matter touching your own element. What say you, colonel, to a man who swears he hath seen fishes to fly in the air?'

"'I should say, sire,' returned the sea soldier simply, 'that the man hath sailed in southern seas, for when your majesty's business carried me thither of late I did frequently observe more flying fish in one hour than the hairs of my head in number.'

"Old Rowley glanced narrowly at the colonel's frank, weather beaten face. Then, with a laugh, he turned to the secretary.

"'Mr. Pepys,' said he, 'from the very nature of their calling no class of our subjects can have so wide a knowledge of seas and lands as the officers and men of our loyal maritime regiment. Henceforth 'ere ever we cast doubts upon a tale that lacketh likelihood we will first tell it to the marines.'"—Army and Navy Journal.

Weight of a Piece of Ice.

A rough and ready method of calculating the weight of a piece of ice is afforded by the fact that a cubic foot of this substance weighs approximately 57.25 pounds. First measure the breadth, length and height of the cake, and the three results, being multiplied, will give the number of cubic inches. If this answer be in turn multiplied by .033 the approximate number of pounds will result. For instance, a cake 8 by 9 by 10 inches contains 720 cubic inches. This multiplied by .033 gives 23¾ pounds, the correct weight of such a piece of ice.

A TROPICAL TERROR.

Most Dreaded of Living Things In Equatorial Africa.

Europeans who visit the great equatorial forests of Africa are subject to many risks, but none perhaps so dangerous as contact with the bashikouay, or great bull ant, which is said to be the most dreaded of living things to be found in that region. It is gluttonous in the extreme. That which it attacks it consumes on the spot—nothing is carried away for further convenience. Elephants, leopards, gazelles, lions, snakes, gorillas, monkeys, even the human aborigines of the districts it infests, fly from any neighborhood in which they know it to be located. According to well accredited reports, these awe inspiring bull ants travel, like locusts, in vast armies, marching in a line two inches or more broad and miles in length. One of these armies has been known to take twelve hours to pass a given point. These ants prefer the shade and, rather than be exposed to the rays of the blazing sun, will burrow tunnels under the surface of the ground and thus travel until they come to the shelter of trees. Any animal which, unaware of the proximity of the bull ant and reposing in the solitude of the velt, happens to be attacked has no chance of escape. It is devoured with irresistible fury, and within a few minutes a pile of bleached bones marks the spot where it reposed.

A great deal of valuable information about this dreaded creature has been published by a French zoologist, M. de Chaillier, who has described a personal encounter with the bull ant. "I remember well the first time I met the bashikouays on a raid. I knew not what was in store for me. I was hunting by myself, when suddenly the forest became alive with the foe. A sudden dread seized me, and I stood still in the hunting path, resting on my gun. Suddenly, as if by magic, I was covered and bitten everywhere. I fled in haste and found refuge in a deep stream, yet even then the strong pinchers of the ants would not give way, and though the bodies were torn off the heads remained. The native tribes, when a man is condemned for witchcraft, generally fasten him to a tree before an inroad of these ants. After they have passed a shining skeleton alone is left to tell the tale."

THE SCENT OF SICKNESS.

Most Diseases, It Is Claimed, Have Their Characteristic Odors.

The acuteness of the sense of smell is far greater in many of the lower animals—dogs, for example—than in man, and they employ it in guiding them to their food, in warning them of approaching danger and for other purposes. The sphere of the susceptibility to various odors is more uniform and extended in man, and the sense of smell is capable of great cultivation. Like the other special senses, it may be cultivated by attention and practice. Experts can discriminate qualities of wines, liquors, drugs, etc. Diseases have their characteristic odors.

Persons who have visited many different asylums for the insane recognize the same familiar odor of the insane. It is not insane asylums alone, but prisons, jails, workhouses, armies in camp, churches, schools and nearly every household that have characteristic odors. It is when the insane, the prisoners and the soldiers are aggregated in large groups or battalions that their characteristic odor is recognized. Most diseases have their characteristic odors, and by the exercise of the sense of smell they could be utilized in different diagnoses.

For example, favus has a mousy odor, rheumatism has a copious sour smelling, acid sweat. A person afflicted with pyaemia has a sweet, nauseating breath. The rank, unbearable odor of pus from the middle ear tells the tale of the decay of osseous tissue. In scurvy the odor is putrid, in chronic peritonitis musky, in scrofula like stale beer, in intermittent fever like fresh baked brown bread, in fever ammoniacal, in hysteria like violets or pineapple. Measles, diphtheria, typhoid fever, epilepsy, phthisis, etc., have characteristic odors.—Philadelphia Record.

Fair Warning.

An old time English barrister was John Williams, a sarcastic wit and a bachelor with an intense prejudice against marriage. His clerk one day asked him for a holiday to get married, and some months afterward, on entering his chambers, Williams found his dead body suspended from the door. He engaged another clerk and asked him if he was married. "No," the clerk replied, but thinking that Williams would regard marriage as a guarantee of steadiness he added, "but I am going to be." "Very well," replied Williams, "but understand this—when you hang yourself don't do it here!"

MAORI HOSPITALITY.

Strenuous Welcome Extended to a Party of Travelers.

A traveler in New Zealand tells of a native welcome. His party drew near to the central home of the tribe of Maoris. "As we rested beneath the parapets we were startled by a horrible yell, and round the corner of the stockade appeared a ferocious figure, tattooed, red painted, befeathered and naked, except for a very brief waist fringe of dangling palm fiber. His eyes rolled till the whites only were seen; then he thrust out a long and snaky tongue and grimaced fearfully. Shaking a wooden spear in his hand, he swiftly cast it at us, then turned and rushed toward the village. Just as the spearman turned one of our young men who had rapidly divested himself of all but his waist shawl darted out in pursuit, and we followed at a more dignified pace. The entrance to the village was barred by a body of armed men, crouching still as death, on one knee, each holding a gun, butt on the ground, barrel sloping toward us. We advanced until we were within twenty paces of the warriors. Then all at once, at a wild cry from a chief on the right, they jumped to their feet, leaped high in the air, with their feet doubled under them like deer, and with one voice literally barked out a thundering chorus. This way and that our martial hosts bounded, brandishing their loaded rifles in time to the chant. Halting abruptly, with an earth shaking thud, they fired a volley of ball cartridge over our heads.

"Another volley reverberated from hill to hill and the bullets whistled over us. Then the brown warriors fell back and a gayly dressed band of women, with green leaves wreathed about their brows and waving shawls and leafy boughs, advanced with a gliding semi-dance and chanted their ancient welcome song. When the women's song ceased out to the front danced six girls—a group of vividly barbaric, yet not inharmonious, color—appareled in loose crimson roundabouts and short gowns of gorgeously flowered print, their brows bound about with red handkerchiefs, which held in place the black and white plumes of the rare huia bird and the iridescent feathers of the long tailed cuckoo, their cheeks dabbed with red ocher paint, greenstone pendants and shark's teeth hanging from their ears.

"These barefooted nymphs, hands on hips and heads thrown back, glided into the measure of a dance to the music of a shrill monody chanted by a white haired, tattooed old lady. Then all at once the chant ended on an unexpected high note and the performers stopped, breathless and glowing all over with their self evolved emotions. Broad flax mats were spread out for us on the green and after speeches of greeting we were regaled with pork, preserved birds, wild honey and potatoes, in quantity sufficient to have satisfied a starving garrison."

Just How to Do It.

Advance to the inner door and give three distinct raps. The "devil" will attend your alarm. You give him your name, postoffice address and the number of years that you are owing for the paper. He will then admit you. You will advance to the center of the room, address the editor with the following countersign:—Extend the right hand about two feet from the body, with the thumb and index finger clasping a ten dollar bill, which drops into the extended hand of the editor, at the same time saying, "Were you looking for me?" The editor will say, "You bet." After giving him the news you will be obliged to retire with a receipt for the obligation properly discharged.

Billiards at Sea.

"Can you imagine playing billiards in a heavy gale?" said the captain. "Do you wonder that our great liners, with their elevators and telephones and gymnasium, don't have billiard tables as well? One ship once had a billiard table, the Great Eastern. The wonderful Great Eastern had a billiard table on a swinging deck. This deck was supposed to counteract the ship's motion and to keep the table steady, but it failed to do so, and very remarkable were some of the shots made on the Great Eastern's table in rough weather. Nevertheless the table was kept for years and was a popular institution aboard the big boat, but no other boat before or since has ever bothered to introduce billiards."

Singular and Plural.

It is a question of taste and fancy whether one should make two bites of a cherry, but we all really make two bites of the word "cherry" when we use it in the singular. The original English version of "cerise" was "cheris" or "chiris," which was mistaken for a plural, so that "cheri" or "chiri" was soon manufactured as a singular. Exactly so has "pea" come into being as a false singular obtained from the supposed plural and true singular "pease." "Sherry" for "sherris" is another case, and "shay" from "chaise," "Chinee" from "Chinese" and "corp" from "corpse" are others in vulgar speech. Similarly "riches" is really a singular, of which "richnesses" was the old plural.—London Graphic.

An Infallible Sign.

A student in one of the colleges was writing on a paper in medical jurisprudence in which he was asked to enumerate the signs of death by drowning. After some more or less futile guesses he added, "But the surest sign of all is crape on the door!"—Short Stories.

But for some sorrow and trouble we would never know half the good there is about us.—Dickens.

ZULU WAR TACTICS.

Method of Attack With the Crescent Formation.

Zulu military tactics are associated with the name of Tyaka, the ruthless Zulu conqueror, who welded into the stock of the Amazulu, the people of the heavens, all the young men of the various tribes he conquered, incorporating them into regiments and thus building up a powerful military nation. Yet it was to Dingisiwayo, the wanderer, that the inception was due. This man, the son of the chief of the Umtetwa, was driven into exile in consequence of an abortive plot to seize the reins of power.

During that exile he lived in Cape Colony and saw the military methods of the British. With instinctive genius he saw how the idea could be adapted to his own nation, and on his return and accession to the chieftainship he divided his people into regiments, distinguishing them by names and by a special color of shield for each regiment, though for a time they retained the umkomto, or throwing assagai, as their chief weapon. He heard the great use made by the British infantry of their favorite weapon, the bayonet, and so he replaced the umkomto by the ixwa, or broad bladed stabbing assagai.

The peculiarity of the Zulu tactics has earned it the name of the crescent formation for attack, and it is noteworthy that, broadly speaking, it was the method employed by the Boers in their invasion of Natal and adopted by Lord Roberts in his advance through Orange River Colony, and it was the fear of its success which kept the Boers continually on the run. The best thing with which to compare it is the head of the stag headed beetle. Horns are thrown out widely on either flank, while the main body forms the head itself. From the main body a small force is detached to engage the enemy while the horns creep around the flanks.

This force in the days of Tyaka was frequently dispatched with the command, "Go, sons of Zulu, go and return no more," and death at the hands of their fellows was the fate of those who returned. While this force was holding the enemy the horns carried out their task if possible, and as soon as the two horns had met in the rear of the enemy the head or chest was launched upon the position, and the upshot was that the whole force of the foe tasted the assagai, for in war no quarter was given or asked.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Keep away from people you dislike and don't talk about them.

Put a hog in a parlor and he would break out and wallow in a mudhole.

It becomes necessary occasionally for every man to take punishment. When your time comes don't annoy others with your screams.

Isn't it a fact that the most successful men you know are polite men? Then doesn't it follow that if you hope to succeed you must be polite?

When you hear a man abused behind his back we do not think, "How unpopular other people are!" but "How we all catch it when we are not around!"

Don't worry if you are not good looking. You look all right to your friends. The best looks on earth could not make you look good to your enemies, and those who are not interested in you don't know how you look.

Saved by a Cool Head.

Sir Andrew Clarke while traveling in Italy ascended a high tower one evening and found at the top another tourist, an Englishman. They chatted pleasantly for a few minutes when suddenly the stranger seized Sir Andrew by the shoulders and said quietly, "I am going to throw you over." The man was a maniac. The physician had only a moment in which to gather his thoughts, but that moment saved him. "Pooh!" he replied unconcernedly. "Anybody can throw a man off the tower. If we were on the ground you could not throw me up. That would be too difficult." "Yes, I could," retorted the maniac. "I could easily throw you up here from the ground. Let us go down, and I will do it." The descent was accordingly made, during which Sir Andrew managed to secure help and release himself from his perilous situation.

When Edison Apologized.

When Thomas A. Edison first came to Washington to display the graphophone, which had just recently been invented, Roscoe Conkling, who was always quite vain, was there too. Mr. Conkling wore a little curl on his forehead, and when Mr. Edison repeated something about a little girl with a little curl right in the middle of her forehead the New York senator thought that, of course, the remark was made for him, and Mr. Edison had to apologize.—Dr. Reyburn's Reminiscences of Charles Sumner in Washington Post.

A Lofty Mind.

A lofty mind always thinks nobly. It easily creates vivid, agreeable and natural fancies and places them in their best light, clothes them with all appropriate adornments, studies others' tastes and clears away from its own thoughts all that is useless and disagreeable.—Rochefoucauld.

Unworthy of Remembrance.

My Dear Friend—I beg you to lend me 6,000 francs. Then forget me forever. I am not worthy to be remembered.—From a Letter Found by Paris Figaro.

EYE STRAIN.

Generally, the first effects of eye-strain draw no attention to the eyes, for it may not affect the vision and often does not interfere with the use of the eyes, but it fatigues and taxes the nervous system and compels one to pay dearly for it in some other way. The great misfortune is that it is not usually discovered, nor even looked for, until the trouble is well established. All grades of disturbances may result from eye-strain, from the slightest smarting or weariness of the eyes after close work, to confirmed invalidism. It may show itself in the youngest child, as irritability or nervous excitability, or it may not appear till the burden of old age forces it into notice and uncovers the cause of many an unexplained fret or disability. It may be an unsuspected factor aggravating and intensifying some other weak spot or ailment, and may take different forms at different times; it may excite a weak heart, dull the mental powers or put the whole system out of balance. We remove all this by correcting the cause of the eye-strain.

ALBERT'S JUBILEE.

A meeting of members of the Senate and Board of Management, also ex-students of Albert College, Belleville, who are members of the General Conference, was held yesterday afternoon, presided over by the Rev. Dr. Carman, to further the celebration in 1907 of the jubilee of that College. The object was discussed with considerable enthusiasm and each person pledged himself to make the occasion a memorable one.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

A GIFTED YOUNG PERSON.

Cheridah Simpson, the prima donna of "Red Feather," which comes to the Carman next Wednesday, Oct. 13, possesses the rare gift known as absolute pitch. So keen is her ear that no matter how many notes are struck in a chord, or what instruments are used, she will call each note correctly, according to international pitch. Many casual acquaintances consider it merely a clever trick, as, in most instances, the only instrument available for a test is a piano and the actual fact that her ear alone is responsible is only accepted after proof. The reason for the possession of the gift of absolute pitch has puzzled every musician she has come in contact with; she can tell the tone of every street car gong as it passes, the extreme top notes of the canary songster or the low boom of the deep-toned pipe organ strikes her sensitive ear with the musical vibration of the equivalent tone in the scale.

A Big Masonic Event

Zetland Lodge, A., F. & A. M., Toronto, will this evening celebrate "Canadian night" by a grand banquet, at which between four and five hundred guests will be present. The menu card, which has been shown us, is a most tasteful and elaborate specimen of the printer's art. Mr. W. B. Northrup, M.P., of this city, will propose the toast of "Canada," and Hon. Geo. W. Ross will reply. "Canadian night" in Zetland lodge, so one of the craft tells us, is now looked upon as the Masonic event of the year.

Easy Money.

Philadelphia Ledger: "The easiest money I ever made," said a Philadelphia shipping man the other day, "was handed to me in New York not long ago. I was visiting there and had a little time to myself, so I bought a paper and went down to the river front. I saw an advertisement in the paper saying that a tug was to be auctioned off that day, so I went to the place and stood around examining the tug. After a while a man who had been watching me came over and began asking questions. I told him I was interested in boats and was from Philadelphia. Then he asked, 'what are you doing down here?' 'I came down to this auction sale,' I said. 'Well,' said the man, 'if you want to keep on the right side of the boy you'll do something for me. Here's $100; do not bid on that tug.' I took the money and departed. I had not the slightest intention of bidding."

Officers Of New Law Association

MR. MIKEL, OF THIS CITY, IS ONE OF THEM — GENERAL MEETING CHRISTMAS WEEK.

Toronto, Sept. 28. — (Special.) — The newly-formed Ontario Law Association this morning elected officers as follows:

A. W. Clarke, K. C., M. P., Windsor, President.

F. Arnoldi, K. C., F. E. Hodgins, K. C., and E. M. Field, Cobourg, Vice-Presidents.

W. C. Mikel, Belleville, Secretary.

G. C. Campbell, Toronto, Treasurer.

A general meeting has been called for Christmas week. An executive of 16 members will be appointed later, and they, with the officers, will form a council which will meet on October 19.

Dr. Boyce Gets It.

HAS BEEN APPOINTED MEDICAL ATTENDANT AT THE INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.

Dr. W. W. Boyce, of this city, will succeed Dr. P. D. Goldsmith as physician at the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb. This morning Dr. Boyce received from Hon. Dr. Pyne the official document, which conveyed to him the information that he had received the appointment. The doctor will commence his duties on Monday next, the 1st day of October.

Rev. W. B. Heeney Visited Belleville.

Rev. W. B. Heeney, formerly Rector of Christ Church, this city, now of Newport, R.I., arrived in Belleville last night and stayed until noon to-day. Last evening, at the residence of Miss Ockerman, Everett St., the Rev. gentleman met many of his former parishioners and friends, who were delighted at the opportunity of once again shaking hands with a gentleman who was so deservedly popular while in this city. Rev. Mr. Heeney looks very well, indeed. He said that Mrs. Heeney and Master Arnold were also well. Asked how he liked his present charge, he said "Very much, indeed." Then added, with a characteristic smile: "Everything but the flag, you know." And that sentence conveyed a whole lot. Christ Church's former Rector is an ardent lover of British institutions, and can never forget the good old Union Jack, under which he was born. He looks forward to, before long, returning to Canada. He has had three or four calls from churches in this country, he said, but did not feel like accepting till one came which he felt sure was meant for his life's work. In the meantime, he always looked back with keen pleasure to his residence in Belleville. And Belleville people who met him will always have a kindly feeling towards the gifted and earnest young Christian gentleman who so ably filled the pulpit of Christ Church.

At Sign of the Scales.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT.

Wilfrid Wood was charged with disorderly conduct. It was alleged that he was about Mrs. Gilbert Scains' premises and acted rather boisterously. He pleaded guilty and a fine of $3 or 10 days in jail was imposed. The fine was promptly paid.

Board of Health Settles Two Matters

A meeting of the Board of Health was held yesterday afternoon in the quarters above the meat market. The object of the meeting was to consider two matters, namely, the complaint in reference to refuse from the Canning Factory on Pinnacle street, and also the gully just north of St. Thomas' Church.

The members of the Board who were present visited the Canning Factory premises and inspected them. After some consultation between the members and those who are connected with the establishment, a satisfactory settlement of the alleged nuisance was arrived at. The drain will be so fixed that the refuse will be taken away, so that no nuisance will exist.

In reference to the gully near St. Thomas' Church, that is being filled in in a manner which will be satisfactory to the Board and all concerned.

City Water In Demand

In the city water department the past summer has been an exceptionally busy one, and in consequence a considerable increase to the city's revenue will result. Nearly 70 new services have already been put in, and before the cold weather is upon us a few more will be added.

Napanee Inquest Was Adjourned.

AND WILL BE CONCLUDED THIS EVENING — THE EVIDENCE SO FAR.

Napanee, Sept. 26.—The adjourned inquest to enquire into the cause of the collision on the G.T.R., on Friday morning, September 21, and the death of Engineer Frank Blaine, was continued, Monday evening, in the town hall, Coroner Cowan conducting.

A. Giroux, night operator at the G.T.R., was on duty on the night in question, and gave the trains their orders. Train No. 2, from the west was reported twenty minutes late at Belleville, and No. 5, following the freight train from the east, was reported thirty minutes late at Kingston.

Conductor Mahon, in charge of the freight train, had a train of fifty-three cars to put on a siding at Napanee, and to let No. 2 pass, which were his orders. Conductor Mahon, on coming into Napanee, ascertained the position of the trains and proceeded to put his train on the siding. It being heavy and cumbersome, he discovered he had to cut his train, and advanced on to the main line and sent his head brakesman forward to flag the approaching east-bound No. 2 train. Owing to a heavy fog lying low, the engineer of No. 2 did not observe either the signal from the brakeman or the semaphores set against him until he was right in the collision. So far as signalling the approaching train from the west, the semaphores were set against them.

The inquest adjourned at eleven o'clock, to meet again on Friday evening to conclude the examination.

WESTMINSTER CHOIR BOYS.

"The smallest boy soprano in the world, and the possessor of the sweetest voice," says the Montreal Gazette of Albert Hole, the principal boy soloist with Mr. Edward Branscombe's Westminster Abbey Glee and Concert Party, who will be at the opera house on Monday, Oct. 1. He is only nine years old and about three feet six inches high, but sings like an angel. Quite a feature of the programme is the selection of nursery rhymes, sung by the boys and accompanied by the composer, Mr. Sterndale Bennett, who is with the party. Plan open at Riggs' music store to-day.

Rev. J. C. Ash Kept Out.

The Methodist general conference declined to consider the application of Rev. J. C. Ash, formerly of the Bay of Quinte conference, that he be again placed on the list of active ministers. Mr. Ash was retired from service on a certain charge, and he carried his case to the church court of appeal, and later to the High Court of Justice, Toronto. He failed in every court, civil and religious. The conference declined to reopen the case.

Golf This Afternoon.

A golf match is in progress this afternoon, on the grounds in the eastern part of this city, between the Picton and Belleville clubs. Fifteen members of the Picton club were to-day entertained to luncheon at Hotel Quinte by the Belleville Golf Club.

ARMED MEN RAID TOWN.

Place Mayor, Chief of Police and Other Officials In Jail.

Houston, Texas, Sept. 28.—A telephone message from Jiminiez, up the Rio Grande River, states that forty armed men raided the town Wednesday night, placed the mayor, chief of police, treasurer and other city officials in jail, and are now in control.

The telephone wires were cut before the message was finished. Government troops are hastening to Jiminiez. Advices of a battle are expected at any hour.

A courier just arrived says that the revolutionists and a force from Ciudad Portifio Diaz clashed Wednesday night at Victoria, about five miles south from Jiminiez, that one ranger was killed, and that the revolutionists left several dead. They scattered and are being pursued by Mexican troops. Jiminiez is now in possession of the latter. The affair is regarded here as possessing but little of a revolutionary or political character.

Battle With Rebels.

Elpaso, Tex., Sept. 28.—An Eagle Pass special says: A Government force of 75 cavalrymen encountered 40 self-styled revolutionists 30 miles above here and dispersed them, killing two. One hundred more soldiers are coming from Monterey.

STEAMER MAUDE SUNK.

Steamer Ottawan Strikes Her and Three Are Drowned.

Hudson, Que., Sept. 28.—One of the worst accidents in the history of navigation on the Ottawa occurred opposite here early yesterday morning. The steamer Ottawan up-bound collided with the steamer Maude, going in the opposite direction, smashing in the latter right up to the wheel-house.

The Maude sunk immediately, her top deck only remaining above water. Capt. Gauthier called the alarm to all hands on board, but nevertheless three were drowned.

Miss Benson of Oka, ladies' maid, the engineer and a Mr. Barrett, a drover, lost their lives.

The amount stolen reaches $25,000, half of which is covered by a guarantee bond.

Cather is believed to be in New York.

Provincial Board of Health.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—Ontario again rejoices in a Provincial Board of Health. There has been a board since Aug. 21, but without any membership. After the Council meeting yesterday afternoon, Provincial Secretary Hanna announced that the vacancies were filled by the following appointments:

Dr. Chas. Sheard, M.H.O., Toronto.

Dr. Milton Ira Beeman of Newburgh.

Dr. Charles Bernard Coughlin of Peterboro.

Dr. William J. Robinson, of Guelph.

Dr. William Robert Hall of Chatham.

Dr. Hodgetts will still continue as secretary.

Grain Man's Suggestion.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—The erection at grain inspection points in Ontario of transfer elevators as a means of solving the problems of shortages in weights, the cost to be borne by the Government or the railways, was a proposition placed before the Government Grain Commission yesterday afternoon by J. E. Hanna of Toronto. The statement was frankly made by Mr. Campbell that he at times resorted to the practice of mixing Ontario wheat being sent to Montreal for export, but always with the cognizance of his chief.

Hamilton's Street Railway.

Hamilton, Sept. 28.—Before the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board yesterday George C. Diehl, consulting engineer of Buffalo, N. Y., testified that the roadbed of the street railway here was distinctly dangerous, and that the equipment was anything but up to date. Fred. D. Gatchell, superintendent Gulf Port Railway, in Louisiana, corroborated the testimony of Mr. Diehl. He said, too, that the cars generally were filthy. The board will consider what shall be done.

Not For Imported Meat.

Washington, Sept. 28.—The United States Secretary of Agriculture has received from the Attorney-General the text of an opinion rendered by the latter, answering in the negative as to whether or not the new meat inspection law applied to meat products imported into the United States from foreign countries.

East Elgin Nominations.

St. Thomas, Sept. 28.—David Marshall, Conservative, and Granville Haight, Liberal, were yesterday at Aylmer placed in nomination to contest East Elgin Oct. 4, for the vacancy in the Dominion Parliament, caused by the appointment of A. B. Ingram to the Provincial Railway and Municipal Board.

Methodist Conference on Sociological Questions—Urge Christians to Take Up the Master's Whip and Drive the Money-Changers From the Temple —Favor Legislation to Prevent Individuals or Corporations From Profiting From Unearned Increment.

Montreal, Que., Sept. 28.—After an arduous day's consideration ob about a dozen committee reports the Methodist general conference was closed last night with the usual devotional exercises, the session being the twenty-seventh.

The many topics dealt with were of a varied nature, but as far as possible were carefully discussed. There were 72 votes in one division during the afternoon, representing the average attendance yesterday.

Marriage of Divorcee.

Deliverence by the church on the marriage of divorced persons was submitted but was referred to the committee for improvement. The conference regarded the law of the land as authorizing, but not requiring a minister to solemnize marriage. "Divorce for other than Scriptural reasons" was not considered rigid enough as many old testament reasons were not admissable. To say so raised the question which Dr. Carman feared would unsettle many minds.

Dr. Benson considered the deliverance necessary, but wondered if ministers ought to go behind the license issued by the proper authority.

It was resolved that no Methodist minister should solemnize a marriage of a divorced person unless the divorce be granted on the ground indicated by Jesus, and that the persons be not the guilty party.

Ministers In Business.

There was no discussion Wednesday night on the resolution regarding the commercial relations of ministers, but the question came up yesterday morning. No minister or probationer shall engage in any secular business or work which shall detract from his ministerial character or usefulness, or interfere with the proper discharge of the duties assigned him by the church, and it shall be due the minister having knowledge or reliable information of such an offence to lay a charge with the proper authorities.

This amendment to discipline, submitted by the committee, was rejected after some debate. This discipline "strongly recommends" ministers not to become members of the secular board of any trading company.

Dr. Young moved in amendment that ministers shall not become members of such boards and this was also rejected.

Rev. H. Irwin was against legislation treating men as children.

Dr. Williamson did not think the judgment of the world would be with them for expelling a minister because he was a director of a reputable insurance company. Dr. Jackson strongly supported Dr. Young's amendment.

Money Madness.

The committee on sociology deplored evils which had their source in money madness which leads men to oppress the unfortunate and forget their obligations to the higher interests of society; also the massing of the largest proportion of the wealth of the country in the hands of a few.

A millionaire was defined as one who realized his harvest from a million lives while men of culture had the best fruit of the world. They should face their obligations accordingly. Hospitals and universities enrich the whole community, but such gifts do not make reparation, for wrongs perpetrated in the iniquitous acquisition of wealth. The blood of the oppressed will continue to cry to heaven, while the scale of wages is so low that our maidens have set before them the awful choice between hunger and dishonor. And young children are stunted in mind and body. It was time for Christian citizenship to take up the master's whip and drive these things from the holy places of civilization. The commercial rogue was a universal enemy. They deprecated opening the gates of the country to the criminal and those with hereditary taint.

Race Suicide Deplored.

"We view with alarm the diminishing birthrate in some sections of our population. It must be considered a great national evil that some of the best strains in our country are becoming extinct.

Legislation was recommended which would not interfere with vested rights, but would prevent individuals or corporations profiting from unearned increment.

It was recommended that sociological topics be discussed in young people's societies, and that lists of books be prepared with a view to placing such volumes in Sunday school and Epworth League libraries. That fellowship in sociological studies be established in churches and colleagues.

A resolution expressing advocacy of universal peace by the conference and belief in arbitration in the settlement of international disputes and approving recommendation of interparliamentary union to The Hague peace conference was adopted. It will be forwarded to the second Hague conference through the Canadian representative.

Uniformity of Service.

Uniform services were strongly pleaded for by Rev. A. K. Birks. The same order should be observed everywhere in Canada, he thought, but there were loud cries of dissent.

On Mr. Birks' motion, by a vote of 51 to 38, Methodists will have to stand with bowed heads in silent prayer at the close of all services hereafter.

"I was brought up a Presbyterian," said a minister who voted for it.

"It is altogether more seemly," remarked Rev. Dr. Burns.

The reports on temperance and Sabbath observance were adopted. Dr. Levi Curtis objected to the latter speaking of Christ as the world's elder brother. The phrase was changed to world's saviour.

Do Your Meals Fit?

DO YOU FEEL SNUG AND COMFORTABLE AROUND YOUR WAIST LINE AFTER A HEARTY MEAL?

Did your last meal taste deliciously good to you, and did you eat all you wanted? Could you have patted your rotundity in glee and felt proud of your appetite and of your good, strong stomach? Do you feel rosy now because your last meal gave you no inconvenience whatever? If not, you have dyspepsia in some form, and probably never realized it.

If you have the least trouble in your stomach after eating, no matter how little or how much you eat, there is trouble brewing and you must correct it at once.

Most all stomach troubles come from poor, weak, scanty gastric juice, that precious liquid which ought to turn your food into rich, red blood.

If you have nausea, your gastric juice is weak. If you have sour risings or belchings, your food is fermenting; your gastric juice is weak. If you have loss of appetite, your gastric juice is weak. If you have a bloaty feeling of aversion to food your gastric juice is weak.

You need something in your stomach to supply the gastric juice which is scanty, and to give power to the weak gastric juice. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do this very thing.

Now think—one grain of one of the ingredients of these wonderful little tablets digests 3,000 grains of food. They are several times more powerful than the gastric juice in a good, strong, powerful stomach. They actually digest your food for you. Besides, they increase the flow of gastric juice, just what you need to get all the good possible out of everything you eat. You will never have that "lump of lead" in your stomach, nor any other stomach trouble after taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Then everything you eat will be digested, it will give you strength, vim, energy and a rosy disposition. You'll feel good all around your waist line after every meal and it will make you feel good all over.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will make you feel happy after eating a good, hearty meal. Take one or two after eating. You'll feel fine—then your meals will fit, no matter what or when you eat.

We want to send you a sample package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets free of charge, so you can test them yourself and be convinced. After you have tried the sample, you will be so satisfied that you will go to the nearest drug store and get a 50c box.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 52 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

VICTIM OF WABASH WRECK.

Mrs. Waldman, of Guelph, Succumbs to Her Injuries.

Guelph, Sept. 28.—A telegram was received yesterday afternoon conveying the sad intelligence that Mrs. Henry Waldman succumbed to injuries received in the wreck of the Buffalo mail on the Wabash Railway at Catlin, Ill.

Her three children, who were severely burned, are getting along nicely. Mr. Waldman left by C. P. R. on Wednesday evening for Danville and reached there at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, about five hours after his wife had passed away in St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

Brakeman's Condition Critical.

Guelph, Sept. 28.—Engineer Reed, who was injured in Saturday's G. T. R. wreck, is doing nicely, but Brakeman Andrews was somewhat worse yesterday and the physician stated that his condition was critical.

Falls Into Threshing Feeder.

London, Sept. 28.—A Lobo Township farmer named Godfrey Harrison had a narrow escape from being cut to pieces in the feeder attachment of a threshing machine Wednesday evening. Harrison was assisting at threshing on his father's farm, and was walking on a plank above the machine, when the board broke. He fell into the feeder, and before he freed himself he was severely gashed on the back. It is expected he will recover.

Accidentally Asphyxiated.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—Donald Ross, an aged man, who arrived Wednesday night at the Walker House, from Forest, Ont., was found dead in his room yesterday morning. The gas had evidently been turned on, and Coroner Cotton decided an inquest unnecessary.

Appeals to Premiers.

Winnipeg, Sept. 28.—The Board of Trade will make representation to the conference of Provincial Premiers that there be a Dominion registration of professions, and the abolition of the present laws calculated to restrict or embarrass inter-provincial trade.

Bigamist Sent For Trial.

St. Catharines, Sept. 28.—George Gough, who was arrested on a charge of bigamy on Monday, was yesterday committed for trial by Police Magistrate Comfort. Both wives were present and testified.

Wabash Strike Ends.

St. Louis, Sept. 28.—The strike of the Wabash Railroad Boilermakers, Machinists and Blacksmiths was terminated yesterday by the granting of an increase in wages.

Murderer Insane.

Lindsay, Sept. 28.—The Carlen murder case was finished at the Assizes here Wednesday, when the jury returned a verdict of insanity.

James Bay Railway, Oct. 10.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—The James Bay Railway will inaugurate its service between Toronto and Parry Sound on Wednesday, Oct. 10.

TANGLES OF THE W.O.W.

Secretary Fitzgerald Before Insurance Commission.

Could Not Explain Differences In Certain Accounts and Financial Statements, But Promised to Do So Later —Surplus of $157,254.22, But Unchecked—Commission's Accountant Could Not Arrive at Proper Result From Books—Sir John Boyd Again.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—The Insurance Commission proceedings yesterday were tame. In connection with the Woodmen of the World, a society with head offices at London, W. C. Fitzgerald, secretary and organizer, was in the box all day.

Sir John Boyd Again.

When the Commission opened Sir John Boyd was present and made a statement, supplementing his evidence of the day before. He said he had not in any way endorsed the proposition that the syndicate composed of Messrs. McGillivray, Foster and Wilson, having put nothing into the transaction, should receive $95,000 profit on the turn-over of the Pope-Fowler lands, and afterwards share in the profits of the sale of the land. His understanding all along was that they were paying their proper share of the concern, and their right to get profits would be only based on the money they put in out of their own pockets. The idea was never communicated to him that the trust company should advance the whole money and that gentlemen who put nothing in should reap the profits. That was a transaction he could not have sanctioned in any shape or form.

The Woodmen Under Scrutiny.

Mr. Tilley then took up the work of the Woodmen.

Mr. Fitzgerald stated that a set of books had been opened up in compliance with the orders of the Commission, and he explained the system upon which the order was conducted.

Statutory meetings are held in odd numbered years, and the legislation of the order is carried through at meetings held in even numbered years. When the Grand Camp is not in session the power is vested in the grand executive.

Mr. Tilley took up the constitution. It was found that any action of claim against the order must be brought within a year. The various funds were banked. The expense account had an overdraft of $4,000 at the present time, for which there is a note bearing interest at five per cent. There was $30,000 on deposit, getting interest at three per cent. at the time the money was borrowed for the expense account.

Something to Explain.

At the afternoon session Mr. Tilley dissected the ledger that was inaugurated since the meeting of the Commission in London. Various accounts and the financial statements were gone into, but Mr. Fitzgerald could not explain certain differences. He characterized them as being perfectly correct and promised to explain them later.

In the annual returns the surplus on hand was shown to be $157,254.22, but this item was arrived at by simply subtracting the liabilities from the assets. There was no account kept to check these items.

Mr. Fitzgerald could not explain the accounts, giving as his excuse that he did not make them up. A Mr. Eastwood had helped the officials of the order straighten out the books since the Commission met.

Proper Result Impossible.

George Eastwood, accountant, who had been sent to London by the commission to investigate the affairs, made a statement. He found an excellent system of keeping the cash book, but no accounts where all monies invested were shown. A proper result could not be arrived at, and Mr. Fitzgerald undertook to place the accounts in proper shape and proceed with the bookkeeping along proper lines.

Witness communicated with Mr. Fitzgerald for statements concerning the progress of the work, but when the books arrived yesterday he had discovered that the statements sent did not correspond with the books. To be able to get at an effective result, witness must know where every dollar of receipts and disbursements come from and went to. It was impossible to get at the aggregate investments if only isolated accounts were shown.

To Mr. Langmuir witness said that a cash balance had been brought down, but he did not know how it was arrived at.

One Loan to Officials.

Mr. Fitzgerald took the box again.

There had been but one loan to officials of the company. T. H. Luscombe, K. C., had been advanced $4,500 on real property worth $7,000. Special deposits in the bank were treated in the return as investments.

Special assessments were made on the members of the order at the time of the Boer war to cover any death losses. Some of the members refused to pay this and were immediately suspended. This action was put through on a resolution of the head camp and under no special bylaw.

Mr. Tilley probed the expense account and found a shortage of $90,000 against that account. He put in a statement showing the premium rates as compared with other companies.

Mr. Fitzgerald admitted that the rates of the order were too low. There was no idea as to the liability on outstanding policies of the society and hence no estimate of a proper reserve ever been made. As long as the members kept coming in there was no necessity of arriving at these facts, according to witness.

Mr. Shepley received certain actuarial statements.

Ontario Bar Association.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—Representatives from the County Law Library Association and members of the Bar generally met at Osgoode Hall last night and formed the Ontario Bar Association. The objects, constitution and election of officers will be the subjects of discussion when the meeting resumes at 10 this morning.

PROVINCE VS. DOMINION.

Suit re School Trust Funds to Be Heard Next Week.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—The appeal of the province in the case against the Dominion, in connection with the school trust funds and the counter-appeal by the Dominion, has been set for hearing by the supreme court at Ottawa on Oct. 2.

Justice Burbidge's decision, given some time ago, permitted the Dominion to pay off the capital sum to which the province objects. The rate of interest, which the Dominion reduced from 5 to 4 per cent., he ruled could not be altered.

The funds amount to $1,909,845, consisting of the grammar school, the Upper Canada College Building and U. C. C. improvement funds.

Fair Building Burned.

Bradford, Sept. 29.—At four o'clock yesterday morning fire destroyed the large exhibition building and grand stand owned by the Bradford Agricultural Society. John Hill lost about a thousand dollars worth of sleighs and cutters on which he had $400 insurance. It is generally supposed that tramps set the building on fire. The loss to the society will be $2,000 with $500 insurance.

Mr. Taft Now Rules In Cuba.

Its First Republic Dies With Palma's Resignation.

After Day of Waiting President Palma Tearfully Announces His Irrevocable Determination to Resign —Moderates Declare Palma Only Man to Save Cuba and He Failed – Spirit Of Apathy Ruled In Congress.

Havana, Sept. 29.—It is certain that American intervention will take place to-day. Twenty-five United States marines were landed here last night to guard the treasury building.

Secretary Taft's proclamation creating himself provisional military governor of Cuba will be issued to-day.

A further force of Americans will be landed to-day.

Last night the city was policed by rural guards. Gen. Rodriguez, commander of the rural guards, is co-operating with Secretary Taft.

Palma Tearfully Resigns.

Up to the time that congress took a recess at 5 o'clock yesterday was a day of waiting. After that hour various probabilities became certainties.

By 5.30 President Palma had tearfully but definitely and firmly announced that his resignation was irrevocable. Following this announcement, the Moderates held a long consultation at the residence of Senator Dolz, president of the Senate, at which it was decided that no Moderate should return to the session after the recess which had been declared, thus precipitating a condition in which no provisional president could be elected.

This throwing up of their hands, practically, would give over the control of affairs to the American commissioners.

Taft Waiting.

Up to that point the attitude of the commissioners also had been a waiting one. Secretary Taft said, on leaving last night for dinner, that he then was in a position where he could not say anything for publication.

In the Congress an impassioned debate followed the reading of President Palma's resignation, during which it was declared that Palma was the only man to whom the republic could look for salvation.

A vote on the right of Congress to appeal to Palma to reconsider his resignation resulted in 47 ayes and 12 nays.

The House then took a recess until 3 p. m. to permit the Moderates and the Liberal Nationalists to visit Palma. The President was much affected and listened intently to Senator Dolz, who after explaining his errand, said:

"This is no hour for oratory or tears or words other than spring from the hearts of patriots. We beg you to consider our desires. We do not forget all the sorrows and afflictions which you have endured during the past few days, but in so much as your retaining the Presidency is so necessary to the salvation of the country and its independence, we earnestly beg that you will reconsider your determination."

Palma's Tearful Reply.

Palma, who listened with tears in his eyes, replied:

"I would never have hesitated to make any sacrifice asked for by my country, whose liberty I fought for during forty years exposing my life and wrecking my fortune. But you ask me to sacrifice my personal dignity, and that of the Government of the republic, now imperilled by armed forces, without any prospects of a practical result ensuring peace and the stability of the nation. If I could see that the sacrifice of my personal and official dignity meant peace and stability and rightful liberty, you could count on my compliance to that extent. But since my authority has been curtailed by armed force, and as I have been notified that I am occupying my position by fraud, I beg you not to insist in asking me to withdraw my resignation, which has been presented to Congress, and which represents my irrevocable resolution."

Senor Dolz declared that the Moderates would not press the request, and embraced President Palma. The President and several others wept freely, and the delegates in turn grasped Senor Palma's hand and withdrew.

Woman Burns to Death.

Owen Sound, Sept. 29.—Word has been received of the death of Mrs. Anne Irvin in the burning of her cottage on the 4th line of Sullivan, twelve miles from Owen Sound, where she lived alone, early Wednesday morning. The fire was not noticed by the neighbors, and the charred skull and a few bones were all the remains that were found among the ruins the next morning. Mrs. Irvin was over 80 years of age, and her husband died about 15 years ago.

Escape In Night Clothes.

Peterboro, Sept. 29.—The residence of William Kemp, was destroyed by fire Thursday night. Mr. Kemp, who is over 80 years of age, and his aged wife, had a narrow escape, getting out in their night clothes. The origin of the blaze is a mystery. The loss is $2,000; insured.

TO BUY VOTERS.

John O'Gorman Arrested on Charge of Conspiracy — Seven Warrants Out for Others for Bribing Electors.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—There was a veritable bomb exploded yesterday in political circles when John O'Gorman of the Munro Commission Co., this city, but formerly of London, was arrested on a warrant charging him with conspiracy to bribe in the London bye-election of last year. He appeared in Police Court and an immediate hearing of the case was begun, evidence being given by John Collins, an ex-hotelkeeper of London.

As a further result of Collins' revelations warrants were last night made out calling for the apprehension of seven others, two of them being leading citizens of London. At midnight the chief of police at London declined to say whether the informations had reached him.

Warrants Out For Seven Others.

The seven who are accused of having assisted in the wholesale bribery of voters are:

George Reed, of Reed Bros., manufacturers of ledgers and blank books.

Ed. I. Sifton, manager of the Electrical Construction Co.

Dan Wiley of the customs service.

Wm. J. Mulloy, an ex-hotelkeeper.

Wm. Serviss, a carpenter.

Jos. Hardy, now on his way home from Manitoba, and George Ardy.

The warrant was placed in Provincial Detective Rogers' hands for execution, and O'Gorman was taken at once to the Police Court. He declined to plead or elect. Mr. Robinette appeared for him, and protested that the case should be heard in London, but evidence was taken and the case will be continued on Tuesday.

JAPS RAID SEAL FISHERIES.

Harvesting a Big Catch While Victoria Fleet Has Poor Luck.

Victoria, B. C., Sept. 29.—Promiscuous raiding by Japanese sealers on and close to the Islands of the Behring Sea is reported by the schooner City of San Diego, which returned to port yesterday, the first of the homeward procession of pelagic sealers.

Capt. Folger asserts that 25 Japanese schooners are harvesting a big catch, shooting indiscriminately close to the islands, while the Victoria fleet, compelled to remain 20 leagues off shore, has had poor luck.

The Eva Marie, Umbrina and Casco are head liners, each with over 700. The Casco also has twelve sea otter, and the City of San Diego one.

Capt. Folger says numerous Japanese schooners are armed with quick firing guns, with which they have boldly bombarded the huts of the rookery guards while raiding. Twenty Japanese, including one captain, have been killed this season, and fully as many Russians.

COST OF POWER COMMISSION.

Municipal Enterprise Expenditure Totals Over $16,000.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—Expenditures by the Ontario Municipal Power Commission (not to be confused with the hydro-electric commission) have amounted to $16,084.07.

The seven cities participating in the scheme are dividing the cost, as follows: Toronto, $11,756; London, $1,542; Brantford, $663; Stratford, $342; Guelph, $326; Woodstock, $242; Ingersoll, $124. The publication of the report cost $712.50 in addition to which Toronto pays $375.

For engineering work, Ross & Holgate got $7,750 of the sum named; John Mackay, actuarial work, $2,750; R. C. Fessenden, engineer, $750; Hon. S. H. Blake, K. C., and D. E. Thompson, K. C., $632.

CITY OF BELLEVILLE

TREASURER'S SALE OF LANDS IN ARREARS FOR TAXES.

City of Belleville, Province of Ontario, To Wit;

By virtue of a warrant issued by the Mayor under the Corporate Seal of the City of Belleville, to me directed, bearing date the twenty-eighth day of August, 1906, commanding me to levy upon the lands in arrears for taxes, with the costs. Said list of lands for sale in the municipality for taxes has been prepared and copies may be had in my office, and the said advertisement empowering such list is being published in The ONTARIO GAZETTE on September 1st, 8th, 15th and 22nd, 1906.

I hereby give notice that unless such arrears and all costs are sooner paid I shall proceed to sell the said land, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the payment of the taxes and costs thereon, at the City Hall, in the said City of Belleville, on Tuesday, the 4th day of December, A.D. 1906, at the hour of eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

Fish and Game Protection

The following, from Hardware and Metal, shows what a purely commercial magazine, having no interest in sport or politics, thinks upon the matter of fish and game protection;

"A valuable and public spirited work is being done for all sections of the community by the Ontario Fish and Game Protective Association, of which Mr. A. Kelly Evans, of Toronto, is founder and secretary. To the hardware and grocery trades, however, the work is of particular interest, and where local associations are formed merchants can well afford to help along the movement to the extent of active membership at least. The platform of the association deals with many important interests and is worthy of considerable study.

"(a) That game, fish and game, through the attraction they form to tourists are a most valuable financial asset to the province and that therefore their protection should be encouraged.

"(b). That the food fish in our waters should be conserved and regulated for the good of the masses of the people and not wasted or used for the benefit of one small class of the community.

"(c) That certain game birds and song and insectivorous birds are an immensely valuable friend to the farmer in destroying harmful insect weeds, seeds, prodents, etc., and the lack of knowledge by the public on such subjects should be combatted steadily.

"(d). That the wild lands of the province suitable to game and the waters suitable to game fish should be ever kept the property of the public and that the association must always endeavor to prevent the acquisition by individuals or groups of individuals of large tracts of territory for the purpose of forming private game preserves.

"(c) That the association should have no connection with politics or any political party.

"Canada is favored in having splendid hunting grounds and fishing waters, and by wise regulation the supply of game and fish can be kept up and the tourist trade developed to a much greater extent that at present. In this tourist trade there is profit not only for the supply merchants in the larger cities, but also for the local merchants in the lake districts. One Toronto grocer issues an extensive catalogue and makes a large profit on its trade with campers, hunters and fishermen, while several, Toronto hardware and sporting goods dealers find their trade in fishing tackle and shooting materials one of the best paying branches of their business.

"The development and perpetuation of fish and game means an increased population in the summer resorts and remote districts where sport is most easily found. This means an increased consumption of canned goods, cereals and other foodstuffs, as well as additional hardware for the cabins and cottages erected. Extra labor will be required to erect these buildings and manufacture canoes, boats and launches for use in the rivers and lakes. Even the farmers will benefit by the increased demand for the products of the farms and factories.

"The proper regulation of the taking of food fish in our lakes by fishermen and fishing companies also has its interesting possibilities, and the association does well by including under its protective wing commercial fish and useful birds. Much educational work is possible pointing out the dangers of destroying such valuable friends of mankind, and the information given on these subjects in our public schools might be extended considerably to the advantage of both students and parents.

"In declaring for non-political action and in favor of conserving the public domain the association protects itself against being used by political wire-pullers, in addition to maintaining a principle which will win the appreciation of all citizens desiring to see Canada continue, as it now is, one of the happiest spots in which to enjoy life to be found on the world's map.'

To-day's Market

Despite the fact that the World's Fair at Shannonville was being held to-day, there was a good market. Prices, as usual, were high, butter sells at 30c per pound and eggs at 20c per dozen. Dressed poultry was offered for sale in considerable quantity, and the price was reasonable.

Our quotations are as follows;—
Eggs—19c to 20c doz.
Hay—$8 to $10 per ton.
Fall Wheat—68c to 70c.
Spring Wheat—75c.
Barley—45 to 48c.
Oats—36c.
Rye—56c.
Buckwheat—55c.
Timothy—$150.
Clover—$7 to $8.
Alsike—$4 to $6.
Butter—28c to 30c.
Dressed hogs—$8.50 to $9.00.
Dressed beef, fore—$4.00.
Dressed beef, hind—$5 to $5.50.
Chickens—60c to 80c per pair.
Butchers' trimmed hides—9 to 10c.
Rough hides—9c to 9 1-2c.
Spring Lamb—16c to 18c lb.
Mutton—6c to 7c.
Shearling—25 each.
Horse hides—$2.50 to $3.00 each.
Veal hides—10c lb.
Deakins—75c.
Pelts—85c to $1.00.
Tallow, rough—2 to 2 1-2c.

The slating having been completed on St. Michael's tower, and the scaffolding removed, people can now see how the steeple is going to add to the beauty of Belleville's Roman Catholic Church. When the work is completed, and the debris cleared away, one would travel many a mile before he saw a handsomer church than the one whose congregation is so ably and wisely presided over by Rev. Epicures describ ed it as a combined flavor of turnips and asparagus.

It seems that, between water and gas, somewhere in the neighborhood of two hundred new services have been put in this year. This is extremely surprising, for, judging by the way the streets are cut up, you'd think there were a thousand new services at least.

Let us be thankful that nowhere in Canada would it be possible for such a state of affairs to exist as is thus pictured by the Philadelphia Record; "The situation in Georgia is very far from being a laughing matter. It has not been a laughing matter for a good while. Atlanta abounds in cheap saloons, low dives, and "clubs" where worthless vagrants, the shame of the colored race of America, develop into criminals. Assaults upon white women have been increasing. No, it's not a joke."

SPORTING NOTES.

Prospects for good hockey in Belleville this winter, we are told, are excellent. The question of Belleville's admittance to the Federal league has not yet been settled, but in case admittance to that body is refused an intermediate O.H.A. team will be entered. It is said there are three cracking good players on the rolling mills staff, who will get their skates on and help any team along that is formed. There is, however, strong hopes of gaining admittance to the Federal, which would suit the sport-lovers of this city best.

"Silk" O'Loughlin, of Rochester, the former Eastern League umpire, and now with the American League, is again a candidate for State Senator from Rochester. What's more, "Silk" has a good chance.

Chaucer Elliott, now coaching the Argonaut Rugby team, has been appointed manager of next year's Oswego ball team, in the Empire State League. Chaucer is as yet undecided as to whether he will referee hockey games. The Eastern League is dickering for his services, and the professionals also want him again.

Toronto Star: "Chaucer Elliott claims that he is only 27, but refuses to produce his birth certificate." Perhaps Chaucer was born in some leap year, on February 29.

Messrs. S. Clarke and S. E. Lennox yesterday had excellent sport bass fishing on the bay. The former captured a beauty which tipped the scales at four pounds.

Going After Gold Buried In 1812.

(Thousand Islands Sun.)

A party of four men, surveying the inlets and creeks of Chippewa recently, have left for parts unknown. Where they came from is equally as mysterious as their departure, and according to the inhabitants near the Point their actions and movements while in that vicinity, created lively interest and widespread comment. Many believed that they were treasure hunters and were trying to locate the alleged hidden treasure which tradition credits with being buried somewhere around Chippewa. Anyway, the old story is revived of the English paymaster, who was murdered near there during the war of 1812, and many believe that was the object of the searchers.

Again others contend that they comprised a government survey party for the purpose of widening Chippewa Bay proper, and still others expressed themselves as content in the belief that the mysterious visitors were nothing more than a party of fishermen locating a prize spot for fishing.

However, the most accepted theory seems to credit the English paymaster story as the most plausible as two visits were paid and the same precise movements gone through.

That the treasure is hidden somewhere among the numerous creeks and inlets bordering the bay, is borne out by several of the oldest inhabitants. They state that the story of the English paymaster's chest is as old as the hills, and that many conflicting stories were once freely circulated dealing with the matter in a serious light, but inability to locate the treasure placed a damper on the probability of its existence, and since 1896 no effort has been made to discover the whereabouts of the English sovereigns.

The story has been rehearsed so many times, that nearly every resident along the river can recall it word by word, and many of the oldest settlers believe it is no myth, but a reality, and say that history will bear them out in regard to it.

To have four strangers prowling about during the day and sometimes at night with lanterns, set the entire population of Chippewa Bay into a restless fever of excitement, eventually developing into a frenzied scramble of discovery.

Joseph Senecal, the most widely known fisher guide on the river, declares that the treasure really exists, and has made many futile attempts himself to locate it.

What Part ?

What particular part of the nerve-centres should we expect to have the greatest influence in affecting and controlling the general nervous system?

Reasonably it would be the largest and most sensitive. Well now, of all the centres in the nervous system, the largest most delicate sense, the sense most constantly in use, the largest brain "gray-matter" area is that of SIGHT.

For an average of 16 hours daily continuously, the feeling in the visual centres is constant. No other sense in the nerve centres is capable of such continued endurance. With the proper glasses this severe drain upon the brain and nerves is prevented from causing a breakdown in the general health.

KEEPING UP AN ANCIENT CUSTOM

THE DUNMOW FLITCH OF BACON, ITS AWARD AND WHAT IT SIGNIFIES.

Are the ancient glories of Dunmow Flitch really passing? Is the merit of unclouded martial felicity throughout 365 days no longer recognized by a hard and wicked world? Are we no longer interested to know what happy couple is to benefit by the quaint provisions of the offer by the jovial Prior of Dunmow in the pre-Reformation days? are the questions asked by a London paper.

These sad reflections are prompted by the announcement, brutal in its brevity, that "a beauty show and a baby show will also be held." As if the proud bride who could claim never to have nagged, never grumbled, gained an unfair advantage in discussion by bursting into tears were not beauty enough in herself! "Eheu fugaces," as somebody once said apropos of something else.

But the said fact remains. The Court of Love sat at Dunmow and judged Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Willey, of Bow, and Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Morgan, of Bristol, worthy of the flitch that the old Prior offered in the days before Bluff Harry swept monasteries into the limbo of forgotten things. And then a beauty show and a baby show were held.

The Judge looked very impartial and the counsel very learned, despite the little drops of perspiration that trickled down from the full-bottomed wigs to the tip of the nose. The jury, composed of six maidens and six bachelors of the town, tried to look as if "good men and true." And the audience sat on its stools and its wooden benches and rocked with laughter at every sally, for all the world as if the ancient and honorable Flitch Court were a domain of a metropolitan police magistrate.

It was when the counsel for the donors of the bacon came to cross-examine Mrs. Morgan, however, that the fun waxed fast and furious. Counsel for the bacon was quite a wag, and though not a lawyer by profession, succeeded in getting all the other witnesses in a muddle with their evidence in quite professional style. But Mrs. Morgan was too good for him. She admitted having musical tastes, and when asked her favorite key replied "B natural," which was capped by the Judge remarking that could also be sharp on occasion.

Counsel for the bacon wanted to know if choir practice in the house was not sometimes disquieting (the court groaned; for the children.

"Oh, a little," said Mrs. Morgan, 'but if the children wake my husband soon runs upstairs to look after them'

The married men in court laughed.

In summing up the Morgans' case, the Judge said he had listened very carefully to the evidence to see if there were any difference of opinion between the plaintiffs on the subject of politics. So far as he could see, Mrs. Morgan believed in Home Rule, and Mr. Morgan gave her all the Protection a husband ought to. He would leave it to the jury to decide, which they quickly did, in favor of the plaintiffs in each case.

A procession was then formed from the Court House to the public stage in the middle of the grounds, the bacon leading the way on the shoulders of eight lusty Essex men in smock frocks. On the stage the two couples knelt down on rough hewn stones and took the historic oath that they had—

In a twelvemonth and a day
Repented not in thought anyway,
Or since the Parish Clerk said 'Amen'
Wished yourselves unmarried again.

After which the Judge gave sentence;

A whole flitch of bacon you shall receive,
And bear it away with love and good leave,
For this is the custom at Dunmow well known,
Though the pleasure be ours, the bacon's your own.

That done, the couples were chaired round the field, while the crowd cheered, and the steam organ of the merry-go-round played the most inappropriate item in its extensive repertoire—"Bill Bailey."

Literary Notes.

COLONIAL POETRY.

A discussion is now occurring between some English and some Canadian papers as to the quality of colonial poetry as compared with that of the Homeland. Some London critics are inclined to pooh-hoo colonial poetry, as lacking in strength and grace. In the October Canadian Magazine there are four excellent poetical contributions. Three of these are by women who have already published volumes—(Mrs.) Elizabeth R. Macdonald, who is a sister of Chas. G. D. Roberts; (Mrs.) Isabel E. Mackay and (Mrs.) Evelyn Gunne. The latter's volume has just appeared. The fourth is by a new British Columbia poet, George E. Winkler. All four poems are worthy of the honor which the editor of The Canadian Magazine has paid them. This publication makes a specialty of native verse, and the quality of the material which it uses is an indication that the crop of meritorious colonial verse has not yet been entirely harvested.

A HUNTING NUMBER.

"Rod and Gun" for October is an enlarged number, for the hunters. There is a round dozen of stories dealing with hunting, giving actual experiences and adventures in Canadian woods. "Scientific Deer Hunting," by Dr. Franklin Hawley, should be read by everyone who goes to the woods. There are also fishing stories and others concerning out-door life, the illustrated accounts of the qualification climb for membership of the Alpine Club of Canada, and of the first convention of the Ontario Fish and Game Protective Association, testify to the value of the magazine as the representative of Canadian sporting interests.

LOST AND FOUND.

In England 10 Per Cent Is the Recognized Reward.

"If you lost a watch worth $100 what reward would you give the finder for its return?"

"Oh, ten or twelve dollars."

"Ten per cent, eh? Well, that is about right," said the detective. "It is more, though, than the average person would give. Here in America in lost and found cases there is no recognized percentage of reward, but in England there is such a percentage, namely, half a crown to a pound; that is to say, about 10 per cent. Ten per cent is what the finder must be paid in England provided he takes his find to a police station or to Scotland Yard. He always does so, as otherwise the owner is apt to give him less than the legal 10 per cent. I lost in a London cab a kit bag worth $20. The kit bag was returned by the cabby to Scotland Yard and I left there for him gladly a reward of $2. If the bag had been worth $2,000 I'd have been charier of handing out $200, but that is what I'd have to do before the Scotland Yard folks would have given me my property. When you lose anything be prepared to give at least 10 per cent to the finder. Ten per cent is the recognized reward in lost and found cases abroad, and it should be the recognized reward here. To my mind it is little enough, and they who give less are to my mind dishonest."

THE GAME OF CHESS.

Finest Mental Drillmaster the World Has Ever Known.

When the Romans placed over the door of the temple of Janus "Ex Oriente Lux et Ludus Scacchorum" (Out of the East Came Light and the Game of Chess) they spoke of the two greatest bequests that the storied east had ever made to the young and aggressive west—the light of religion and the greatest mental achievement of man since he came through Eden's frowning portals.

In the middle ages, when the monks and abbots watched from afar the brutal soldiery of Christendom swooping down like a pestilence on the sunny plains of the south, they chanted "A furore Normanorum libera nos, O Domine" (From the fury of the Northmen deliver us, O God) and returned to chess—all that was left a noble soul in a vain and turbulent world.

Chess is the finest mental drillmaster the world has ever known. As a mind trainer it ranks above Greek and dialectics.

But, above all, it is the science of battle; it is war without bloodshed; it is strife on equal terms, which all the race loves and to which from the cradle to the grave all mortality is subject.

The Prim Dutch Girl.

The etiquette of Holland is exceedingly strict in all classes. The young girl is most carefully chaperoned, and she never goes anywhere, even to church, unless accompanied by her parents, some male relative or other equally trusted attendant. At a dance the parents sit round the walls sipping their coffee or wine, and the young men must make the best of their chances in the opportunities afforded by the dance, for when it pleases the guardians to depart there is no help for it, the girls must go too. An unmarried girl always takes the right arm of her escort, while the matron takes the left, perhaps because it is nearer the heart.

An Example.

One of the most intimate friends of M. Dumas fils was a retired naval officer who lived in a distant corner of Normandy. As soon as the author of "Camille" died the officer went over all the letters which he had received from Dumas and destroyed every one which referred to any private affairs of the author. Where letters also contained literary and philosophical discussions he carefully blotted out the personal parts in order that nothing of a personal nature might ever reach a publisher. This is an example not often followed.

Avoiding the Doctor.

Dr. Sanderson, an old Scotch physician, was a queer character, but a clever doctor.

So roughly did he handle his patients that the ignorant were chiefly anxious to escape him. The story goes that as he was passing along the street one day a sweep rolled from the top to the bottom of a staircase outside one of the houses.

"Are you hurt?' called the doctor, running forward.

"Not a bit, doctor—not a bit," replied the man in haste. "Indeed, I feel a' the better."

Helped His Ambition.

"Thank you, judge," said the prisoner sentenced to thirty days on bread and water.

Seeing that the magistrate was puzzled, he explained that he long had desired to try the simple life but lacked the courage to begin.

An Exception.

Mrs. Peagreen—Is 13 always an unlucky number?

Not when you hold all of the trumps in a game of whist.

A FORECAST FOR AUGUST.

St. Mary's Argus Has Clever Hit at Mr. Iri D. Hicks.

A good many of the country papers in Ontario make a feature of the weather forecasts of Mr. Iri D. Hicks, a United States weather prophet, and it is said that the farmers pay a good deal of attention to them. The Motherwell correspondent of The St. Mary's Argus has a happy hit at Mr. Hicks in this "Forecast for August":

"August first will begin this month. It will be composed of 31 days and a suitable number of nights, as made and provided by the Statutes of Ontario. August will begin business immediately on the expiration of July 31st. The 31 days may not be distinguished by anything very remarkable in the general management of the earth or sky—the planets being very quiet, many of them having gone on their holidays. No great convulsions in nature, or in the architecture of the world are expected—but might arrive by any mixed train. Any minor disturbances or convulsions likely to arise will be during the night, and will be traceable to over indulgence in green fruit. Inside information can be had from the victims. On the 4th two very important events will take place: The Perth Old Boys' Reunion will be held in Stratford and the moon will be full on that date. This is a happy coincidence. . . . However, the moon will be on its last quarter on the 11th, and will probably have to get some money from the Old Boys. August will be short on Sundays, there being only 4. We hope this will not happen again, as some of the other months have five. Church collections and bank robberies will be about the same as next August. Murders and suicides will be regulated and governed very much by the temperature and the cost of living. Picnics will be numerous toward the middle and both ends of the month. Summer visitors will be plentiful and hard to discourage, as the spare room is much warmer than in winter. . . . August will not work overtime, as it is the last of the summer season. Summer engagements will not be valid after the 31st. Locks of hair, diamonds and other tokens of affection should be returned not later than Sept. 1st, taken all through the month will be hot. Congregational meetings should be avoided as much as possible. It is generally conceded that one has more warm friends in August than in January."

Canada and South Africa.

Editorially discussing the proposed constitution of South Africa, The London Morning Post draws an analogy between Canada of seventy years ago and South Africa of to-day. It says that Lower Canada contained an overwhelming majority of French just as the Orange River Colony to-day is overwhelmingly Dutch. Upper Canada was British almost to a man and presents but a partial analogy to the Transvaal, where the margin in favor of the British is narrow at most.

As in the Transvaal to-day, so in Canada seventy years ago, the British were divided into two camps. In Canada the bureaucrats, who claimed the monopoly of colonial loyalty, favored the retention of representative Government merely as a device for the maintenance of British connection. These are compared by the joint authors of the articles to the progressive party in the Transvaal. On the other hand, to the reformers of Upper Canada are assigned much the same position as that occupied by the responsible Government party in its determination to win the way to constitutional freedom and were originally by no means averse to co-operation with the French in Lower Canada, just as the Responsibles of the Transvaal to-day are prepared to face a coalition with the Dutch in order to gain the objects from which their party takes its name.

Pointing to the success of the late Earl of Elgin's policy for the equality of the race, The Morning Post says that Canada has developed a nationality richer and more vigorous because of the admixture of the fine qualities of the French. May we not hope that South Africa will develop a nationality of her own no less rich and vigorous.

He Felt "Out of Style."

The editor of The Halleyburian paid a visit to Toronto the other day, and here is the result:

"We were rash enough to go down to the holy city in a $12 suit. We were not immediately 'run in,' but we should have been. Though suits of such calibre are permitted on the streets, they are not encouraged, and we felt that we had lost 'caste.' We hoped that our personality would have covered the imperfections of the suit, but, alas! Toronto is a town that judges a bird by the feathers that it wears, and we regretted that we had not money enough to buy something more expensive. Our good wife warned us, but we took no heed, and, hence, are perpetually disgraced, in spite of the fact that some of those whom we met said that we looked splendid, probably judging by a past knowledge of our appearance."

Heroic Remedies Required.

Dr. William Osler, apropos of heroic remedies, said:

"Uneducated persons have no faith in the subtleties of medicine — in tiny pills, in diet, in exercise. When they are ill, they want large, strong, black, bitter doses. They want heroic measures to be applied to them.

"Thus, there was an English physician who sent some leeches to a patient, a miner.

"Calling the next day, the physician enquired, before starting upstairs for the sick room, if the leeches had arrived.

"The miner's wife, with a contemptuous laugh, replied:

"'Yes, sir; but what on earth be the use o' sendin' them little things for a great chap? I just took an' clapped a ferret on 'um.'"

The Cockney's Compliment.

A good story comes from the vicinity of Galt. A newly arrived English immigrant, who was amazed at the splendid fields of ripening grain, remarked: "Oh, I say, do they leave things out like that in this country?" Lord bless you, sir; if that field was at home, and nobody watching it at night, it would be gathered up, dumped into a van and sold at daybreak on the nearest market. Fact, sir!"

Important Corrections.

Under the terror in France people learned to be excessively cautious in all they said and still more cautious in what they wrote.

An old letter is said to be in existence of the revolutionary period in which the author had at first written to a friend, "I write under the reign of a great emotion."

Then, apparently reflecting that it was dangerous to speak of "reigns" at such an epoch, he amended the sentence thus:

"I write under the republic of a great emotion."

Forethought.

"That fellow Mulkley you were engaged to at one time may have some of your old love letters, may he not?" asked the husband. "And aren't you afraid he might be cad enough to"—

"Not a bit," replied the wife decisively. "He knows I've got a trunkful of his love letters to reciprocate if he ever does."

WHERE WOLFE IS BURIED.

Description of Quaint Old Church In Which Is Family Vault of Hero of Quebec—Monument Talk.

With the growth in national pride, says The Canada, prominent Canadians have again and again during the last year or two expressed a hope that the memory of the hero of Quebec should be perpetuated in some more fitting and striking form than at present, when only a memorial window, privately subscribed for, marks the place where, after a hard fought life, he was gathered to his fathers. The matter has come into special prominence during the last few weeks owing to an offer made by a wealthy Canadian to bear a substantial portion of the cost of a permanent memorial.

Wolfe's Shrine.

A special representative of The Canada, in describing a visit paid to Wolfe's shrine, says that the Church of St. Alphege, Greenwich, lies within a few minutes' walk of the great naval hospital, which is so often credited to Nell Gwynne's generous forethought, and not far from the old 'Ship,' to which politicians in former years made regular excursions to eat famous whitebait dinners and, incidentally, to make speeches on the everlasting fiscal question. Structurally beautiful, both as regards interior and exterior, the church, which is two hundred years old, attracts many visitors, and its vaults are filled with the ashes of the illustrious dead who lived and died in the vicinity.

But to Canadian visitors the building is of special interest, inasmuch as in the family vault, with those of his father and mother, lie the ashes of Major-Gen. Wolfe, who, by his death on Abraham Heights in 1759, laid the foundations of the imperishable British power in Canada.

Perhaps it is in keeping with the great commander's desires that there is no monument over his silent tomb.

For years Canadian visitors have often remarked upon this apparent lack, and on their departure have suggested that the deficiency should be remedied; but years have passed and nothing has been done. There is, however, a report now current that a prominent resident of Toronto is taking the matter up, and it is hoped that before long the interior beauty of St. Alphege will be further enhanced by a fitting monument to the illustrious warrior.

There has, however, within the last ten years been erected a beautiful stained window in memory of the hero of Quebec. This consists of a figure of St. George, under which is a line which Wolfe is known to have recited under the heights of Abraham:—"The paths of glory lead but to the grave." Under this is a small representation of the death scene, with the words:—"I thank God and die contented."

An Old Church.

The present Church of St. Alphege was completed in 1718 to take the place of the old one, the roof of which collapsed in 1710. The body of the church was designed by Nicholas Hawksmore, and the tower by John James, both architects who had been pupils of the celebrated Sir Christopher Wren. The exterior is cased in Portland stone, and the architecture is entirely Roman.

The interior is rich with dark oak fittings, highly carved and polished. The altar stands in an arched recess, ornamented with angle pilasters. On the walls are painted the emblems of the Crucifixion and the Sacraments, as well as the oak leaf and acorn. These paintings are reputed to have been executed by Sir James Thornhill, and much of the carving is said to be the work of Grinling Gibbons.

Though Wolfe was born at Westerham, in Kent, a few miles from Greenwich, he lived most of his life in the town, where his family occupied a residence in the neighborhood, known as McCartney House, which is still standing.

An Honor to Canada.

The distinction of being elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society has recently been achieved by Mr. C. T. Currelly, B. A., of Toronto University, in recognition of the work accomplished in connection with his book on "Sinai." He has also received an appointment, in connection with the New York Art Museum, as adviser, in regard to Egyptian antiquities, says a contemporary. Some time ago he was awarded a decoration by the Khedive, being made an officer of the Imperial Order of the Mejedieh. This latter was in consequence of the great work he undertook in removing, at the request of the Egyptian Government, great tablets of stone from the face of the cliffs where the old Turquoise miners ransacked the treasures of the rocks. These tablets dated back to the time of Cheops, about 2,800 B. C., and contained not only archaic inscriptions, valuable from a historical point of view, but also representations of the Pharaohs, who built the pyramids.

Mr. Currelly is also a joint editor of "Abydos," the last publication of the Egyptian Exploration Society. The chapters written by him on the tomb of Senusert III., and of Aahmes I. (who was the founder of the eighteenth dynasty, and the conqueror of the Hyksos), and also that part of the book devoted to the Shrine of Teta Shera, "The Great Queen and Royal Mother," are particularly interesting. Mr. Currelly has thus been made the recipient of English, American and Egyption honors, and brings much learning and experience to his new position relative to the Museum of the University of Toronto.

A Canadian Abroad.

Dr. Walter Courtney, chief surgeon of the Northern Pacific Railway since 1888, was born at Moore, Lambton County, Ont., Sept. 18, 1855. He was educated at the local public schools, Strathroy Collegiate Institute and the University of Michigan. Dr. Courtney was married at St. Clair, Mich., in 1885 to Hildegarde von Jasmund. He is an ex-president of the Minnesota State Medical Association, a member of the American Medical Association, the International Association of Railway Surgeons and of other medical organizations. He is an honorary member of the North Dakota State Medical Society and president of the Upper Mississippi Medical Society. He is a resident of Brainerd, Minn.

Menagerie at Home.

Jones declined to visit the zoo with his friend, says London Health. "I don't have to go to the zoo," he said, "because my eldest daughter does the kangeroo walk, my second daughter talks like a parrot, my son laughs like a hyena, my cook is as cross as a bear and my mother-in-law says I'm an old gorilla."

Willing to Try.

Stern Father—You want to marry my daughter, do you? Young Man—I do. Stern Father—What's your salary? Young Man—Oh, I'm not particular. Just give me a trial of three months, and if I fail to give satisfaction as a son-in-law you need not pay me any salary.

Why We Analyse Orange Meat

You are not half as particular about the food you eat—as we are about the food we make for you to eat.

Would you ever analyse food you buy for the table?

We tested Orange Meat for more than 7 months.

Prof. Waddell, of Queen's University, Kingston made test after test until we perfected Orange Meat—and made it contain MORE wheat sugars than any other cereal in the world.

Orange Meat is the food that builds up healthy bodies and active brains.

15c. and 25c. packages—at all grocers. 15c. packages contain coupons, good for premiums. 25c. size contains 2½ times the quantity of Orange Meat as the smaller size. Write "Orange Meat," Kingston for premium catalogue.

Society's Way.

Poor little wretch! But it must be fed
And clothed, of course, although if 'twere dead
'Twere better, we know. And now let's see;
We'll give a concert for charity,
And hire a star, if we can, to sing.
But wait, I've thought of a better thing—
A masquerade, I've a love of a gown,
And I!—I'll pose as the belle of the town

His Way.

A shameful act, and more, a crime,
To foist a child without a dime
On the burdened world! It can't be helped?"
Then the poor man's brat, conceived and whelped
In a human hutch, we'll say, or worse,
Must ever clutch the rich man's purse,
And hang like a stone upon his neck.
Well, well, good day, and — there's my check.

Her Way.

O poor little child, so pinched with cold!
O poor little child, is there none to fold
And hold you close? And your ceaseless wail—
Is it just for a mothering, sweet, you ail?
Then share with my little one here at rest
The shelter, the food and the warmth of my breast
There's love enough, sweet, in my heart for you,
For God gives all mothers enough for two.

The warning of Mr. Byron E. Walker, general manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, against too great an optimism in regard to the West is worthy of more than passing consideration. It is supported by other far-seeing authorities A well-known and sagacious financier remarked the other day that, while there was not a suggestion of doubt in his mind as to the ultimate prosperity of the West, he could not down an undefined fear as to the immediate future. There is a danger of a mushroom development, an abnormal up-building unable to stand before any adverse conditions that may and probably will arise. But no heed will be paid to these warnings The rush is on, and to attempt to stem the rash speculation naturally attending it were as hopeless a task as that set to King Canute of old on the shore of the North Sea. However, Mr. Walker's words are worth reprinting. He is reported as saying:

"The West is no place for pessimism, but optimism should be tempered with caution. Speculation has been pushed to the limit. The East is almost too favorably impressed with the growth and prospects of the West, and a great part of speculation in Western lands has been due to the extravagance of Eastern ideas on Western possibilities. While there is no one with greater faith in the West at present the tendency is to mortgage the future at too fast a pace."

Proof in Belleville.

Mrs. Green, of East James street, has proven what Anti-Pill can and will do.

"I think Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill is the best medicine I have ever known," says Mrs. A. V. Green. "For years I have suffered with constipation, and I got so bad at last that no ordinary dose of medicine would help me. I suffered with piles a great deal.

"I am a working woman and always very busy, and I got nothing to help me till I tried Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill. I found this a very satisfactory remedy and can cheerfully recommend it to any who may be suffering as I did."

Right at home here in Belleville is this case, and Mrs. Green will cheerfully testify to anyone in earnest what she knows of Anti-Pill, the Twentieth Century Cure for Constipation.

PIMPLES, BLACKHEADS—

GET RID OF ALL YOUR FACE TROUBLES IN A FEW DAYS' TIME WITH THE WONDERFUL STUART CALCIUM WAFERS.

TRIAL PACKAGE SENT FREE.

You cannot have an attractive face or a beautiful complexion when your blood is in bad order and full of impurities. Impure blood means an impure face, always.

The most wonderful as well as the most rapid blood cleanser is Stuart's Calcium Wafers. You use them for a few days, and the difference tells in your face right away.

Most blood purifiers and skin treatments are full of poison. Stuart's Calcium Wafers are guaranteed free from any poison, mercury, drug or opiate. They are as harmless as water, but the results are astonishing.

The worst cases of skin diseases have been cured in a week by this quick acting remedy. It contains the most effective working power of any purifier ever discovered — calcium sulphide. Most blood and skin treatments are terribly slow. Stuart's Calcium Wafers have cured boils in three days. Every particle of impurity is driven out of your system completely, never to return, and it is done without deranging your system in the slightest.

No matter what your trouble is, whether pimples, blotches, blackheads, rash, tetter, eczema or scabby crusts, you can solemnly depend upon Stuart's Calcium Wafers as never-failing.

Don't be any longer humiliated by having a splotchy face. Don't have strangers stare at you, or allow your friends to be ashamed of you because of your face.

Your blood makes you what you are. The men and women who forge ahead are those with pure blood and pure faces. Did you ever stop to think of that?

Stuart's Calcium Wafers are absolutely harmless, but the results — mighty satisfying to you even at the end of a week. They will make you happy because your face will be a welcome sight not only to yourself when you look in the glass, but to everybody else who knows you and talks with you.

We want to prove to you that Stuart's Calcium Wafers are beyond doubt the best and quickest blood and skin purifier in the world—so we will send you a free sample as soon as we get your name and address. Send for it to-day, and then when you have tried the sample you will not rest contented until you have bought a 50c box at your druggist's.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 51 Stuart Ugly Athenian Coins.

It is little surprising that the Athenian coins are less beautiful than some others. They always preserved an affectation of archaism. The Attic drachmas bore the head of Athene and on the reverse an owl often standing on a lyre, the whole in a myrtle wreath. Plutarch in his "Lysander" tells an amusing tale how Glippus had been sent to Sparta with a great sum of money as a bribe and how he unripped the bottoms of the sacks and stole large sums, sewing up the sacks again, not knowing that there was a writing in each sack saying how much coin it held. On coming to Sparta he hid his plunder under the tiles of his house, showing the Ephors the unbroken seals on the mouths of the sacks. When the Ephors opened these they were in great perplexity, but Glippus' servant betrayed him, saying "that under the tiles roosted the owls." The consternation was great. Glippus fled, and the stern Spartans declared that for the future they would use iron coinage made redhot and quenched in vinegar to make it hard and unpliable. In the laws of Solon, 600 B. C., the penalty of death is recorded against forging the coinage.

Health of the Province.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—Dr. C. A. Hodgetts, secretary of the Provincial Board of Health, reports that scarlet fever and typhoid have taken a jump in the vital statistics for last month, causing 33 more deaths than in August, 1905. Diphtheria had decreased. The total deaths were 2,570, as against 2,200 in 1905, and of infectious diseases 790, against 747. This is a death rate of 14.2 in a population of 2,091,183 for the province.

KILLED ON THE TRACK.

Bank Manager A. C. Craig Hurled 50 Feet by Train.

London, Sept. 29.—A. C. Craig, manager of Molson's Bank, was struck by the express at Dalton last evening while standing between the tracks at the M. C. R. Depot. He was hurled 50 feet and killed instantly.

Mr. Sifton of Highgate attempted to rescue Craig, and narrowly escaped.

Deceased was a son of Canon Craig of Petrolia.

Western Wheat Yield.

Ottawa, Sept. 29.—The trade and commerce department has received reports which indicate the wheat yield in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan. It is placed at 85,000,000 bushels. It is said that the yield would have been considerably larger but for the hot wave in August, which was very severe.

About 6,000,000 bushels of the new crop has been inspected. Of this 25 per cent. is No. 1; 40 per cent. No. 1 northern; 15 per cent. No. 2 northern; 80 per cent. of the yield to be high grade. The fine weather is facilitating threshing, etc. Some damage from frost is reported from the Regina country.

Death of Charles Sealey.

Hamilton, Sept. 29.—Charles Sealey died last evening, about 7 o'clock, at his residence on West Hunter street. He had been ill only a few hours from heart disease. He was 79 years of age and had resided in Hamilton for thirteen years. Previous to that he had lived in Waterdown for 35 years. For several years he served in the county council and was an ex-reeve of Waterdown. Two sons, W. O. and J. C. Sealey, survive him.

Trolley Kills a Boy.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—Yesterday "Matt," the 8-year-old son of Dr. Reade, Deer Park, dropped from a wagon he was hanging on, and to avoid another wagon coming behind, stepped in front of a trolley car and was killed. His lower body and legs were badly mangled.

Died at His Post.

Montreal, Sept. 29.—Engineer Patry's body was recovered from the wreck of the steamer "Maude" yesterday morning. He had remained to open the valves of the engine, and was caught by the inrush of water.

Henry Carscallen's Will.

Hamilton, Sept. 29.—The will of the late Henry Carscallen, K.C., M.P.P. was filed yesterday. He left an estate valued at $7,000, and insurance amounting to $4,000. The late Rev. Father Geoghegan left $9,000.

The Adventures of Captain Kettle

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

who are used to it; and they arrived alongside the yacht at 3 a.m. confidently expecting to take her by surprise.

But the crew of the yacht, thanks to Capt. Kettle's vagaries, were not in the habit of sleeping over soundly; they never knew what piece of dangerous mischief their little captive might turn his willing hand to next; and, as a consequence, when the anchor watch sang out his first alarm, not many seconds elapsed before every hand aboard was on deck. The yacht was well supplied with revolvers and cutlasses, and half a minute sufficed to get these up from below, and distributed, so that when the Riffians attempted to board, the defenders were quite ready to do them battle.

Be this as it may, however, there is no doubt as to which side got the first advantage. The yacht's low freeboard made but a small obstacle to a climber from the large boats alongside, and neither the deckhands nor the stokehold crew were any of them trained fighting men. In their 'prentice hands the kicking revolvers threw high, and were only useful as knuckledusters, and till they had thrown them down and got their cutlasses into play, they did hardly any execution to speak about. The Riff men, on the other hand, had been bred and born in an atmosphere of skirmish, and made ground, steadily.

At an early point of the scuffle, Capt. Kettle came on deck with a cigar in his mouth, and hands in his pockets, and looked on upon matters with a critical interest, but did not offer to interfere one way or the other. It was quite a new sensation to him, to watch an active fight without being called upon to assist to arbitrate.

And then up came from below Donna Clotilde La Touche, dressed and weaponed, and, without a bit of hesitation, flung herself into the turmoil. She saw Kettle standing on one side, but neither besought nor commanded him. She would have died sooner than ask for his help then, and be met with a refusal.

Into the melee she went, knife and pistol, and there is no doubt that her example, and the fury of her rush, animated the yacht's crew, and made them stronger to drive the wall of their assailants back. To give Donna Clotilde her due, she was as brave as the bravest man, and moreover, she was a certain shot at moderate range. But, after her revolver was empty and the press closed around her, it was not long before an expert hand twisted the knife from her grasp, and then the end came quickly. An evil smelling man noted her glorious beauty, and marked her out as his special loot. He clapped a couple of sinewy arms around her and bore her away towards the bulwarks and his boat.

Some one had switched on the electric deck lights, and the fight was in a glow of radiance. Everything was to be clearly seen. Donna Clotilde was being dragged resisting along the decks, and Kettle looked on placidly smoking his cigar. She was heaved up on the bulwarks; in another moment she would be gone from his path forever.

Still her lips made no sound, though her great black eyes were full of wild entreaty. But the eyes were more than Kettle could stand. He stooped and picked up a weapon from amongst the litter on deck, and rushed forward and gave a blow, and the Riffian dropped limply, and Donna Clotilde stood by the yacht's bulwark, breathless and gasping.

"Now you get away below," he ordered curtly, "I'll soon clear the rabble over the side."

He watched to see her obey him, and she did it meekly. Then he gave his attention to the fight. He broke a packet of cartridges which lay on the deck planks, picked up and loaded a revolver, and commenced to make himself useful to the yacht's crew, and from that moment the fortune of the battle turned.

Capt. Owen Kettle was (and is) a beautiful fighter, and this was just a fight. Against his cool-headed ferocity the Riffians gave way like sand before waves. He did not miss a blow, he did not waste a shot; all his efforts went home with the deadliest effect. His voice, too, was a splendid ally. The yacht's crew had been doing their utmost already; they had been fighting for their lives. But with Kettle's poisonous tongue to lash them they did far more; they raged like wild beasts at the brown men who had invaded their sacred decking and drove them back with resistless fury.

"Hump yourselves, you lazy dogs!" Kettle shouted. "Keep them on the move. Drive them over the bows. Murder those you can reach. Am I to do all this job myself? Come on, you mongrels."

The red cutlasses stabbed and hacked, and the shrieks and yells and curses of the fight grew to a climax; and then the Riffians with a sudden panic gave way, and ran for the side, and tumbled into their boats. There was no quarter asked or given. The exasperated yachtsmen cut down all they could reach even whilst they were escaping; and when the sound had gone, they threw after them the killed and wounded, to be rescued or lost as they chose. Afterwards, having a moment's respite, they picked up their revolvers again, loaded them, and kept up a spattering, ill-aimed fire till the boats were out of reach. Then when they turned to looked to their own killed and hurt, they found a new crisis awaiting them.

Capt. Kettle was on the top of the deck house which served as a navigating bridge, ostentatiously closing up the breech of the revolver after reloading it. He wished for a hearing, and after what they had seen of his deadly marksmanship, they gave it to him without demur. His needs were simple. He wanted steam as soon as the engineers could give it him, and he intended to take the yacht into Gibraltar right away. Had anybody an objection to raise?

The red-haired man made himself spokesman. "We should have to go to Gib at any way," said he. "Some of us want a doctor badly, and three of us want a parson to read the funeral service. Whether you can get ashore once we do run into Gib, captain, is your own concern."

"You can leave that to me safely," said Capt. Kettle. "It will be something big that stops me from having my own way now."

The men dispersed about their duties, the decks were hosed down, and the deck lights switched off. After awhile Donna Clotilde came gliding up out of the darkness and stepped up the ladder to the top of the deckhouse. Kettle regarded her uneasily.

To his surprise she knelt down, took his hand and smothered it with burning kisses. Then she went back to the head of the ladder. "My dear," she said, "I will never see you again. I made you hate me, and yet you saved my life. I wish I thought I could ever forget you."

She shook her head and smiled through her tears.

"You are generous," she said. "Good-by. Good-by, my darling. Good-by." Then she went down the ladder, and Kettle never saw her again.

A quartermaster came up and took the wheel. The windlass engine had been clacking, and the red-haired man called out from forward, "All gone."

"Quartermaster," said Kettle.

"Yes, sir," said the quartermaster.

"Nor, nor' west and by west."

"Nor, no' west n'b' west it is, sir," said the quartermaster briskly.

THE END

(Copyright by Cutcliffe Hyne.)

Tramped to Canada From New York.

The late James Weekes was a prominent citizen of Carleton Place. Speaking of an incident of his youth, The Central Canadian says: "Mr. Weekes made up his mind one day to knock at Fortune's door, amid the roar and loom of the mysteries of New York. When he reached the swirl he was not at all carried off his feet. But he made no headway. He visited the Stock Exchange day after day, and lost and won. He talked with many people and found sympathizers. He saw much of the beauty and much of the blackness of the city. But fortune turned on him a cold and sullen glance.

"With empty pocket he turned his face towards Canada. He started from the city on foot by the New York Central to walk to Carleton Place. All the boy had in the world was the clothes he wore. Mile after mile he trod along. Footsore he became; often the hunger which reminds one of death, came upon him. He was repulsed at many houses; but there were others where sympathy and succor awaited him. At nights he slept in the woods alongside the tracks or in hayricks or corn cribs. Finally, after these days and nights of hardship he reached Morristown. With his last ten cents he overcame the ferry. At Brockville he saw the late William Stephenson, of Carleton Place, at the depot, and from him he borrowed the fare to this point."

Earl Grey's Pictures.

Dr. Orr, manager of the Industrial Exhibition, has announced that His Excellency Earl Grey had graciously offered to loan the following pictures, which will be among the attractions in the art gallery:

Portrait of Charles, 1st Earl of Grey, by Sir Thomas Lawrence; portrait of Charles, 2nd Earl Grey, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom 1830-1834, by Sir Thomas Lawrence, portrait of Mary Elizabeth, Countess Grey, wife of Charles 2nd, Earl Grey, and their two eldest daughters. The child to the left afterwards became the Countess of Durham, wife of the Governor-General of Canada; the other child Lady Elizabeth Bulteel; portrait of John George, Earl of Durham, Governor-General of Canada, by Phillips; copy by W. W. Chase of portrait of Benjamin Franklin, taken by Major Andre from Philadelphia in 1775; portrait of Curran, the great Irish orator, by Sir Thomas Lawrence; copy by Miss Hawkins, of "Hope," painted by the late G. F. Watts, R. A.; Banner of St. George, presented by Lady Wantage to His Excellency the Governor-General as a design for banners to be presented to Canadian schools on St. George's day; Banner of St. George, presented by Mrs. Watts, the widow of the late G. F. Watts, R. A., to his Excellency for a similar purpose.

A Puzzler.

It is not often that a class of school children is permitted to examine its teacher, but a Glasgow pedagogue was so pleased at the way his pupils answered his questions in an examination that he told them they could ask any question they liked. No one took advantage of the offer, and the teacher was about to dismiss the class when he noticed one little chap in deep thought. "Well, what is it?" he asked. "I was just about to ask you, sir," replied the youth, "whether, if you were in a soft mud heap up to the neck and I was to throw a brick at you, would you duck?"

It is wise to save the first dollar that one makes in business, but wiser to save the last.

Baby Nearly Dead.

Mrs John Cuddy, Killaloe Station, Ont., says: "My baby was so nearly dead that I had to place my ear close to his breast to know that he was breathing. He was in this condition when I first gave him Baby's Own Tablets and I hardly dared hope that they would save him But they helped him almost at once, and soon made him a well child. He is now two years old and weighs forty-five pounds and has never known a sick day since I first gave him the tablets." Baby's Own Tablets cure constipation, indigestion, diarrhoea, teething troubles, breaks up colds, expels worms and give little ones natural, healthy sleep. And the mother has a guarantee that this medicine contains no opiate or poisonous soothing stuff. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 25c a box by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE TABLES OF STONE.

A Curious Calculation From the Talmud and the Bible.

Did you ever figure on the probable size and immense strength of Moses, basing your calculations on the dimensions of the tables of stone, as given by the Talmudic writers? In the Talmud (folio 38, column 8) it is said that the tables of stone upon which the commandments were written were six ells long, six ells broad and three ells thick. In the Bible, Exodus xxxii, 15, we are told that "Moses went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand."

"Hand," mind you, not hands, though it must be admitted that it would have taken a strong pair of hands to perform the task of carrying them, even on the level. Now, we will put the Talmudic and the Biblical accounts together and apply the mathematical rule. The Hebrew ell or cubit was, at its least estimate, a measure of eighteen inches, which would have made each of the tables a stone block nine feet long, nine feet wide and four and one-half feet thick. If common stone weighed as much to the square foot then as it does now the tables would tip the beam at about twenty-eight tons! Was Moses one of the giants of those days or has some one made a mistake in calculations or in the statement of supposed facts?—Exchange.

SARDINES.

The Way They Are Cooked and Prepared For Market.

Sardines are caught in nets, and after being well washed the heads are cut off and the fish are sprinkled lightly with salt. After lying for a few hours they are placed on grids in rows almost perpendicular. The frames are then placed in pans containing boiling olive oil. The oil is changed as soon as it becomes too black and dirty for continuing the cooking process.

As soon as the fish are considered sufficiently cooked, they are withdrawn from the pans of oil and the grids are placed on the tables covered with zinc, the surface of the table inclining toward a groove in the center. The oil is thus carried to a vessel prepared to receive it. Round the table stand the women whose business it is to pack the fish closely and uniformly in boxes.

The boxes being full, the fish are covered with fresh oil and the lids are then soldered down. Thus hermetically sealed they are placed in iron baskets and immersed in boiling water. The smaller boxes are thus boiled for half an hour and the larger ones somewhat longer, in proportion to size of box. The fish are then ready for the market.

The Wearing of Hats.

More or less of a modern habit is the constant wearing of hats. Even as late as 1759 Horace Walpole mentions as a matter of course that he never wears a hat. "Remember," he says, writing to a friend notoriously careless about his dress, who was expected home from Holland, "everybody that comes from abroad is supposed to come from France, and whatever they wear at their first reappearance immediately grows the fashion. Now if, as is very likely, you should through inadvertence change hats with the master of a Dutch smack in a week's time we shall all be equipped like Dutch skippers. You see, I speak very disinterestedly, for, as I never wear a hat myself, it is indifferent to me what sort of a hat I don't wear."

Dangerous.

A contributor to the "Transactions of the Devonshire association" says that when he came to a certain place as vicar he asked whether there were any sick to be visited.

"Oh, no, sir!" was the answer. "Nobody is ever ill in Berrynarbor. There is an old man, to be sure, over ninety, who has taken lately to his bed, but there hain't much the matter with him that I know of."

"I thought to myself," added the vicar, "of the story of the Scotchman who said to his doctor:

"'Ye pu' a vara long face, doctor. D'ye think I'm dangerously ill?'

"'Na, na,' was the reply. 'I don't think ye're dangerously ill, but I think ye're dangerously old.'"

The Missing Key.

One telegraph operator was telling another of a quarrel he had had with another at the other end of a wire.

"I gave him fits over the wire for about two minutes."

"What did he say?"

"Did not give him a chance to say anything. I just opened the key and he could not come back at me."

"Goodness," put in a bystander, "wouldn't it be fine if we could work a scheme like that in matrimony? Just open the key and that would be the end of it."

Trees.

Authorities on forestry say that seventy-five years are required for the oak to reach maturity; for the ash, larch and elm, about the same length of time; for the spruce and fir, about eighty years. After this time their growth remains stationary for some years, and then decay begins. There are, however, some exceptions to this, for oaks are still living which are known to be 1,000 years old.

Possibilities.

"But," protested the first dear girl, "I haven't got the face to ask a favor of him."

"Well," rejoined dear girl No. 2, "you might visit a complexion specialist and have your face remodeled."

To smile at the jest which plants a thorn in another's breast is to become a principal in the mischief.—Sheridan.

Regular Eating.

Many a housekeeper does not eat at noon unless she has company. Too much cannot be said in favor of regular hours for meals. A luncheon served for only one or two should be just as dainty as the most formal dinner. A napkin or doily spread on the bare table is sufficient if one is in a hurry. If left overs are to be the lunch they should be served in an appetizing and savory manner. A glass of milk and a piece of cake, taken standing in the kitchen, is a foolish luncheon. When one has eaten a hearty breakfast a light luncheon is all that is necessary, but if a very little breakfast has been partaken of a good, substantial meal at noon should be eaten.

In Dresden 300 years ago "epicures" used to eat Venetian oysters that had been on the way three weeks.

TEMPERANCE LESSON — GOLDEN TEXT IS "WINE IS A MOCKER, STRONG DRINK IS RAGING."

The place in the history when these churches were founded would, therefore, be Acts 13 and 14; A.D. 47-50. Written at Corinth, the place in the history being Acts 20: 1-5.

The Epistle to the Galatians is One of the First Foundations for a Temperance Campaign.—For it is the Epistle of Freedom. "In writing it, Paul stood as it were alone upon a mountain top and shouted 'Liberty!' Eleven times in these short chapters, and in this connection more often than all the other Epistles put together, the thought occurs, Stand fast in the liberty wherein Christ has made us free."

"Love Thy Neighbor as Thyself" versus "Bite and Devour One Another."—Vs. 14, 15. The law of God's kingdom as to our fellow-men "is fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," v. 14. This is the principle which makes heaven, and when it prevails on earth, earth will be heaven.

15. But if ye bite and devour one another, as wild beasts treat their prey, as cannibals treat their enemies. This is true socially. It is true of our business relations. Those who in business would destroy their competitors, and seeking only their own, are careless of the effect upon others of what they do; those who engage in any business which injures men, makes them sick, or poor, or drunken; are the wild beasts and savages and cannibals of business and society, and not true men.

Men can do business for love, with the thought of other's good as well as their own. No other business is Christian. Ruskin has well said, "I had no conception of the absolute darkness which has covered the national mind in this respect, until I began to come into collision with persons engaged in the study of economical and political questions. The entire naivete and undisturbed imbecility with which I found them declare that the laws of the Devil were the only practical ones, and that the laws of God were merely a form of poetical language, passed all that I had ever before heard or read of mortal infidelity. I knew the fool had often said in heart there was no God; but to hear him say clearly out with his lips, 'There is a foolish God,' was something which my art studies had not prepared me for."

Now intemperance, and the business of making men intemperate, belongs to the "bite and devour" class. In every revival, distinctly noticeable in the great Welsh revival, if a rum-seller is converted he gives up his business of rum-selling; and the converted customers leave the saloon alone, so markedly that the publicans complain of their diminished income, as the shrine-makers of Ephesus complained of Paul and the Christian converts.

That ye be not consumed. For such conduct is destructive of those who bite and devour, as really as of those who are devoured.

16. Walk, conduct yourselves: referring to habitual conduct. In the Spirit. The Holy Spirit, under his guidance and inspiration, in his influence, as an atmosphere. Or, as the r.v., "by the Spirit," as the Spirit directs, by his principles and rules of action. But the Spirit guides and inspires only to the best things, right things, heavenly things. Not fulfil the lust of the flesh. This means "not the mere sensual desire of the physical nature, but the desire which is peculiar to human nature without the divine Spirit." The meaning is given in v. 17, for the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, those desires and lusts which are contrary to nature of the Holy Spirit, and to the things he inspires, such as the works of the flesh named below.

In man, till he is perfected in good, or completely evil, there is a perpetual conflict, for the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, for these are contrary the one to the other. This conflict is well described in the seventh chapter of Romans. Every man knows this conflict, especially if he is trying to be perfect, as every real Christian does try. The more earnest he is to be good the higher his standard, the more he realizes this conflict, and the severer the battle. Every man has something within him, like Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in Stevenson's story, or John-Jack in the boy's story by Lynde Palmer.

Temperance is on the side of the Spirit.

Intemperance is on the side of the lusts of the flesh.

Our Sunday School Work is to train the children to take the right side of this question, to utter the "Everlasting No" against intemperance and the "Everlasting Yes" on the side of God and righteousness and temperance. Let them take the pledge as Hamilcar in olden story made his son Hannibal take the oath against the Romans.

HOW TO STRENGTHEN THE WILL ON THE RIGHT SIDE.

"'Strengthen the will to resist temptation.' How do we strengthen the will? The will is the faculty of conscious and especially of deliberate choice or action, and the choices are more or less influenced by our knowledge or ignorance of the facts in the case. How would you strengthen the will of a boy against the temptation to row across the Niagara River a little way above the falls; by telling him he must not, it would be wrong, or by explaining to his reason the perils that inhere in that fatal current? How would I strengthen a boy's will against intemperance? I would try to give him intelligent reasons on which his will should act. Just as I would teach him the character of the Niagara rapids, I would teach him the nature of those other, the alcoholic rapids, which lead to a worse, a more hopeless plunge into utter darkness. While I would never exaggerate, I would search for the truth on this topic as for "hid treasures," and then teach it, abating not "one jot or tittle," leaving the consequences with him who said, "I am the Truth." He has so made the human mind that it is moved by truth that warns as well as promises. I would teach the boy before appetite is formed the dangerous and deceptive characters of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics, especially the proved fact that a little alcohol in any liquor has the power to create an imperious, uncontrollable, and destructive appetite for more; and, therefore, its use in any quantity is never safe. I would thus show him that there is a scientific connection between the first glass and the drunkard's fate; I would not preach at the boy or weary him with repeated homily, but I would lead him, through the study of the laws of his own being, to see and understand for himself that the inestimable blessing and happiness of a strong, healthy, useful life are the result of obedience to laws that are written in our living tissues, and that the penalty of disobedience inheres in the law itself. I would strip the wine-cup and the whole brood of strong drinks, the pipe, the cigar and the cigarette, of the glamor with which ignorance and tradition have decked them, and help the boy to see them and their consequences as labelled by modern science — Narcotic Poisons."—Mrs. Mary H. Hunt.

Vs. 19-23. The teacher can have the scholars make these lists in two columns. And show them how strong drink intensifies every one of these evils, and is opposed to every one of the fruits of the Spirit.

The works of the flesh fall into four classes:

1. Sensual passions.
2. Unlawful dealings in things spiritual.
3. Violations of brotherly love.
4. Intemperate excesses.

The works of the Spirit fall into three groups of three each:

1. General Christian habits of mind.
2. Special qualities of man's intercourse with his neighbor.
3. Principles which guide a Christian's conduct.—Lightfoot.

Illustration. "A story is current in the Orient of a wise old sheik, who gave to a young Arab prince, from whom he was about to part, a list of crimes and bade him choose the one which seemed least harmful. The young prince turned in horror from murder, theft and loss of virtue, and told the patriarch he would choose intemperance. 'You have chosen that,' said the wise old man, 'which will bring you all.'"

Illustration. When the Israelites were about to enter the Promised Land, Moses set before them clearly the two courses that lay before them, with a catalogue of the good things that would follow obedience, and another of the evils that would follow disobedience. Then he commanded that when the Israelites should have entered the land a great object-lesson should be set before them. They were assembled between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, near Shechem, on the sides of the two mountains. The Ten Commandments were written upon the rocks in the presence of all the people. Then in this presence the curses for disobedience were read from Ebal, and the blessings from Mt. Gerizim. "I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before thee life and death, the blessing and the curse; therefore choose life, that thou mayest live, thou and thy seed. (Deut. 30: 19: R.V.)

Six Grave Diggers. Henry Muller, a pious German, who lived two hundred years ago, used to say, "When I look upon the youth of our day I see six grave diggers. The first is called 'Drunkenness.' How many kill themselves with excessive drink! The seed must spoil when there is too much moisture. Therefore, young man, if you wish to live give up drinking. The second is called 'Lust.' How many have thereby hastened death! Is it not true that all that is exposed to fire is ultimately consumed? The third is called 'Wrath.' Sirach says, 'Jealousy and anger shorten life,' and Paul, in the book of Galatians, places next to each other wrath, strife and murder. Wrath brings on strife; strife is often the cause of murder. The fourth is called 'Disobedience to parents.' We know what a blessing the fourth commandment proclaims. He who does not keep it will feel its curse. Dry wood which cannot bend must break. The fifth one is called 'Bad Company.' How many thereby have lost life and soul eternally! Tie a corpse to a living body, and although the living body cannot bring the dead body back to life, yet the contaminating odor of the corpse will ultimately kill the living. The sixth and last is called 'Idleness.' It kills a man, though he seems alive. Is an idle body of more use than a dead body? When the tree will not bear any more fruit, it is cut down and thrown into the fire. Ye who have a desire to live, consider this: and leave these grave diggers and pall-bearers alone."

Vs. 24-26. The apostle proceeds to show how the victory may be obtained;

1. By belonging to Jesus Christ.
2. By crucifying the flesh: that is, so partaking of the Spirit of Christ as to die rather than yield to wrong. He becomes dead to sin, but alive to Christ.
3. By living in the Spirit, in his life and power.
4. By walking in the Spirit, expressing our habitual conduct in life.
6. By a spirit of unselfishness, seeking first the good of others.

Note that the name Christ occurs forty-three times in this epistle. Let the scholar count them and see if this statement of Farrar is correct.

We have here the principle in daily living by which the victory may be gained under Jesus Christ. Whatever harvest we would gain, we must sow the seeds which produce that harvest.

It is mocking God, it is trifling with his eternal laws, to sow to the flesh and expect to reap the blessings of the heavenly life. The drunkard who yields to his passions and appetite cannot inherit the kingdom of God. The young, as they look at the wine-cup, and are tempted to yield to its fascinations, should look this great truth in the face. They can as easily stop the stars in their courses as to change this law of God.

AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. For your own sake you should see that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." Write for full information about rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. THE REAL TEST.

Of Herpicide is in Giving It a Thorough Trial.

There is only one test by which to judge of the efficiency of any article and that is by its ability to do that which it is intended to do. Many hair vigors may look nice and smell nice, but the point is — do they eradicate Dandruff and stop falling hair?

No, they do not, but Herpicide does, because it goes to the root of the evil and kills the germ that attacks the papilla from whence the hair gets its life.

Letters from prominent people everywhere are daily proving that Newbro's Herpicide stands the "test of use."

It is a delightful dressing, clear, pure and free from oil or grease.

VERDICT WARRANTED.

Recent Judgment at Osgoode Hall of Importance to Employers.

A judgment of importance to employers has just been given at Osgoode Hall, on the Sawyer-Massey Co., of Hamilton, from the award of $2,000 to Daniel Allan, an employe who lost an eye while in their employ.

The action was tried at Hamilton by a jury, before Mr. Justice Mabee, and the defendants contended in the first place that there was no evidence of negligence to submit to a jury, and that the judge should have granted a non-suit. In the second place they maintained that there should be a new trial on the ground of excessive damages.

The court found that there was evidence for the jury, as it was clearly established that the work of clipping castings was attended with danger to the operatives, as well as to anyone in close proximity. There was evidence that plaintiff was hurt in this manner, and there was also evidence that the danger could be removed, or at least greatly reduced, by the erection of a screen. The jury were not asked specific questions, but the whole case was submitted to them, and while admitting that the evidence "might" have been warranted, a verdict for the defendants. There was evidence for the the issues to warrant a finding for the plaintiff, Allan.

The judgment quotes a decision of Lord Herschel to the effect that "It is quite clear that the contract between employer and employed imposes on the former the duty of taking reasonable care to provide proper appliances and to maintain them in a proper condition, and so to carry on his operations as not to subject those employed by him to unnecessary risks."

The court considered that it had been established that the Sawyer-Massey Co. did not take the necessary precautions for the safety of their employes.

As regards excessive damages the judgment explains that the rule is that a new trial shall not be granted unless the court is of the opinion that the amount is so large that no twelve men could reasonably have given it, or unless the court, without imputing perversity to the jury, comes to the conclusion, from the amount of the award and other circumstances, that the jury took into consideration matters that ought not to have been admitted, or that they applied a wrong measure of damage.

While in the present case the amount awarded is larger than is sometimes awarded for the loss of an eye the court cannot find from the amount or anything else on record in the case any reason to justify interference with the verdict. The court therefore dismisses the appeal with costs.

The judgment was delivered by Mr. Justice Teetzel and was concurred in by Chief Justice Mulock, who presided, and Mr. Justice Magee.

CANADIAN ON THE NILE.

A Bit of History That Adds Glory to Dominion of Canada.

"I have a friend, Lieut. Toogood of London, Eng.," said the reminiscent major, "who owes his life to a Canadian, whose name I do not recall."

Someone suggested that the major tell the story. And he did.

It was during the Soudan war, in 1884 or 1885, Lieut. Toogood was in charge of a boat load of soldiers, among whom was a Canadian member of the Nile Voyageurs. The Nile current was swift. The boat struck a rock, and everyone was in the water. Only the Canadian could swim. It was 300 yards to shore. The Canadian took command and carried everyone of the ten men in the boat to land, one at a time.

Some Arabs appeared and began to pepper the rescued ones with arrows and spears. Again the Canadian was in demand. He had the only revolver in the party, and he drove off the Arabs.

"Of course he was mentioned in despatches," said the major, as he touched the bell, "but I have forgotten his name."

"Would you know it if you heard it?" he was asked.

"Certainly."

The questioner passed a silver flask over to the major, and the latter read, engraved on it, "Lieut. Toogood to W. J. H. Nourse, in memory of a critical moment."

"Billy" Nourse is the Canadian, and he can show the medals, one of which was pinned on him by Queen Victoria herself. He was born in the restful town of Whitby, not so many years ago, and is now superintendent of the Bradstreet Co., Worcester, Mass. He carries the flask, merely as a memory.

He is a well-set-up chap, and carries into business the same poise that brought him to the top on the Nile. He has traveled much, and has observed closely. He is a charming conversationalist, and has made a name as an after-dinner speaker. Yet he is most modest and unassuming, and the story of Toogood is not of his telling.

At the Wrong Rock.

The other day some Toronto girls were at Burleigh Falls, Stony Lake, attracted by the news of Scow Rock, which lies a couple of stone throws above the cataract. Most of the Kawartha region frequenters have seen or heard of this peculiar granite formation which oscillates to and fro at the pressure of a hand. The fair maidens from the Queen City made a few inquiries at the Falls, and (according to The Peterboro' Examiner), passed, on up towards the prospective point eager to see the tottering stone. After making single and double efforts in vain to tip the big monster by hand, off came all footwear, and some lively sprinting was witnessed up and down the surface. Still the rock refused to budge, and that "perfectly awful" man, who has deceived them "so," came in for more than his share from the "unruly members." After gazing at their arduous antics for the period of half an hour, the "deceptive one," with a scarcely visible smile of humor lighting up his bearded face, hove in sight and explained that Scow Rock was on a different portion of the map. The girls saw their mistake, and a few strong pulls brought them to the desired spot, where their mission was easily performed. They had been trying to move a rock of over one hundred tons!

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Oven That Ends Guesswork

Before you put the roast in an Imperial Oxford oven, let the draft bring the heat to the right point. You'll know when it gets there if you'll look at the oven thermometer. After the roast goes in, you can know (not guess) it will be cooked right in a certain definite time. There's no ups-and-downs to the oven-heat in a range built as this one is, — the diffusive oven-flue takes all the guess work out of cooking, all the drudgery out of oven-use

That Rack That Ends Bother

When the roast needs basting, pull forth the Imperial Oxford draw-out oven rack,—roast and all—slide it right out where you can get at it. Needn't reach in and scorch your fingers nor sear your wrists,—baste it in comfort. That one thing alone—the draw-out rack—ought to make you like this range above all ranges. And that's only one of the twelve better things about this range. Come and look.

All The Heat You Want.
without any Smoke, Dust or Gas.

Most furnaces are put together like two joints of stove-pipe. That is, the steel and cast-iron are bolted together, and cement rubbed into the cracks.

In a month after starting the fire, the difference in expansion and contraction of iron and steel loosens the bolts—cement drops out—and gas and smoke come into the house.

It is a case of plugging up the cracks with cement —or living in a dusty, smoky house.

A man, who takes my advice and buys a "Hecla" Furnace, saves himself all that trouble and annoyance.

In the "Hecla", joints between steel and cast-iron are FUSED and are absolutely and permanently tight. That means that HECLA generates fresh, clean hot air —untainted by gas or smoke.

Let me send you the Hecla catalogue, which tells all about these ideal heaters. Give me the dimensions of your house, and I will tell you the cost of installing a "HECLA". Both services are free. Address "Clare's Furnace Builder", care of 84

Free to You and Every Sister Woman Suffering from Woman's Ailments

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from woman's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand woman's sufferings. What we women know from experience we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhœa or Whitish Discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial, and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment, for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book "WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER," with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young.

EYE STRAIN.

Generally, the first effects of eye-strain draw no attention to the eyes, for it may not affect the vision and often does not interfere with the use of the eyes, but it fatigues and taxes the nervous system and compels one to pay dearly for it in some other way. The great misfortune is that it is not usually discovered, nor even looked for, until the trouble is well established. All grades of disturbances may result from eye-strain, from the slightest smarting or weariness of the eyes after close work, to confirmed invalidism. It may show itself in the youngest child, as irritability or nervous excitability, or it may not appear till the burden of old age forces it into notice and uncovers the cause of many an unexplained fret or disability. It may be an unsuspected factor aggravating and intensifying some other weak spot or ailment, and may take different forms at different times; it may excite a weak heart, dull the mental powers or put the whole system out of balance. We remove all this by correcting the cause of the eye-strain.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"RED FEATHER."

On Wednesday next, at the Carman opera house, the attraction will be DeKoven, Klein and Cook's well known romantic comic opera, "Red Feather," which has gained immense vogue during the three years that it has been presented in this country. The music is by Reginald DeKoven, whose name is sufficient guarantee that the score is something really worth while. The book is well supplied with comedy of a very amusing variety. The piece is gorgeously costumed and lavishly mounted. Miss Cheridah Simpson, whose superb vocal powers are widely known, is at the head of a company of seventy-five people, many of whom are exceedingly prominent in the light opera field. Mr. DeKoven has written many stirring choruses and inspiring ensembles, and the management has supplied chorus men and women who can correctly sing the music and also add to the attractiveness of the stage pictures.

W. C. T. U. Matters

The annual meeting of the W.C.T.U. was held on Friday, the 28th inst., the following officers being elected for the coming year:

President—Mrs. Lewis.
Vice-Presidents — Mesdames Maybee, Pringle, Elvins and O'Flynn.
Rec.-Sec.—Mrs. Drury.
Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Seryver.
Treasurer—Mrs. Bonter.

The following resolution was passed;

"Resolved, before the close of this meeting, knowing the struggle Mrs. Maybee has made to do all the work that has been cast upon her in her church, home and in the W.C.T.U., and seeing her always bright and cheerful, with a helping hand for everybody, and that she is now compelled to give up work owing to her husband's illness and her own failing health, therefore be it resolved that this meeting desires to place on record its appreciation of the work of Mrs. Maybee in the interest of the W.C.T.U., extending over so many years and to express their deep regret that she finds it impossible to continue her labors."

Don't Be Backward

Report On Proposed System Of Sewerage.

Drs. Boucher and Hodgetts report as follows to the Chairman and members of the Provincial Board of Health. The report contains some interesting information for our citizens.

Gentlemen,—Having been instructed to visit the City of Belleville and report upon the system of sewerage which it is proposed to install there, we would report as follows;

The present area of the city is less than four square miles, while the population is 11,000, slightly more than one half of which live on that portion lying to the east of the Moira River, at its junction with the Bay of Quinte, upon whose shores the city is situated, and parallel to which most of the residential streets run, the intersecting ones paralleling the river.

The geological formation to the west of the river is chiefly lime stone similar in character to that forming the river banks and bed, while the land to the east is sand and gravel with the hard pan found at varying depth. The natural lay of the land is toward the river and the lake front.

The portion of the city at present seweraged is bounded by the river on the west, Bridge street on the south, Charles street on the east and Hotel street on the north, the outlet being at a point just below the lower bridge, the discharge being through a 12 inch pipe.

It is now proposed to lay a trunk sewer on Dundas street for the portion of the city to the east of the river, and one on Coleman street for the portion to the west, the outlet for the former to be in the deep water of the river; while that on Coleman street would be carried south and be extended into deep water off the point south of the junction of Coleman and Water streets. The scheme provides for the extension of the sewers upon both sides of the river, the most northerly point to be drained being the property of the Grand Trunk Railway.

We have been informed that the present system has the following connections, and the sewage as seen emptying into the river was typically domestic.

In addition to the present system we find that many of the stores situated on the west side of Front St. run their sewage directly into the river while some of the private houses on the west bank have private drains emptying similarly in this manner, the sewage from stores and houses finds separate entrance, permission in some instances having been asked and given by the Council.

After going over the districts to be sewered in company with the Mayor and other representatives of the Council and Board of Health, also the City Clerk and Commissioner Hulme, to whom we are indebted for much valuable information and for many attentions shown during our brief visit, we are of the opinion that the general plan to install a system of sewerage is a good one, and with the exception of considerable rock cutting in the western district will present few engineering difficulties. This portion of the plan we would approve of, but the proposal to empty the sewage into either the river current or bay is one presenting serious objections. Municipal authorities generally have been led in the past to believe that it was the right and proper thing to discharge sewage into water, more particularly running water, hence all schemes of sewage disposal for urban municipalities adjacent to river or lake have presented this as the scheme "par excellence."

With our present knowledge of the possibilities of sewage disposal by means of one or other of the accepted systems of treatment, together with our knowledge of the danger of pollution of water supplies, by reason of the constant and long continued discharge of raw sewage into both lake and river, even where the same is at some distance, and in the latter case often below the point from which the water supply is taken, it would be wrong for us to recommend to you that portion of the scheme which has for its object the pollution of the waters of the bay by discharging therein the sewage in an untreated condition.

We would, therefore, suggest that the corporation secure the services of a competent engineer to prepare plans for the construction of a trunk sewer, which would convey the sewage to a point where treatment could be properly provided for.

To permit of this being done it may be necessary to syphon the sewage from the west side of the river and carry the trunk sewer to a point east of the river.

After suitable treatment of the effluent, it may then be carried to the bay, east of the mouth of the river.

We would further recommend that the Council close all the private services emptying into the river, and that the practice be forthwith prohibited.

BOTH WOMEN NOW CLAIM THE MONEY

PECULIAR CIRCUMSTANCES IN CONNECTION WITH LIFE INSURANCE OF LATE JAMES C. HOWELL.

It will be remembered that, about six weeks ago, James C. Howell, a former resident of Rossmore, met with a fatal accident at Longford Mills, where he was employed by the Standard Chemical Company. The following report is now in circulation in connection with the matter:

Mr. Howell, it seems, was a member of the Chosen Friends, being insured in that organization for $500. When Mrs. Howell, with whom he had been living in Longford Mills, claimed the money she found that another claim had been put in for the $500, by a Picton woman, who declared that she had been married to James C. Howell some twenty-three years ago. The late Mr. Howell, it is said, left a will, bequeathing the insurance to "his wife." The Picton woman now claims, it is alleged, that she is Howell's wife, as she was legally married to him and there has been no divorce. The case seems to be an interesting one.

Fishery Experts.

Mr. W. Parker, who is connected with the Sandwich fish hatchery, was in the city yesterday. Whilst here Mr. Parker, in company with Mr. Hurley, visited the fish hatchery at Point Ann and was pleased with what he saw there.

Old Lady Broke Her Arm

Mrs. L. McCamon, an elderly lady who resides on Evans street, on Thursday met with a painful accident. Whilst engaged in doing some household work she fell, with the result that her right arm was fractured. Owing to the victim's advanced age it will be some time before she will be able to use the arm again.

Carpenters, Attention!

All carpenters are requested to meet in the Bricklayers' Hall on Tuesday evening, October 2nd, when they will be addressed by Mr. John Tweed, the General Organizer United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America. A full attendance is urgently desired. 29 2t

A Serious Charge

Bancroft Times: John Anderson, cheesemaker at Highland Grove, has been arrested on a rather serious charge. Last week there appeared in The Times the particulars of the finding of Miss Angeline Ragan, of Deer Lake, in Toronto jail in a demented condition. Mr. W. H. Ragan, the father of the girl, who issued a warrant for Anderson's arrest, alleges that the latter induced his daughter to go to Toronto and then deserted her there.

Two Nonogenarians

Mrs. Allison, who resides at Big Island in Prince Edward county, yesterday celebrated her 95th birthday. Her sister, Mrs. Julia Huff, aged 92 years, who resides in the 5th concession of Thurlow, sent congratulations over the telephone. The voices of the two aged ladies could be distinctly heard.

Old Chronic Sores

As a dressing for old chronic sores there is nothing so good as Chamberlain's Salve. While it is not advisable to heal old sores entirely, they should be kept in a good condition for which this salve is especially valuable. For sore nipples Chamberlain's Salve has no superior. Sharpe, of Belleville, was in Newburg on Friday, attending the funeral of his niece. Mr. Robt. Gillespie, cheese buyer of Belleville, was the guest of his friend, Mr. J. R. Sharpe, at Newburg, one day last week.

Repairs At Institution

(Canadian Mute.)

Extensive improvements and repairs have been made in and about the Institution buildings during the vacation. The Superintendent's office has a new metal ceiling and the walls have been repapered, and now looks particularly neat and attractive. New metal ceilings have been put in several of the class-rooms, also in the boys' and girls' sitting rooms. The latter has also a new floor. The chapel has been greatly improved in appearance. Both the ceiling and the walls have been tinned and painted and other changes made. New desks have been provided for Mr. Coleman's and Mr. Denys' rooms. These are of the most approved pattern, and can be raised or lowered to suit the need of each particular pupil. A new cement floor has been put in the basement, which will serve as a boys' play-room. A cement walk has been laid from the Institution to the road; also other walks around the buildings and the square east of the kitchen. The doors of the coal shed have been widened so that the carts can now back right into the shed and discharge their contents. Many minor repairs have also been made, as well as the usual painting and varnishing in various parts of the buildings as required, and Institution and grounds never looked neater or more attractive than at the present time.

A Hunting Party

Picton Defeated By Belleville At Golf.

INTERESTING MATCH YESTERDAY AFTERNOON — THE VISITORS ENTERTAINED.

A few weeks ago the members of the Belleville Golf Club visited Picton and played a match with the club of that town, with the result that the Pictonians were victorious. Yesterday the Picton players came here for a return game and were defeated by the local players. Considerable interest was taken in the game, and many spectators were present. The players and scores were as follows;

At the conclusion of the match the visitors were entertained to lunch at the club house, and at 6.30 left for home, after expressing themselves as delighted with the reception accorded them. In addition to the players the following Picton ladies were present;

Mrs. J. R. Brown, Mrs. H. B. Bristol, Mrs. S. B. Gearing, Mrs. A. E. Wilson, Mrs. McClellan, Miss Morrison, the Misses Lilias and Muriel Barker.

Pimples call for immediate treatment. There's nothing more offensive and dreaded than a pretty face covered with eruptions. The body must be kept perfectly healthy with Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. Tea or Tablets, 35 cents.—D. M. Waters.

Highly Recommended

Picton Times: Mr. Eugene Ilsey has been promoted and removed to a branch of the Standard Bank at Belleville. Athletic circles here will miss Gene, for he loves sports and was always to be found about the games. St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church will miss him, too, and the choir and Sunday school; in fact his going will be a loss to the town, as he was always willing to lend his aid to any good cause and his services were much sought after and highly valued. He was well liked by the public in the bank and made many friends in that capacity, all of whom join The Times in congratulations on the success he is bound to make for himself.

Youthful Wrongdoers.

It was reported to the police yesterday that, during Mrs. Dunning's absence from the city for some weeks, her residence on Great St. James street had been broken into, and some articles taken. Upon investigation it was ascertained that some little boys had succeeded in gaining an entrance to the premises, but what they had taken was nearly all recovered. Owing to the lads being of tender years the matter will in all probability be satisfactorily arranged by the parents.

The Latest City In the World.

Whether it be from laziness or the difficulty of reaching the business quarter, London is the latest city in the world to take down the shutters and start its day's work. In Paris you may find a bookshop open with all attendants ready at 7 in the morning. A New York business man will make you an appointment at 9 or even an hour earlier, but at 7 o'clock in the morning Bond street or Cornhill—an Arctic explorer is required to describe their aspects. London is not really awake until 10 o'clock. Is it the atmosphere that compels sleep?—London Chronicle.

Dangerous Feat.

For a feat of dexterity and nerve it would be difficult to surpass that of the Bosjesman of South Africa, who walks quietly up to a puff adder and deliberately sets his bare foot on its neck. In its struggles to escape and attempts to bite its assailant the poison gland secretes a large amount of the venom. This is just what the Bosjesman wants. Killing the snake, he eats the body and uses the poison for his arrows.

Put up a good front and you won't be talked about behind your back.

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

Fruit-a-tives will cure the worst case of Chronic Constipation and Biliousness.

Because Fruit-a-tives are the true liver tonic. They strengthen and invigorate the liver—make the liver give up enough bile to move the bowels regularly. The bile is nature's laxative.

Fruit-a-tives are the finest Kidney and Bladder Remedy in the world.

Fruit-a-tives reduce inflammation and congestion—relieve the over-supply of blood—enable the kidneys to rid the system of waste—and thus prevent the formation of uric acid. Fruit-a-tives take away that pain in the back—and quickly cure irritated Bladder.

Fruit-a-tives completely cure Headaches and Rheumatism.

Headaches and Rheumatism both mean poisoned blood. Either the skin, kidneys or bowels are not ridding the system of waste matter. Fruit-a-tives invigorate and strengthen these organs—start up healthy, normal action—rid the system of poisons—and purify and enrich the blood. That means, away with Headaches and Rheumatism.

Fruit-a-tives are the ideal tonic for everyone.

Fruit-a-tives build up, strengthen, invigorate. They sharpen the appetite—steady the nerves—enable one to sleep well—and keep the whole system in perfect health. They are fruit juices, concentrated and combined with tonics and internal antiseptics.

WRECKS COAST CITIES

Mississippi Delta Is Devastated —Many Lives Lost.

City of Mobile Partially Inundated—Lower River Bank Strewn With Wreckage, Cotton Crop Ruined and Water Five Feet Deep In Business Streets—Loss $4,000,000—Pensacola Is In Ruins, With Loss Now Estimated at Five Millions — Havoc Great In Other Gulf Coast Towns.

Mobile, Ala., Sept. 29.—(via Meridian, Miss.)—Loss of life, variously estimated from five to fifty persons many injured, 5,000 houses damaged the business quarter devastated and a property loss of fully $3,000,000 is the effect of the tropical hurricane of the last forty-eight hours in this city.

The storm struck Mobile Wednesday midnight and raged for many hours, the wind reaching a velocity of 90 miles an hour. Water from Mobile Bay was blown into the city by the gale, and for a time the sea stood seven feet deep in the wholesale quarter from Royal street to the Alabama River.

The loss of life is believed mainly to be among negroes.

Suffering Is Severe.

The suffering in Mobile is severe. The annihilation of transportation facilities has shut off all supplies and unless help reaches Mobile from the outside world soon, great distress will result. Provisions are almost exhausted.

There is no way at present to arrive at a correct estimate of the losses owing to the disorder. All is confusion. The city was astir early yesterday morning, however. The water had receded somewhat, and everybody, armed with buckets and brooms, worked hard for a restoration to normal conditions

Coast Towns Cut Off.

At Fort Morgan, 35 miles down the bay, the wind had a much higher velocity than at Mobile. Towns along the Mobile and bay shore road suffered severely owing to their exposed locations. No word from the coast towns along the Louisville & Nashville road has reached Mobile... There is little doubt that many lives were lost and severe damage inflicted on residences and business property.

Streams Break Banks.

The streams are all out of banks, and for twenty-five miles north of Mobile, looking to the right of the railroad, one can see nothing but a solid sheet of water running swiftly toward Mobile. Many farmhouses are situated in this inundated region, and there may have been loss of life there.

Fruit and fall vegetable crops all over Southern Alabama and Missouri are ruined. So also is the cotton, sugar cane and other crops.

Revenue Cutters and Ships Sunk.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 29.—The general manager's office of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad received a despatch at 3.35 yesterday afternoon from Flomaton, Ala., confirming the loss of life and devastation of property in the City of Mobile. The despatch says:

The editor of The Mobile Register and the Louisville & Nashville telegraph operator have made their way to Bay Minette from Mobile, making the trip by boat and on foot. They report a number of lives lost in the tropical hurricane, and much damage done to property in the City of Mobile.

Many persons were injured in the collapse of buildings. Negroes caught looting property are being beaten to death. A great many ships and one or two revenue cutters were sunk and their crews drowned.

The city is practically under control of the militia, and no one is on the street except newspaper men and those wearing badges. A large number of houses were destroyed and many people were injured in the collapse of buildings.

Byenville Square has been destroyed. Christ Church Cathedral was blown down. The water is 5 feet deep in the business section of the city, and bales of cotton trunks, household goods and other debris is floating about the city. The wind reached a velocity of 90 miles an hour.

Fort Morgan, at the entrance of Mobile Bay, and suburban towns in the vicinity of Mobile, are believed to have been swept away. The estimates of the damage are between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 in the City of Mobile alone.

There is no way of reaching the outside world except by boat and on foot. All wires are gone and washouts are numerous in every direction. Four or five blocks of the best business section of the city have been swept away.

Banks Strew With Wreckage.

New Orleans, Sept. 29.—The first news of the havoc wrought by the hurricane on the lower Mississippi River Delta was given yesterday by C. Ansel, a pilot, who came up on the tug Charles Clark.

Ansel said he saw the lower river banks strewn with household furniture of fishermen, but that most of these families had escaped by taking to their boats. He saw the wreckage of two or three boats floating down the river, but was unable to learn what became of their occupants.

At the Mississippi River quarantine station two houseboats, used for the quartering of crews of fruit steamers, were sunk. The crews were taken off in safety.

Great damage to the cotton crop in Louisiana and Mississippi was reported in despatches to the cotton exchange.

The excursion steamer Camelia, on Lake Pontchartrain, about the safety of which fears were expressed, landed yesterday the forty passengers which the hurricane prevent from coming ashore here Wednesday night.

Advices from Jackson, Miss., state that the loss to the growing cotton crop in Mississippi by the storm has been very heavy.

At Natchez, a fleet of nineteen barges of the Pittsburg Coal Co., sank in deep water two miles below the city with an estimated loss of $60,000.

The storm caused severe damage at Brook Haven, Miss., blowing down a number of buildings, including the Masonic Temple.

Ruin at Pensacola.

Pensacola, Fla., Sept. 29.—(via Flomaton, Ala.)—The city presents a wrecked appearance and the damage is estimated at $5,000,000.

The loss of life will be heavy among the mariners, but so far only one body has been recovered, a man named Geo. Morgan, fisherman. Other bodies are reported along the shore, but have not been recovered.

Storm Coming.

Buffalo, Sept. 29.—Storm warnings are displayed on Lakes Michigan and Huron, and on the Lower Lakes from Detroit to Buffalo.

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath.

BAD ODOR OF INDIGESTION SMOKING, DRINKING OR EATING CAN BE INSTANTLY STOPPED.

Sample Package Mailed Free.

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning,—that awful sour, bilious, bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozengers, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines all the impurities there massed together and which causes the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm; in fact the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy They are absolutely harmless

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal, and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. A STARTLING CALCULATION.

Million Bushels of Wheat Will Disappear Somewhere In Transit.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—A calculation, so striking as to be almost startling in effect, was made by Chairman Miller of the Dominion Government grain commission at yesterday afternoon's sitting. The commissioners having agreed with the statement of a witness, C. W. Band of James Carruthers & Co., that the loss of export grain between the time it left the elevators at Fort William and its arrival on the European market, Mr. Miller, made the estimate that were Canada's entire crop of grain, calculating 80,000,000 bushels, exported, the loss in transit would reach the almost staggering total of 1,600,000 bushels. Commissioner McNair ventured the assertion later that five-eighths or 50,000,000 bushels of the entire output was so exported, which would mean, calculating as a basis of 2 per cent. shortage that no less than one million bushels of wheat raised this year by the Canadian farmer will undergo some mysterious process of evaporation, between the time it is loaded on the cars and its being marketed abroad. Taking the present price of export wheat, ruling at around 75c, the rough conclusion is to be drawn that $750,000 on the 1906 crop will be diverted from the pockets of those among whom it should properly be divided.

The bulk of the representations that have been made to the commission during the Toronto sittings have been based on alleged shortages in carloads of grain coming into the hands of the eastern consignee after having passed through the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, or those of the Georgian Bay ports, and the commission which will conclude its present session in Toronto to-day, will have some food for mature reflection later on.

MRS. WALDMAN'S DEATH.

Guelph Lady Suffered Terrible Agony From Her Burns.

Guelhp, Sept. 29.—Further news from St. Elizabeth's Hospital at Danville, Ill., in reference to the death of Mrs. Hy. Waldman of Guelph from injuries received in the Wabash wreck at Catlin, shows that she suffered intense agony for several hours before her death. The burns covered all parts of her body.

Mingled with the moans of the dying woman were the piteous cries of her three children, one of whom, Vincent, was lying at death's door in the same ward, and the other two, John and Marguerite, in an adjoining ward.

Marguerite's condition is the most critical, and the nurses say she may die at any moment. She has inhaled flames, and her body is burned to a crisp in many parts.

Pastor Expelled.

Kingston, Sept. 29.—Rev. James B. Kenyon, former pastor of the First and University avenue Methodist churches has been expelled from the Genesee, N. Y., conference for immorality.

NOBODY KNOWS COST

Of Insurance to Membership of Woodmen of the World.

Commissioner Kent Makes Pertinent Enquiry of Secretary Fitzgerald—Beautiful Sermon In Order's Prospectus—Sale of Toronto Life to the Union Life Again Probed Into by Commission—Mr. Symons' Evidence.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—At the opening of the Royal Insurance Commission investigation yesterday, W. C. Fitzgerald of the Woodmen of the World, took the box. It seems that $300 was taken out of the insurance fund and transferred to the investigation fund, and that $900 had been paid for getting the bill passed at Ottawa, but no account had been kept. The cost of general insurance was about 15 cents per month.

Mr. Tilley asked the witness the reason for the expense account being overdrawn $900 when these transfers had been made. Mr. Fitzgerald said that a sessional tax of 1 cent per head per annum would wipe out the overdraft.

Order Has 8,507 Members.

There were 8,507 members with an average age of 39-25 years. The bulk of the members are between forty and fifty years of age.

Mr. Tilley asked witness if he did not want the rate raised, and after considerable hedging, Mr. Fitzgerald said that he did.

"Under a strict reading of your bylaws your members should be paying the same rates."

"Yes."

"A man that is asked to become a new member will be told all members pay the same, and yet a large percentage are paying lower rates?"

"Yes."

"How many came in since the rates were established?"

"About half."

"Have you ever computed the liability on each policy?"

"No."

"Has anybody else?" asked Commissioner Kent.

"No."

"Then you don't know what the liability is?"

"No."

Doesn't Know Figures.

"Do you know the actual cost of insurance to your membership?"

"No."

"Is there anybody in your order or executive committee that knows?"

"No."

"This is the prospectus that has been provided by your executive council?"

"Yes."

"Then your members are led to believe this is the truth?"

"Yes."

"If there is nobody in your order that knows the cost of insurance, how can you state, as you do in your prospectus that insurance is furnished at cost?"

"There is no doubt the rates are fixed at actual cost."

"Do you think your members have been deceived by this prospectus?"

"No, not if the statements were honestly made."

"But they are not correct. There is a beautiful sermon in this prospectus if it were reasonably correct."

Witness had sent word to the head commander, C. C. Hodgins, to be present, but he had not arrived. Counsel told the Commission that until the auditing of the books was completed no financial standing of the company could be given.

Sale of Toronto Life.

Harry Symons, K. C., was called by Mr. Tilley to explain the sale of the Toronto Life to the Union Life. The transaction was brought about by the National Agency purchasing a controlling interest and making an agreement with the Union to revise the Toronto Life policies. The negotiations were carried on by Evans and the witness and H. M. Smith of the National Trust. The price paid was a little over $54,000.

On enquiry, Mr. Tilley brought out the point that the Toronto Life could, despite lapses aggregating $800,000, have sold its $2,500,000 worth of business for $50,000, being one hundred per cent. of the premium income. It was also brought out that not a cent went into the coffers of the Toronto Life to recoup the minority shareholders of that company and that the Union Life did not pay a cent for the new business it secured through the National Agency.

Witness explained that the transfer could have been put through in no other way and that ultimately the shareholders of the Toronto Life would get something.

Six Bye-Elections.

Ottawa, Sept. 29.—Chief Justice Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick returned to the city yesterday, and, as Deputy Governor-General in the absence of Earl Grey, will, it is believed, immediately sign the writs for bye-elections in St. Mary's division, Montreal, Quebec County, St. Johns, Iberville, and North Bruce. The voting will take place towards the end of October.

Will Carry Building Stuff Free.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—Rebuilding Haileybury is to be assisted by the Government to the extent of free transportation on the Government railway for all building material shown to be intended for this purpose. Premier Whitney stated yesterday that orders had been issued to the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway Commission to this effect.

Brakeman Andrews Dying.

Guelph, Sept. 29.—Further news from drews, who was so seriously injured in the head-on collision on the Grand Trunk, near Gourock on Saturday last, and has been lying in Guelph General Hospital, took a turn for the worse yesterday, and is slowly sinking.

Plans For Normal Schools.

Toronto, Sept. 29.—Plans have been completed for three new normal schools, at Peterboro, Stratford and North Bay. They will measure 18x110 feet, and be built of red brick.
